This ideal can never be attained where there is not a fairly equal reciprocity in devotion, labor and self-denial between the different members of the family. Here is the rock on which many a family is wrecked after it has had a propitious launching. It is possible for devotion on the part of one to breed selfishness on the part of another. Sometimes it is the wife whose every wish and need is anticipated by the devoted husband, who learns not only to take all this attention and love for granted without realizing any particular need for reciprocity of duty and affection on her part, and who in consequence, develops a selfishness and helplessness that will inevitably, in future years, mar the best home life. Sometimes it is the husband, taking for granted the affectionate attentions and labors of his wife, accepting at her hands services and sacrifices entirely out of proportion to her share of matrimonial duties, who becomes in the end exacting, imperious and tyrannical. Sometimes—nay oftentimes of all—it is the children who absorb the time, attention and deference of their parents to a degree that develops them into little tyrants; reverses the law of parental rule and makes everything and every person about the home subservient to their undisciplined tempers and immature desires.

Nor can that family ever attain to an ideal comfort and happiness when the wishes, comfort and convenience of any one member of the family are allowed unreasonably to dominate the rest. In many a family one person may have the power to make all the rest so uncomfortable by his irritability and crossness if his or her wishes are not obeyed, that merely to escape this discomfort, the rest will hasten to accede to anything demanded.

To eliminate all these "little foxes which spoil the vines" is especially the task and care of the mother, in which, however, she should be assisted, both by the precept and example of the father. It is a work that requires infinite patience. It is not accomplished in a month or a year or in ten years. It is not completed till every child has come to the full measure and stature of manhood and womanhood after the model of Christ and his teachings.—Helen E. Starratt in the Interior.

TEMPER AT HOME.

I have peeped into quiet "parlors," where the carpet is clean and not old, and the furniture polished and bright; into "rooms" where the chairs are neat and the floor carpetless; into "kitchens" where the family live and the meals are cooked and eaten, and the boys and girls are as blithe as the sparrows in the thatch overhead, and I see that it is not so much wealth and learning, nor clothing, nor servants, nor toil, nor idleness, nor town, nor country, nor station, as tone and temper that render homes happy or wretched. And I see, too, that in town or country, good sense and God's grace make life what no teachers or accomplishments, or means or society can make it—the opening stave of an everlasting psalm; the fair beginning of an endless existence; the goodly, modest, well-proportioned vestibule to a temple of God's building that shall never decay, wax old, or vanish away.—Dr. John Hall.

WHAT CAME OF A BARN-MEETING.

In August, 1756, an English lad in his sixteenth year, a child of many prayers, who had as yet refused to heed the invitations of the Gospel, went with his mother to visit Ireland. One Lord's day he attended a meeting in an obscure place, where a handful of God's people met together in a barn, to listen to the word of life from a preacher named Morris, who was so illiterate that he could hardly spell his name. Nevertheless, he knew the Lord, and the way of salvation, and speaking on being made nigh by the blood of Christ (Eph. 2: 13), he urged and entreated his hearers to heed the gracious invitations of the Gospel.

The heart of the English lad refused to yield, and seemed to grow harder and harder; but when the sermon was finished the minister gave out that hymn of Joseph Hart's,

"Come ye sinners, poor and wretched, Weak and wounded, sick and sore," and the congregation, stirred and quickened by the message they had heard, sung the hymn with the spirit and the understanding. The song was mightier than the sermon, or rather it completed what the sermon had begun. It was the invitation of God echoed from many loving hearts. It was the voice of the Saviour speaking through his saved people, calling the lost wanderer home. It bowed the stubborn will, and broke the stony heart, and that day the English lad, the son of an army officer, himself enlisted to be a soldier of the Lord Jesus Christ. He grew in grace and in the knowledge of God, and in after years God counted him faithful, putting him in the ministry. He preached and wrote much, though his sermons and writings are now comparatively unknown; but among those hymns which go wherever the English language is spoken, and rise everywhere upon the wings of true devotion from thousands of Christian hearts,

"Rock of ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee," sounds out as the echo of the message of the unlettered Irish preacher in the Ballynasleny barn, and keeps green the memory of Augustus Montague Toplady, the young English lad who there gave his heart to God, and was brought nigh by the blood of Christ.—The Christian.

VITALITY OF TOADS.

Not the least wonderful part of the history of the toad, is the circumstance of its being frequently found alive in the heart of solid rocks, and internal cavities of trees. In 1776, Herissant undertook some experiments to ascertain the truth of what has been related on this point. He shut up three toads in sealed boxes in plaster, and they were deposited in the Academy of Sciences. At the end of eighteen months the boxes were opened, and one of these toads was dead, but the other two were still living. It was contended that the air must come to these animals, through some imperceptible hole, which escaped the notice of the observer. Professor Buckland has made some experiments on this subject, with the following results: Two blocks of stone were taken, one of porous colite limestone, and one of a compact silicious sandstone; twelve cells, 5 inches wide and 6 inches deep, were cut in the sandstone, and twelve others, 5 inches wide and 12 inches deep, in the limestone. In November 1825 one live toad was placed in each of the twenty-four cells, its weight being previously ascertained with care. A glass plate was placed over each cell as a cover, with a circular slate above to protect it, and the two blocks of stone, with the immured toads, were buried in Dr. Buckland's garden under 3 feet of earth. They were uncovered after the elapse of a year, in December 1826. All the toads in the small cells of compact sandstone were dead, and their bodies so much decayed as to prove that they had been dead for some months. The greater number of the toads in the larger cells of porous limestone were alive; but they were all a good deal emaciated except two, which had increased in weight. Dr. Buckland thinks they both had been nourished by insects which had got into the one cell through a crack found in the glass cover, and into the other probably by some small aperture in the tubing which had escaped observation. Dr. Buckland came to the conclusion that probably all rocks or other substances which enclosed toads must contain some apertures by which air and food could be obtained by the prisoner. Now, on the other hand, a gentleman named Mr. Jessie informed Mr. Gilbert White that he knew a gentleman who put a toad into a small flower-pot, and secured it so that no insect could penetrate it, and then buried it so deep in his garden that it was secured against the influence of frost. At the end of twenty years he took it up, and found the toad increased in bulk and healthy.—Science-Gossip.

DON'T STEP THERE.

A man started out for church one icy Sabbath morning, and presently came to a place where a little boy was standing, who, with choking voice, said: "Please don't step there."

"Why not?"

"Because I stepped there, and fell down," sobbed the little fellow, who had thus taken it upon himself to warn the unwary passer-by of the danger into which he had fallen.

There are many men in the world who have good reasons for giving such warnings as this. The man who has trod the dark and slippery paths of intemperance, as he sees the young learning to take the first glass of spirits or wine or beer, has good reason to say to them, "Don't step there, for I stepped there and fell down." The man who has indulged in gambling till he is despised by others and abhorred by himself, has good reason to say to the young when they are entering on the same course, "Don't step there, for I stepped there and fell down."

How many there are to-day in prisons and convict settlements, with reputations ruined and lives blasted, who could say to the young man tempted to enter the paths of dishonesty and wrong-doing, "Don't step there, for I stepped there and fell down."

It is well for us to be warned by the sad experience of others, and it is sometimes a duty for those who have fallen by these temptations to lift a warning voice. There are slippery places all around us, and thousands are passing heedlessly along. Let us entreat them to beware, and, as we remember the bitter experiences of our own sinful lives, let us say to those who are just yielding to such temptations, "Don't step there, for I stepped there and fell down."

TEMPERANCE.

TOBACCO AND CATARRH.

The local effect of tobacco on the mucous membrane of the nose, throat and ears, is as predisposing to catarrhal disease, as is inefficient and insufficient clothing in the case of females.

From 1866 to 1879 inclusive, I treated 2,790 patients for catarrhal disease of the nose, throat and ears. At the time of life that patients are mostly under the influence of tobacco and are experiencing the injuries from insufficient clothing, they are the greatest sufferers from catarrhal inflammation and its consequences.

If we take a review of the relative proportion of patients who used tobacco, as compared with those who did not use it, we will see that its bad effects increased with the length of time it had been used. From the 10th to the 15th year, only a little over one-quarter of the whole number treated were consumers of tobacco; from the 15th to the 20th year this proportion increased to nearly one-half; from the 20th to the 30th year, the proportion grew to two-thirds, while from the 30th to the 40th year, more than four-fifths of the whole number required medical treatment on the account of the injurious effects of this narcotic. Not only were this class made patients for the time being, but the mucous membrane of the superior portion of their respiratory tracts is so seriously affected that it will require from three to ten years for the mucous membrane of the younger patients to again resume so much of its normal condition that they will not be conscious that they have nasal passages or a throat. These figures plainly show that tobacco prepares the mucous membrane, so that it can be affected by even slight exposures to colds. It also shows that what is sufficient and efficient clothing does to females in exposing them to the effects of sudden and great changes of temperature, tobacco does for its victims in preparing their mucous membrane to take cold, both the tobacco and the deficient clothing tending to induce catarrhal inflammation. For this reason it is as useless to treat those who continue to use tobacco as it is to treat a female who refuses to protect herself with a sufficient amount of the proper kind of clothing.—Dr. Rumbold's Hygiene of Catarrh.

FOR SMOKERS.

If you are not a Christian I don't want you to read the following lines; but if you profess to love Jesus, and desire to serve him, will you give this appeal your prayerful consideration?

What has your pipe or cigar done for you? "It has been a good companion," you say, "it helps me in many ways; when I am tired it refreshes me, when I want to think out some difficult problem it calms my brain and enables me to get through my work. I don't know what I would do without my tobacco." Just so, my dear friend, you have become such a slave to your pipe that without it you are miserable. Try to give up smoking and see what a terrible struggle it will be. Should you, a Christian, be under bondage to such a habit?

Have you ever calmly considered your position as a smoker? You say it is a very bad thing for a boy to smoke, it ruins his health, it excites his worst passions, and leads him into bad company. "If my boy smoked I would thrash him." What about your example? Boys want to be men, and they think it is manly to have a pipe in their mouth. You want to help these boys; "Christ pleased not himself" so won't you give it up for their sakes?

Think about the comfort of others? Every one does not smoke. To many the smell of tobacco is most unpleasant. I cannot walk along the street but I must inhale the smoke that comes out of the mouth of the man who is walking in front of me. I cannot go upon a car but I am subjected to the same inconvenience. Often, in the train, a smoker will come into a compartment for non-smokers, light his pipe, and make every one uncomfortable. But you will say, you have the law in your own hands. I know I have; but I also know what it sometimes costs, even to suggest such a thing. The majority of smokers are selfish and think only of their own comfort and happiness. Should a Christian act thus?

Another consideration is the expense of the habit. You will be ready to answer, what is that to you? But you are a Christian. Did you ever take a note of how much your pipe costs you each year? Add it up. Don't be afraid to face the question. One shilling a week? Two pounds ten shillings a year! That would buy you a suit of clothes. You are a young man living at home, your father may have to struggle to keep things "straight," would that fifty not be a great help? Your sister may find it difficult to get a new dress, but you, a Christian brother, spend as much as would "rig" her out, and it has all gone off in smoke.

Do you know how much is spent in the United Kingdom every year on tobacco and snuff? Over $72,500,000. For the conversion of the heathen the Christian world gives $5,250,000; but smokers waste fourteen times that amount on their own selfish gratification. I want to ask you, as a Christian young man—a member of the church, I presume—do you contribute as much for the support of your congregation as you spend on tobacco? Ponder this question well, and ask God's grace and guidance.

Are you a member of the Association? I suppose a fourth of our membership are smokers. If they only spend 6d. a week each, their tobacco money would more than support the whole work we do for the 105,000 young men of Glasgow. The money element has much to do with you as a Christian young man, and you are responsible for the way you spend your money, when there is such a loud call for help both at home and abroad.

In closing I want you to read what Dr. Pentecost, of America, did with his cigar:

"When I began my ministry, I felt that God would have me give up the habit—that had been fixed on me from my boyhood—of smoking. It was quite a struggle, but I yielded to what I felt was God's will. I separated myself from it. I left it in the camp behind me; but there it was in plain sight. For five years I saw it, I loved it, it was a brother to me. It lured me back to itself by its fragrance and by its social nature, until at last, by subtle argument and gentle persuasion, after five years of separation, I found myself back again in the camp of the smokers, dancing round my 'calf,' again rejoicing in the 'burnt offering,' and regaling myself in its 'incense.' After years, the Lord once more called to me to separate myself from my cigar. I thought of my former experience, I hesitated, I parleyed, I dallied with my idol, until I could withstand the Lord no more. So once more I separated myself from it, but with the remembrance of my old experience and the consciousness of my carnal love for it (never more strong than at that moment), I turned to the Lord, and cried out to him, 'Lord, at thy bidding, I separate myself from this thing; but I know this separation will not be enduring unless I be separated from it as by death, my death to it—the death of my love for it. Let it thenceforth be a dead thing to me.' And so, having prayed in substance this prayer, the Lord brought suddenly to my mind this passage of Scripture: 'Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.' Rom. 6: 2. I knew in an instant that it was the sword of the Spirit by which I was to put to death that enemy, and so, seizing it, I girded it on and in the name of the Lord I consecrated myself upon my cigar and slew it. It is a dead thing now; it has no power to lure me; I see it often, but it is slain to me."—Y. M. C. A. Watchman.

'paid their dues.' There was not one among all these men who did not say substantially before I left him, that the secret lodge system is a great evil and serious hindrance to the evangelization and elevation of the colored race. There is one and only one opinion among intelligent people in this part of the South, and yet very little has been said or done to hinder the lodges in their work, even by those who see and acknowledge the evil. Some tell me they are using their influence quietly to keep young men from joining, and the Grand Master said he had improved his people for giving so much more time, thought and money to the orders than to the church; but in no instance have I learned of a candid Christian public discussion of the question in any pulpit in this region by a resident minister. My effort has been to convince these pastors who see and deplore the evil, that they ought to abstain from all fellowship or connection with the lodge; that they ought to show the people how Satan's lodge is robbing Christ's church of the money, the influence and the honor due to the Bride of Christ; how much more could be done to benefit the ignorant and help the poor with the same expenditure of time and money in Christ's way, than in the devil's way; and how much better it would be to honor Christ with their substance than to spend it in these synagogues of Satan. I find a hearty assent in every instance, and some have already promised to make an effort to turn the attention and contributions of their people away from the orders to the church. If they are faithful it will be one step, however short, in the right direction, and we may hope that once started upon this line, they will come soon to practice self-denial and Christian liberality "for Christ's sake."

THE WEEKLY REPORT FROM OHIO.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—This finds me at New Concord and at the home of Prof. Gray. Since coming I have been gratified to learn that our friends here have lost none of their former zeal, but believe thoroughly in the perseverance of the saints. Rev. Spencer was sent from here as a delegate to our State meeting. On his return a meeting of the citizens was called to hear his report, and was addressed by several of the clergy. Rev. Leiper, who has just moved to Philadelphia to take the business management of the Christian Statesman, made a short but rousing address at this meeting.

After completing my work in Rev. Wylie's neighborhood, as reported in my last letter, Mr. J. Stitt brought me some thirteen miles in his sleigh to Zanesville. Here I met Mr. G. McFarland, who, on learning my mission, kindly invited me to accompany him home. His father, for many years a devoted minister in the Covenant church, though advanced in years, still lingers on the shores of time. He has not been able to preach for some time, but was interested in learning the progress of our work. In his younger days he delivered several telling lectures against the lodge. More than once, as he has declared the truth in opposition to slavery and the powers of darkness, he has heard the hiss of the snake, and received the arguments of his opponents in the shape of eggs.

On Saturday morning I found Dr. Cannon at his home, near White Cottage. The Doctor is one of those good-natured men that always makes you feel at home. He was a room-mate while in college of Dr. A. M. Milligan, who, as is well known to the Cynosure readers, has laid aside the weapons of warfare so ably wielded by him against the sins of the times, and received the crown of the victor. The Doctor is much loved by the flock to which he declares the words of life.

As the Methodists were trying to have a revival

it was thought best not to attempt lectures at the present, especially as their pastor was a Mason. A colored preacher, it is said, once told a fellow-preacher that he might preach about every thing excepting stealing, but he had better not say anything about that, as "it would throw a coldness over de meetin'." I thought at present under the circumstances I had better not preach against Masonry in White Cottage. I promised our friends however that I would try and return at some time in the near future and open the lodge, so that the sun could shine on it.

Deacon McFarland took me from White Cottage to Mr. John Ardrey's, near Mt. Perry. Here I was kindly entertained and taken to church Sabbath morning. I found it was communion Sabbath with the United Presbyterian friends. Rev. Martin of Reynoldsburg was assisting the pastor, Rev. Patton. Rev. M. expected to have continued the services on Monday and preached at 10 o'clock, but kindly invited me to speak at that time in his stead. I accepted the invitation somewhat reluctantly, knowing the people were very much interested in Bro. M.'s sermons. Appointment was also made for Tuesday evening. At both of these meetings there was a good attendance. After the second lecture a good collection was taken for the work. That the devil was stirred here was evident by the way he squirmed. A leading Odd-fellow who scoffs at religion threw out some insinuations about my work which are not worth repeating.

Rev. Patton is a young man of great promise. He is a thorough-going reformer, and is heartily supported by his congregation. I added some twenty names to the list of Cynosure readers in this section. I am indebted to many for kind entertainment and words of encouragement in my work. I expect to call on friends here this morning, take the noon train for Norwich, visit Rixs Mills and Free-land, returning to speak in the college or one of the churches on Wednesday evening next.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Evangelist William F. Davis was last Sabbath at Medford, Wisconsin, holding meetings in several lumber camps in the vicinity.

—Rev. J. M. Herve, the busy pastor of the United Presbyterian church in Los Angeles, Cal., corrects a note to the effect that the Chinese of that city had contributed $1,000 to help put up his building. Their gift was $60. Rev. J. C. Nevin is laboring as a missionary among the Chinese in that city.

—The Rev. I. C. Nuetzel, pastor of Trinity Lutheran church, in Oshkosh, Wisconsin, has announced that next Sunday "he will preach a sermon devoted entirely to the Knights of Labor, and if, after that, members of his church persist in belonging to the order, he will expel them from the church."

—Arrangements have been made with Dr. L. W. Munhall, formerly of Indianapolis, to conduct a series of meetings in the Brooklyn Tabernacle for at least two months, or as much longer as the interest may warrant. Dr. Munhall's work in Denver is reported on another page; and he was but lately at Knoxville, Tenn.

—The Congregational Clerical Union and the Baptist ministers of New York, have adopted resolutions protesting against the opening on Sundays of the Metropolitan Museums of Art and Natural History, on the ground that Sundays would be thereby desecrated and great injury done to the workmen.

—Rev. David Gregg, associated with Rev. J. C. K. Milligan as editor of Our Banner, a pastor for years of the Third Reformed Presbyterian church, New York, has been elected to the pastorate of the Park Street Congregational church of Boston, one of the oldest in that city. Dr. Withrow, the former pastor, has recently succeeded Dr. A. E. Kittridge at Chicago. We understand the salary is $8,000. Mr. Gregg was called to Pittsburgh after the death of Dr. A. M. Milligan, but soon returned to his New York church.

—Ira D. Sankey, the evangelist, has just returned from a two months' visit to England, where he went for purposes of rest and private business. While there he received many pressing requests to hold public services in many places; but under the circumstances he felt compelled to decline these invitations, except in two or three special cases. His popularity with the people there has not diminished, and their anxiety to hear him was as great as ever.

—At the annual harvest thanksgiving at Brockville, Ontario, the rector's wife put into the alms-basin $1,000 in gold, besides $6.50 in bills and silver, collected from the congregation by her in four weeks.

The total offerings for the day amounted to $1,047.60. This sum was given on the distinct agreement that there shall be no money-making entertainments given during the winter.

—A great evangelistic movement in Philadelphia begins with the close of the Week of Prayer, on the second Monday in January. Every preparation has been made for interesting the people in this general religious revival. A house-to-house visitation is begun and all are personally invited to attend the services. The denominations that have thus far united in this movement are the Baptist, Christian Disciples, Congregational, Lutheran, Mennonite, Methodist Episcopal, Moravian, Presbyterian, Protestant Episcopal, Reformed Church in America, German Reformed, Reformed Episcopal, Reformed Presbyterian, and United Presbyterian.

—From a communication received in London from Mentone, where he is staying, it appears that Mr. Spurgeon has been attacked by rheumatic gout. He is unable to write his usual weekly letter to his sermon readers, but sends a brief note asking an earnest interest in their prayers. His right hand and arm, which were much affected, are better, but his left foot is so swollen and painful that he is almost confined to his bed.

—The sale of Christian books produced by the Fukuhi Sha press in Japan, during the past year, notwithstanding the severe business depression, has steadily increased. The number of pages issued has been 4,000,000 against 3,000,000 the year previous, and the sales have risen from $500 to $589.

—A Buddhist temple near Osaka, Japan, has been opened a number of times to Christian preaching, the Buddhist priest himself gathering the congregation. There is said to be a growing skepticism among the priests. The son of a Shinto priest, in the same society, is a candidate for baptism.

—It is stated that thirty-three missionary societies now have workers in Africa. The dark continent is encompassed on every side, and like the divisions of an investing army these missionaries are moving towards the center and closing in upon the last strongholds of heathenism and the slave trade. Hundreds of natives in the seminaries are preparing to labor as preachers or teachers, and thousands of children are receiving Christian instruction. It is said that the Scriptures have been translated, in whole or in part, into 66 of the dialects of Africa, where the whole Bible has been rendered into eleven languages, spoken by multitudes of natives.

LITERATURE.

"TALKS ABOUT SINGING, or How to Practice, by Annie M. R. Barnett. Price $1.25. Chicago Music Co., Chicago.

"These 'Talks' are written by a singer and teacher of thorough cultivation and wide experience and an advocate of the old Italian method of cultivating the voice, in accordance with the rules of nature and common sense. They explain the peculiar characteristics of every voice—soprano, mezzo-soprano, contralto, tenor, baritone and bass—treating of their weak and strong points, and telling what to avoid as well as what to do in their cultivation. Among the subjects spoken of, are purity of tone, enunciation of words, selection of suitable songs, the trite and other ornaments of style, how to gain rapid execution, the care to be taken in practicing, diet, dress, breathing, physical exercise, habits of life, choice of a teacher, proper age to begin to study, etc., all written in so plain and familiar a style as to be understood by, and interesting to not only singers, but to people who do not know a note of music.

THE HISTORY OF FRANCE, from the Earliest Times to 1848. By M. Guizot and Madame Guizot De Witt. Translated by Robert Black. In eight volumes. Price $6.00. John B. Alden, New York.

More than a year ago we had the great satisfaction of announcing that this great historical work was to be given in attractive form and at a marvelously cheap rate to American readers. This new edition is very handsomely and durably bound in half morocco, and slightly smaller volumes. Of the history itself we find it one of the most charmingly written. Some of the chapters are like a romance, but though employing all the beauties of an attractive style, at times rising to eloquence and always so simple in its narrative that it reads like a wonderful story. Guizot is always esteemed one of the most reliable of historians. It is a great public benefit to put such a history within reach of millions of boys and girls in America. Two volumes of this edition are out and every month another is promised until the set is complete.

The Old Testament Student for January has a suggestive article by the editor on "Bible-study in the Pastorate." It presents "figures and facts" obtained by actual correspondence with twelve hundred ministers of various denominations. These "figures and facts" show that there is a decided neglect of systematic Bible study on the part of the Christian ministry, and where not neglected, such study is apt to be pursued in a biased and one-sided manner. For example, there is an average of only fifty-four ministers out of a thousand who take real interest in Old Testament investigation; and not one of those written to by Dr. Harper, though seminary graduates, had read all of the Hebrew Bible. But instead of being disheartened by his "figures and facts," Dr. Harper is cheered by the growing interest which he sees taken in the Old Testament. One minister in five now reads Hebrew with some degree of regularity; "four years ago this would have been one in twenty-five."

The Phrenological Journal and Science of Health for January begins its 84th volume. Seven recently elected governors are presented by portrait and analytical biography. "Familiar Talks with our Young Readers," which formed an attractive feature of the Journal for 1886 is evidently to be continued through 1887. These talks are on Mental Science and Human Nature with apt illustrations. "Colorado Canyons" with illustrations is excellent. One of the most attractive articles is a translation of a very poetical description of the Swedish Alps by the King of Sweden.

Babyhood for January contains a number of popular medical articles which all parents ought to read. Dr. Delavan points out "The Causes and Prevention of Chronic Troubles of the Throat in Children." Dr. Bissell illustrates graphically "Pigeon Breast" and kindred deformities; Dr. Yale, in his talk on "Fever," tells mothers just what and what not to do in order to ascertain the intensity of fever; and Dr. Walker continues the valuable series of "Domestic Treatment of Slight Affections of Children." "Muttersgärten" and the Kindergarten series offer practical suggestions to mothers anxious to study Kindergarten methods; and there are many useful hints in the departments of "Baby's Wardrobe," etc.

The Missionary Review begins the year 1887 as a monthly, yet remains at the old price, $1.50, and is not reduced in size. Leading articles are "Subsistence of obstacles to Missions," "Shall I Go?" an appeal to women; "Wasteful Channels of Christian Work," "Kaiserwerth Deaconesses" and abundance of missionary news. In reply to a missionary letter from India the editor suggests a reason for the decline in missionary spirit among our young men in the fact of the secularization of missionary societies at home by large salaries to secretaries, etc. The Review has a most important mission of its own which it nobly fulfills. Would that its wise words were read and heeded in all our churches.

Alden's Library Magazine in its new form as weekly continues to give a good representation from foreign reviews. Late numbers have contained articles on Longfellow, Whittier, William Barnes, the Dorset Poet, Henry D. Thoreau, "The Situation in the East," "Socialism and Landed Property," "Prisoners as Witnesses" and "Christianity as the Absolute Religion."

LODGE NOTES.

The Methodist church of Geneva, Ill., was lately given up to the Freemasons and Grand Army of the Republic for a public installation of officers. The lodges met together in the performance.

At a Sabbath evening Logan memorial service in the Congregational church of St. Charles, Ill., the Grand Army ritual was introduced and lodge services performed.

The Iowa Grand Lodge of the Catholic Knights of America, a secret insurance order, is reported to be growing rapidly.

The International Union of Bricklayers at Washington decided that they would continue to work nine hours a day as in the past, and that they would not combine with the Knights of Labor as requested.

The State Grade of Illinois voted to meet in the State House at Springfield next year. They voted down a request to the Legislature to submit prohibition to a popular vote. They advocated a uniform system of school books, and the teaching of agriculture in the public schools; opposed the Cullom inter-state commerce bill; asked Congress not to change the oleomargarine bill, and to make the Commissioner of Agriculture a Cabinet officer.

Edward A. Bross died in Elgin, Ill., last week. He was formerly conductor on the Chicago and Northwestern Road. He was a prominent Mason, member of Sycamore Commandery, also of Oriental Consistory and Medina Temple, and Nobles of the Mystic Shrine of Chicago, but in spite of his lodges he was said to be a scoffer and almost an atheist. The lodges brought him to Chicago to bury him.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September 1886. It gave the world.

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-Masonic document. The dedication of a noble monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent address of the Convention make this the most valuable pamphlet.

SPEL WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Fine picture of the Monument.
3. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his friends—almost the last public act of his life.
4. Address by J. P. Stoddard, J. D. B.
5. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
6. Address on the "Freemasonry and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman and very interesting personal and historical remarks.

OLIVER CROMWELL, His Life, Times, Battle-fields and Contemporaries. By E. Paxton Hood. 12mo, paper.

"Mr. Hood's biography is a positive boon to the mass of readers, because it presents a more correct view of the great soldier than any of the shorter ones published, whether we compare it with Southey's, Gilk's, or even Foster's."—N. Y. Sun.
JOHN PLOUGHMAN'S TALK; or, Plain Advice to Plain People. By Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon. 4to, paper.

"This book is written in a semi-humorous vein, but every word is a grain of gold. It has had an immense sale in England, amounting to more than 300,000 copies. It is quoted everywhere."—Scribner's Monthly.

MAXIMILIN OF CHRIST. By Thomas Hughes, 4to, 15 pp., paper.

"A manly and thoroughly wholesome book. Its value lies in its simplicity, its earnestness, and in its high ideal of life."—Scribner's Monthly.

SELF-CULTURE. By John Stuart Blackie, Professor of Greek in the University of Edinburgh. 4to, 13 pp., paper.

CONTENTS.—Culture of the Intellect, Physical Culture, Moral Culture.
"This is one of the most direct, practical and sensible of treatises on the subject. It is written in a plain, straightforward manner, and in the manner in which he has approached it in all aspects."—Phila. Episcopal Recorder.

JOBS COMFORTERS; or, Scientific Sympathy. A religious science which teaches the Moleculist, John Stuart, the Millite, and Tyndall, the Sadness, attempt to comfort Job out of their scientific books. By Joseph Parker, D. D. 8vo, 22 pp., paper.

"I shall endeavor to make it known where it will be appreciated. The task was a delicate one, and I sincerely congratulate the author on the manner in which he has approached it in all aspects."—Hon. William E. Gladstone.

MASONIC OUTRAGES. By Rev. H. H. Hinman. The following are the topics discussed: Masonic attempts on the lives of seceders. Masonic slander. Masonic assault on free speech. Freemasonry among the colored people. Masonic interference with the punishment of criminals. The fruits of the Masonic institution. The conspiracy and the outrages of other secret orders. The relation of the secret lodge system to the foregoing and similar outrages.

Special Offer.

To any one who will send us $2.00, the subscription price of the CYNOSURE, on or before February 1, 1887, we will send the paper one year and THE ABOVE SIX BOOKS FREE! Don't miss this chance! We cannot promise to hold the offer open longer than January. Accept quickly!

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Onondaga Jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his address to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty years, and a conclusion of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the latest historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association. Send copy, 5 cents.)

FARM NOTES.

WINTER IN CITY AND COUNTRY.

Because there is little open air life every in-door attraction in winter, of a social nature is, promoted. This is all fine, but the horrors of storms in the city must not be overlooked: the streets filled with snow, the struggling street car and truck horses, the spectacle every few rods of horses falling, and then the chilly air, the result frequently of salt and snow mingled, and the worse than arctic condition when the snow is melting on one side of the street and frozen on the other, the uselessness of one side of nearly every street—if bright for a little while in the morning, then dark and cold in the afternoon—and in many streets owing to the height of the buildings, devoid of sun at all times; from the same cause was the wind seeming to blow from all quarters.

I have been in the coldest parts of Maine and New Hampshire and in northern Michigan in the depth of winter, and have seen men, women and children exposed to a very low temperature; but the real type of a shivering wretch, with head drawn down into his coat collar, face pale, teeth chattering, I must draw from respectable gentlemen who I have seen turning the corner out of a street running east and west into one running north and south, when the wind, laden with fine needles of ice, was rushing as through a groove at the rate of fifty miles an hour. A blizzard is undoubtedly worse, but nothing else is.

In the country one has the wind from one quarter; if it is a northwester, a north westerly; and if it be a northeaster, a north easter it is, and the citizen can adjust himself to it. He can walk with it if it suits his convenience, or if competent he can propel against it even if he has to tack. If, however, he remains indoors he has what to every healthy mind and body is a stimulant of the highest order, the view of the storm.—American Agriculturist.

WINTER PRECAUTIONS.

Here, at the north, we must take special pains to guard against the results of sudden "cold snaps" and penetrating winds which blow the cold through every nook and crevice into the rooms where are our flowers. If these precautions are neglected we may wake up some morning when the thermometer registers away down in the minus twenties, or possibly the thirties, as was several times the case with us last winter, and find our pets frozen.

I would always advise having double sash at the windows where plants are kept. If this is done and the glass is well putted in, there will be no need of moving them away at night, and it is entirely unnecessary to use a curtain of any sort as a protection against frost, as the two thicknesses of glass with the air space between them are an effectual barrier against the entrance of cold. Of course, care must be taken to see that the sash fits the frame snugly. There must be no loose, open joints. In order to make sure of a snug fit it is well to use strips of thin corner molding, which can be fitted into the angles between sash and frame and tacked so firmly into place as to fit closely against both, thus insuring a tight joint. The outside sash can be screwed to the window frame. Large, long screws will draw it down against the wood so firmly as to leave no crevice for the wind to get in. If the frame is uneven it is well to tack on a strip of thick cloth or felt all around where the storm-sash will come. The screws will hold the wood down on this so snugly that all uneven places will be effectually filled. Of course, windows having double sash are supposed to be proof against the entrance of air, but it does not necessarily follow from this that we are not to give the plants fresh air which are grown in them.

If your plants should freeze, as soon as you discover what has been done put them in a dark room, or the cellar, where the temperature is but little above freezing, and sprinkle thoroughly with cold water. In most cases, such plants as geraniums, abutilons, and the more hardy kinds, can be saved in this way, and often quite tender kinds will come out with but little injury. The frost must be extracted gradually and with application of as little heat as possible. Keep them away from the light and warmth for two or three days. If the tops should wilt you may feel sure they cannot be saved, so cut them off at once. The roots may not be damaged to any great extent, and if they are not they will soon send up sprouts.—Eben E. Rexford in Vick's Magazine.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping, usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-doubling, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for every night and a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cures. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

Dr. H. E. HEDDEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER is one of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Catarrh of the Nose and Throat, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with either malady."

Dr. H. E. HEDDEN, 38 West 43d St., New York. Mr. B. O. TOWN, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., writes: "I suffer from a severe case of Catarrh, cough incessantly day and night. I bought a Pillow-Inhaler, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer wet and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

A record of Faith Work.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,

AND

ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield, "He had his failings, but to virtue's side."

Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. He writes and writes on each the air of honesty that it will in measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the true degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition attested by J. O. Doehring, Past Master Unity No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, degrees, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, ideal and practical workings of the Order, by Pres. Charles C. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of those who claim that the order of Freemasonry was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Denial to Masonry. A brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States. The meaning of Masonic Benevolence, the Use of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of the Order (old work)." by Elder D. Bernard. The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen, $7.50.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of the Order, The Elements of the Order, The Order of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Denial to Masonry. A brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States. The meaning of Masonic Benevolence, the Use of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the order of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, bear down upon Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid, 40 cts.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE with the DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Rev. C. C. Cook and wife, of Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucie C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder of OATHS or 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "The History of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan; "Morgan," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees. 304 pages, 40 cts.

In the Collie, or the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secrecism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are being destroyed, and the world is being brought to the verge of ruin. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LECTURES on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. This was given in 1831 to 1832. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-ry; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling and secret works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 50 cents; per dozen, $5.00.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry, by J. R. Doehring, Past Master of Unity No. 191, Holland, Mich., gives the correct or "standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, the dress of candidates, mode of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 30 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil and religious life, the character of the Order, by Pres. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The Un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

National Christian Association, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

General Washington Opposed to SECRET SOCIETIES. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Accusations of the Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that the high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Adoptive Free Masonry, by Thomas A. Doehring, explaining the degree of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Eletha, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Widow's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of the order, by Rev. J. B. Stearns, of New York, exposing the lodge. 338 pages; cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and the Knights of the Order of the Temple, by Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 841 pages, in cloth, $1.00, $5.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50 cts; $4.50 per dozen.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscence of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan by Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books now published. 100 pages, in cloth, $1.00. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. A. Goodin. A book of 400 pages, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 35 cents each; per dozen, $3.00.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Oddish Fellowship Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of the Eastern Star Illustrated" (old work), "Exposition of the Grange" and "Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic," are sold bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $9.00.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District North-western Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a second Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent clergymen, presidents and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 75 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, with signs of recognition, passwords, and the ritual of the Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union. The whole bound together, 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trade-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will show that a Christian should not be a Freemason. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the INITIATE. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

IN BRIEF.

Every ship of war that floats costs more than a well endowed college; every sloop of war costs more than the largest public library in our country.

A little girl was seated opposite a gentleman with a waxed moustache. After gazing at him for several minutes she exclaimed: "My kitty has got smellers, too."

To endeavor to move by the same discourse hearers who differ in age, sex, position and education, is to attempt to open all locks with the same key.

The results of reading are best preserved by communicating them to others. It is of little use to read to one's self, and never to speak of what one reads.—Lyman Abbott.

Why some people, when they cannot remember a thing, are apt to put up their hands to their heads and scratch has long been a mystery. But as far back as 1600 Sir Henry Vaughn, who had a great deal to write on odd topics, advised a gentleman of quality, "when handsomely apparelled" and ready to meet guests to "comb his head softly and easily with an ivory comb, for nothing recreated the memorie more."

Roscoe Conkling, who ever since his retirement from political leadership has been practicing law in this city, has not lost his peculiar gift of ridiculing personal eccentricities. Speaking, the other day, in a trial, he referred to one of the witnesses who had a very red nose, as follows: "Gentlemen, I think I can see that witness now—his mouth stretching across the wide desolation of his face, a fountain of falsehood and a sulphure of rum."

Schumacher, the "oatmeal king" of Akron, Ohio, came to this country very poor and got into the liquor business. He didn't like that, and began to grind oatmeal by hand and peddle it from a handcart. In thirty years he built up the largest factory of the kind in the world. He is now a strong temperance man, and won't have an employe about him that drinks even beer. Most of his hundreds of workmen are Germans. He once brought a master workman from Germany at a big salary on a two years' contract. The second day after he began work Schumacher discovered that he drank beer. In two hours the man quit work and went back home with a check for $5,000.

The indication of a prosperous era is found in the price of iron and its consumption which have been steadily increasing since the beginning of the present year. We shall build nearly 7,000 miles of new railroad this year against 3,200 last year. The close of the year 1887 will see probably 8,000 miles of new railroads. Then, the price of silver has been going up steadily on the London market, and the white metal measures actual values far better than gold. The difference in silver has added fully eight cents a bushel to the value of East India wheat and has made a difference of a quarter of a cent a yard in the cotton goods we sell to China, and the other silver-using countries that are our customers. In our own country, our manufacturers are all actively employed; consumption is ahead of production; the rate of wages is rising; and there is every prospect that our cotton, breadstuffs, and provisions, which are abundant, will command better prices in the foreign markets. There was never so much building of houses as at the present time in the history of the United States. It is computed that five edifices are now erected against three in any other period of our history. Then, the West is settling up as never before. Next year, the emigration to the Northwestern country, especially, will be simply phenomenal. The whole face of the country is changing every few years; due to the opening of new farms, and the increase of the size of the cities. From abroad we learn that the prices of wool, iron, copper, tin, and lead have gone up, also those of silk, India rubber, and meats of all kinds.

"A THRILLING WARNING." THE Man Traps of the City.

BY THOS. E. GREEN.

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons

It treats of

The Tiger and His Den.

Cups of Flame.

The Scarlet Sin.

Embezzlement.

The Devil's Printing Press.

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that show the hidden life from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown of their mask, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the prudent literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—Western Christian Advocate.

The Christian Cynosure

AND THE

FARM, FIELD AND STOCKMAN, both one year, and in addition we will present the subscriber with his choice of either 20 WELL FILLED PACKETS OF SEEDS are mostly new and rare novelties, the object being to introduce new and improved varieties. There are over 100 varieties to select from, comprising the rarest flowers and vegetables, and new varieties of thoroughbred grain, either imported from the best special sources of Europe or purchased from the originator in this country, especially for this distribution. Twenty packets of seeds of like quality cannot be bought at retail for less than $1.50.

The Farm, Field and Stockman is doubtless well known to our readers. Since its present publishers, Gen. C. H. Howard and Jas. W. Wilson, took it in hand it has been second to none of its class. It is an ably edited, neatly printed, reliable, 4-column, 16-page, agricultural and family weekly, and a staunch advocate of farmers' rights—a paper every farmer wants. Price $1.50 a year.

Send the money to this office, and we will promptly forward the paper and an illustrated descriptive list of the above

OF

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently practical in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the truth, and shows the way to victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devoted to its dearer criticisms. It contains as much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life hid with Christ in God can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Frase.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to final."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

Old Age and How to enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHEOP.

Introduction by REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D.D.,

(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and helpful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

ON THE

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the more general application of it? Ah, there's the rub! Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable, alike for its directness, common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of denotative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind. It is not the kind that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

Archdeacon Farrar says that "the English in India have made 100 drunkards for one Christian." In China the English have made probably 1,000 opium-eaters for one Christian, and the English government in India receives a large proportion of its revenue from the unholy traffic. This is an evil case, and because of it, such shallow philosophers as Gail Hamilton condemn Christian civilization as no better than heathen, and demand a "future probation." But what would cavillers do if Christianity were no better in reality than the feeble men who profess it?

The brief sensation made by a willful and deluded young woman and the murderer Spies was suddenly quieted last week by the refusal of the sheriff to allow the farce to proceed to a tragedy. The officer has been overwhelmed by the thanks of the city. We may hear no more of the case for another freak may take the Van Zandt girl to another extreme. In every aspect of the case, however, the man Spies shows his base spirit. Not alone was he willing to make a coward's use of a weak young woman to save his miserable life; but, when the plot was foiled, he proclaims his defiance of law, human and divine. "It makes little difference," he says; "we will waive all ceremonies and, when the time comes, will live as husband and wife."

The Daily Capitol of Atlanta, Georgia, is represented in the dispatches as having been a champion of prohibition in the late struggle in that city. But it is a champion of little faith for it begins to cry out: "Prohibition is a failure. As a prohibition paper that has fought for that side because we believed the people of Atlanta had the nerve to carry it out, and if properly carried out would prove a blessing, we now feel it our duty, after a few months' trial, to pronounce it, to all appearances, a dead failure in Atlanta. In fact, whisky and beer are sold almost as much as ever, only the city gets nothing for it." This is cowardly! It is impossible to believe there was anything but the hope of gain behind the championship of this paper. Is not the Capitol itself interested enough in the prosperity of Atlanta to help "carry out" the prohibition victory? If not, it is such a friend as honest men prefer on the other side. We shall hear from the men of conviction soon on this matter. Already they begin to defy the editor of the Capitol to show a single instance where beer or whisky is sold in the city.

The Chicago anarchist element has been emboldened by the delays of law to begin their threats of vengeance. At one meeting a few weeks since they deliberated on the destruction of the water-works by dynamite in connection with a general incendiary conflagration. Their organ, the Arbeiter Zeitung, has also a furious article, which, as if written by Spies himself, concludes: "When they have created a standing army, a military station, a Fort Logan, that means civil war, death and destruction to the workingmen. The workingmen, the small tradesmen, the farmers, all thinking and liberty-loving men, have but one answer for that, namely: Arming. Arm yourselves with the cheapest, the best, the most effective arm, such as can be handled easiest, whether Gatling guns, Winchester rifles or pistols. Workingmen, be men. Do not stand by idle and without plan, when your enemies are arming themselves to annihilate you. Your honor, your self-esteem demands this of you. Now, there is time, but it may soon be too late."

A prominent member of Mr. Powderly's order in this city is authority for the following account of a new edition of the labor lodge business. What will the next improvement be?

"The Improved Knights of Labor have been in existence three or four years. The order was organized first in Boston. Its platform is similar to that of the Knights of Labor. The officers bear the same titles. But it is a political body, and admits to membership lawyers, bankers, saloon-keepers, professional politicians, etc. That is why it is called 'improved.' It does not belong to the Federation of Trades. I understand that it is going into the American Federation of Labor Organizations, which is a new society, also started in Boston. The Improved Knights of Labor is only a political machine, organized by men who received the cold shoulder from the Knights of Labor, and who want to get at the head of an institution for the sake of pushing themselves into power. For three years this body has laid dormant, but it now seeks to take advantage of a division in the Knights of Labor to push itself into prominence. I have documents issued by the 'improved' order years ago, giving its constitutions, by-laws, principles, etc. I have never seen any one who belonged to it. Outside of the politicians who paid for the documents distributed through the country I doubt if it ever had many members. The Knights of Labor investigated the order three years ago, and orders were issued not to recognize it."

—Rev. M. A. Gault, National Reform Secretary, tells of the Salvation Army work in Iowa, in the Cranic of College Springs: "I was at Cedar Rapids. The night was cold and the snow flying. Two hundred people were standing on the sidewalk at the main street crossing. There, kneeling in a circle on the cold snow under the glare of the electric light, were fifteen young men and women engaged in prayer. The first petition of one of the young men was, 'O Lord, we do not want a great name for ourselves, but we want thee to get a great name.' After a few prayers they would rise and sing a few stirring hymns, keeping time with a big bass drum and tambourines. It was an impressive scene. Look out for that man's soul who has no sympathy for the Salvation Army. Spurgeon says, 'If the Salvation Army were wiped out of London, five thousand extra policemen could not fill its place in the repression of crime and disorder.' A lawyer said to me, 'The Salvation Army in Cedar Rapids has done more for the repression of intemperance than all the churches.'"

How to get people to church is a much discussed question in these days. When Mr. Spurgeon was asked how he succeeded so wonderfully in keeping his church full, he replied, "I fill the pulpit and let the people fill the pews." Dr. Chalmers told a part of the secret when he said, "A house-going preacher makes a church-going people." And an old divine spoke wisely when he said: "A good example is one of the loudest bells to toll people to church." —Watchword.

THE HIGHER LAW.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

Dr. Howard Crosby denies the right of government to appeal to the higher law. He says, "There is no way of breaking the Sabbath so effectually, and of getting a French Sunday in New York so quickly as to say to the world: 'you must observe the Sabbath because God says so.'"

J. F. Burhoe, a Baptist minister in Rockford, Ill., told me, "I hold the secular theory of government, I want Sabbath legislation, but I do not want it from the divine standpoint."

These men recognize the value of the Sabbath. They want government to maintain Sabbath laws, but they say it can rest these laws upon no higher than human authority. This raises the National Reform issue. That question is, should government recognize divine authority above human? Does the moral law of the Bible rule in the sphere of civil government? Is there any higher law for a nation than the will of the people? Is there moral anchorage for a nation outside of itself?

When William H. Seward in the United State Senate once alluded to the higher law, it raised a storm of opposition. They acknowledged no authority higher than the government of the United States, and therefore regarded such sentiment as treason. Horace Greeley said in the New York Tribune, March 7, 1865: "We deny that this is a Christian nation. Almighty God is not the source of all power and authority in our government. The people of the United States are such source." Again he said, "The proposed recognition of God in the Constitution involves a more fundamental and sweeping change than was effected by our fathers' separation from Great Britain."

The National Reform theory is that government should recognize the divine law as the standard of all legislation. It should recognize divine authority over human. One reason why it should do this is because God created us and has the best right to govern us. When a man furnishes the material and manufactures the goods, has he not a right to put his name on them and dispose of them? God as our Creator, proprietor and sovereign, has a right to dictate our conduct. Therefore all lawful authority either in the family, church or state is derived from God. He governs the world by human agency and has ordained civil government to protect the good and restrain the bad; and God has given to government his own perfect law of liberty. It is the only law that can secure the rights of all.

Again government cannot appeal to the conscience of the citizen in the enforcement of law unless it recognize Divine authority. A man without a God is a man without a conscience; and a government without a God is a government without a conscience. There are but two forces government can use to enforce law. It must be either a moral or physical force; either the idea of a God or a bayonet; either a Bible or a Gatling gun; either a pulpit or an iron-clad. A people without moral principle—without conscience, could be restrained from crime only by the penalties of law. Conscience responds to no mere human law. The law of God only has authority enough behind it to make men respect it. Once establish the idea that the Divine statute is a dead letter, and the whole fabric of conscience falls. Where men have no respect for the rights of God, they will have little respect for the rights of men. A man's respect for human authority, will be in proportion to his respect for Divine. If there is no regard paid to the law whose enacting clause runs,

"Thus saith the Lord," the oath will not bind in the courts; contracts will bind only when there is sufficient testimony; and only what the State can punish will be the standard of dutiful citizenship.

Again God's law should be recognized because it is the only way God can have a voice in the government. It is a serious thing to disfranchise God in a government which he has called into being in his providence, and which he has preserved through so many dangers. And yet we disfranchise God—we deny him the privilege of the humblest fellow-citizen when we ignore his law and his authority. Any government or association that excludes Christ and his law, excludes the Christian as well, because he cannot go where he cannot take Christ with him.

Again the law of Christ should be recognized in government, because it is the only perfect standard of right. We cannot go back to God to find a standard of virtue. Men may plead the eternal fitness of things, or the greatest good to the greatest number, or that honesty is the best policy; but the last analysis proves that the foundation of all morality is not in expediency merely, but in the eternal commandments of Christ. His law must be recognized, or there is nothing to determine right from wrong. No God and there is no authority for virtue—no standard of virtue—no definition of virtue—no virtue. Virtue must ever be under the dominion of law. And according to the testimony of the best jurists, the decalogue is the only perfect law. We must recognize some law, and why not recognize the best? If we recognize the moral law we must recognize its author. Christ has a patent on that law, which he purchased with his own life. Let us not be so unjust and dishonest as to use the law while we ignore its author.

THE TIMES OF WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION.

REMINISCENCES OF HON. S. C. POMEROY.

THE SLAVERY QUESTION AND ITS FINAL SETTLEMENT.

The great revolt against the Government of the United States began as early as 1833 by the "Nullifiers," as they were called, of South Carolina. At that day the movement got little support from neighboring States. But that was a slaveholders' revolt, a slaveholders' nullification, and this of our day, I named at the time, "A SLAVERYHOLDERS' REBELLION."

I had been just twelve days in my seat in the U. S. Senate when I introduced a bill for the suppression of the rebellion. I had taken the seat vacated by the leading man of the revolt, Jefferson Davis. There were a plenty of vacant seats at that date. I remember that the brief notes of his last speech were lying upon his desk when I took the seat. The substance of them was this: "Mississippi has withdrawn from the Federal Union, and I, her obedient servant, follow her steps; and have telegraphed to the Governor that I now withdraw from this body!" That seat remained vacant until this first called session by Lincoln, July 4, 1861.

At this date, Mr. Lincoln had said "the war was for the preservation of the American Union. I will, if I can, save this Union, with slavery, or without slavery. This Union must be saved." To all this I had said in the Senate, "If this war means emancipation, I am for it. If it does not, I will not vote a dollar in money, or a man to fight the battles! We have had no Union for twenty years past. This is no Union, when they offer premiums of $10,000 for the heads of some of my friends, 'dead or alive,' to say nothing of the reward for my own." At this date, too, the army was ordered to protect slave property—"not to harbor runaways;" but to return fugitives to their owners whether loyal or disloyal. That state of facts gave rise to the following bill, which I now quote from a copy printed at the time, omitting the preamble:

A BILL TO SUPPRESS THE SLAVERYHOLDERS' REBELLION.

Section 1. That from and after the passage of this act, there shall be no slavery, or involuntary servitude in any of the States of this Union, that claim to have received from the Government of the United States, and are in open and armed resistance to the execution of the laws thereof, and the provisions of the Constitution.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, that immediately after the passage of this act, the President of the United States shall issue his proclamation, setting forth the immediate and unconditional emancipation of all persons, held as slaves, under the laws thereof, also ordering all officers to give protection to all such emancipated slaves, and accept the services of all who may tender them, in behalf of the Government; if in the judgment of such officer such services shall be useful, or necessary to the successful prosecution of this war.

That bill could not get a committee to consider it. It was criticised by Mr. Fessenden of Maine; supported by Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts; and denounced by Mr. Breckenridge, of Kentucky; and so for a year longer all officers and men of the army supposed they were serving their country in sending outside their lines the panting fugitive, or returning him to his master, refusing his service. Thank God, the day did come, when these oppressed ones did strike the redeeming blow of their own freedom, and sealed their emancipation with their own blood. After the discipline of adversity for over a year more that proclamation of emancipation was issued, and peace, union and freedom began to be foreshadowed.

Men are to be commiserated who can see no Divine Providence in the history of the colored race upon this continent, or see no well-conceived plan in their final triumph. By no accident was the "Mayflower" landed upon the rocks of Massachusetts, with her precious freight, of learning, piety and Christian civilization, the very same year which brought that ill-starred vessel up the James River, with its burden of wretchedness and woe; bearing the seeds of a system destined, after a struggle of 250 years for development, expansion and dominion, to light the fires of civil war, and perish in the flames its own hand had kindled! Before 1808, over three hundred thousand Africans had been kidnapped, stolen and brought into this country. And they darkened all the land; so that in the adoption of the Federal Constitution, they had to compromise with this most infernal traffic, and give it a lease of twenty more years.

I remember reading in my boyhood, that an old sea captain, as early as 1646, introduced two slaves into a settlement near the old town of Northampton, Mass., where I was born, and he tried to join the church, and was objected to. Then he showed that he had procured these two slaves in a slave hunt on the coast of Africa, and gave the date. It was soon found out that it took place upon a Sabbath day, and he had added Sabbath breaking to kidnapping. He was rejected, and a memorial immediately sent to the General Court at Boston setting forth the "three-fold outrage," "murder, man-stealing and Sabbath-breaking," and this was supplemented by a request that these two slaves be sent back to Guinea (Africa) "with the indignation of the General Court."

In November of that year, it was enacted "that if any man steal a man, or mankind, he shall surely be put to death." In 1650 the New Haven Colony made "man-stealing a capital offense." In 1652 the Colony of Rhode Island enacted that "no black mankind or white should serve more than ten years, and after the age of twenty-four should be set free." Thus early in our history did the contest against slavery begin.

History tells of one colored martyr (Crispus Attucks) who sealed his devotion in the Boston massacre of March 5, 1770; others fell on the 19th of April, 1775; and when a British officer "stormed the works at Bunker Hill, he was shot dead by one Salem, a black soldier." The blacks performed some of the most heroic acts in the war for Independence. Human equality was enunciated by the first Continental Congress, and repeated in the deathless words of the Declaration of Independence.

Seeing all this in history, and believing all this, why should not I bring into the Thirty-seventh Congress, in the second war for independence, a "bill to suppress the Slaveholders' Rebellion," and to employ the freed people in the war for their freedom? And it all came about, after due time. But for one, I could hardly wait for the movements of Mr. Lincoln, or for the fulfillment of the purposes of Almighty God. Under influence of the Border States, fearing they were to be overrun by free negroes, Mr. Lincoln's mind was clouded by a theory of colonization, and he recommended to Congress to make appropriation of money to that end, and Congress did appropriate over $300,000. Mr. Lincoln had seen the colony I had helped to establish in Kansas, and asked me if I would superintend the planting of one in some tropical country. I replied, "Yes; if you will issue the proclamation of emancipation the day I sail from this harbor!" This he consented to do, and gave me a commission as Superintendent of the colony. It lies before me, and is dated August, 1862.

I enrolled over twelve thousand colored people for this colony. Frederick Douglas gave me his two sons; and my vessel was ready to sail with the first installment, when Mr. Seward, having received a protest from the country where we were going, against such a shipment, put a stop to the scheme. His letter is before me, and has never been published. Falsehoods enough have been printed about it, but the truth, never. As I reported to the Secretary of the Interior, his letter was addressed to Caleb B. Smith, and by him to me.

Upon the receipt of these letters, I not only "suspended" colonization, but abandoned the project, dismissed my men, restored the vessel to its owner, and left New York for Washington. I called upon the President to issue his proclamation of emancipation. It had been written for some time. Congress had put a stop to returning slaves to their masters, by act, making an "additional article of war," approved the 13th day of March, 1862. A committee of Senators called also, to urge this. At length with great emotion Mr. Lincoln said, "I have promised my God, if he give us one victory in the field, I will sign this Proclamation;" and added, "How can I issue it in the wake of a defeat?" At length I suggested that Pharaoh was plagued until he let Israel go. The hope of victory lay in that direction.

Finally on the 22d day of September, fifteen days after this colonization scheme was abandoned, Mr. Lincoln did issue his preliminary proclamation, notifying all States in rebellion, that if they did not lay down their arms by the 1st day of January, 1863, he should declare all slaves in such jurisdiction "to be then, and forever, free!"

Some few turned back "and walked no more with us." But the great majority of loyal people sprang forward with a new impetus, and the war went on; Gen. Butler took "contrabands" into the service, and finally thousands of freedmen stood in the ranks as soldiers, and the conflict was "fought out on that line."

The 1st day of January, 1863, did at last come! We lived to see it. Thousands longed for it, and died without the sight. Abraham Lincoln, the great emancipator proclaimed: "I do order and declare, that all persons held as slaves, within said designated States, and parts of States, are, and henceforth shall be, free; and the Executive Government of the United States, including the military and naval authorities thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of said persons. Upon this act, sincerely believed to be an act of justice, warranted by the Constitution as a military necessity, I invoke the considerate judgment of mankind, and the gracious favor of Almighty God."

Every word and sentence of the bill I had the honor to introduce in 1861, had now become a law, without an act of Congress; forced upon the nation in the providence of Almighty God, and based upon a "military necessity;" although that necessity was prefixed and whitewashed by the phrase "Sincerely believing it an act of justice, I commend it to the verdict of posterity, and the gracious favor of Almighty God."

And now truly a revolution was in progress. Men and women who had longed and prayed for emancipation, and dare not look upon bloodshed, saw here "the hiding of his power." Julia Ward Howe went one day to the battlefield, and returned to Willard's Hotel, and wrote these immortal lines:

"I have seen him in the watchfires of a hundred circling camps,
They have builded him an altar in the evening dews and damps;
And closed that "Battle Hymn of the Republic:"

"As he died to make men holy, let us die to make men free; While God is marching on."

Old John Brown's prophecy, spoken in jail, was that day fulfilled in our ears: and his soul was marching on!

That the revolution going on was based upon, and caused by the institution of slavery, was no new doctrine from the standpoint of the men in Kansas with whom I acted; and great was my surprise to find that Mr. Lincoln or Mr. Seward could hold any other view. The idea of saving the union and slavery too, was the very thing I did not want. While we entertained these views, we were not ignorant of the fact that the leading rebels agreed with us in this, that they wanted no government not founded upon human slavery; and they agreed with us that the fight between the contending factions was about slavery, and nothing else. No man understood better, or could more ably defend their views than Mr. Alexander H. Stephens, their vice-president. I had then before me his speech of the 21st of March, 1861, and I have it now. In this he said, after denouncing the Declaration of Independence as adopted by the fathers:

"Our new government is founded upon exactly the opposite idea. Its foundations are laid—its corner stone rests upon the great truth that the negro is not equal to the white man; that slavery—subordination to a superior race—is his natural and normal condition. This our new government is the first in the history of the world based upon this great physical and moral truth. It is upon this, as I have stated, our actual fabric is firmly planted."

And he closed this remarkable speech in these words: "This stone, which was rejected by the first builders, is become the chief corner stone of our new edifice." This blasphemous speech was sustained in an address from Jefferson Davis, when he appeared in Montgomery, Alabama, to take the oath upon his inauguration. He said: "We are now determined to maintain our position, and make all who oppose us smell Southern powder and feel Southern steel." And again in the same speech, he said: "We will maintain our rights and our government at all hazards. We ask nothing. We want nothing. Our separation from the old Union is complete. No compromise, no reconstruction, can now be entertained." I carried these speeches in my pocket day after day, read them to Mr. Lincoln, and quoted them in speeches; and yet when I embodied the real issue in a bill for Congress to pass, only one voice, Sumner's, was raised in its support!

And so the weary months and years rolled on, and Mr. Lincoln called again and again for "300,000 more." The battlefields became historic. The dead went up to judgment. The living left hospitals on crutches. Mourning was in all the land, until our debt to God and humanity was fully paid. When it became sure that "Freedom and Union" "were one and inseparable," then light did rise and our darkness became as the noonday.

From the standpoint of to-day I feel more reconciled to the way we were led. But those four years of war, with all the facilities possessed for rapid moving and killing, were equal to forty years reckoned by the old standards. In my early life I used to see an old letter written by Col. Seth Pomeroy to his wife in Northampton, from "near Boston," just before the battle of Bunker Hill, in answer to her question, "When will your army move?" He said, "I have just sent a special messenger to Gen. Washington, in the Jerseys, and expect an answer in forty days!" Think of that! A subordinate officer, communicating with his Major General, and expecting an "answer in forty days!" I lived to see two full regiments taken from New York, through New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, the District of Columbia, into Virginia, where they had a battle and a victory in forty-eight hours after they left New York!

Such events produced the men of the times. They are represented by Lincoln, Seward, Chase and Sumner, with a great Captain in command. All of them have passed away. But continents darkened when they died.

LYING AT HIS FEET.

BY ELDER J. L. BARLOW.

When I think of the moments I've wasted in sin,—
Of the pain I have caused my Redeemer and King,
My heart is sore broken, and tears are my meat,
Till joy dries them all, when I lie at his feet.

O my comrades in sin, I must bid you adieu,
Though my love, as of old, is still tender and true;
For I've found me a portion my hunger to meet,
And it comes from my Lord as I lie at his feet.

Oh come with me now, in the days of your youth,
And drink to the fill of the chalice of Truth;
Your coming my Saviour will hasten to greet,
With a joy like my own, as we lie at his feet.

Our dear Saviour has work for his lovers to do,
And a kingdom awaits them, when labor is through;
For the toilers there rest, on his throne there's a seat,
For all who in time loved to lie at his feet.

TRIBUTE TO A HERO OF PENNSYLVANIA.

BY ELDER N. CALLENDER.

With a sad heart I hear of the departure of our beloved fellow-laborer, Elder A. L. Post of Montrose.

So far as his anti-slavery record is concerned, the local papers, both religious and secular, will do him justice. On that question he was deeply conscientious and radical, and as fearless as William Lloyd Garrison. Scores of times he electrified our Baptist associations and other organizations with his eloquence and pathos. In discussion he was calm and logical. In these traits he excelled, and his opponents well knew it. He opened his subject as the morning twilight does its noon-day. His antagonist would hardly dream of approaching danger till suddenly placed "hors du combat." In the heated discussions oft-repeated, in our religious bodies, many were the instances when he overmatched the "conservatives." So handsomely would he do it, and with such supreme good nature, that it might seem that his opponent ought to enjoy being defeated. Many a time when he came down on the pro-slavery element in our religious bodies, would the conservatives go, trembling with rage, out of the church; while our brother would welcome the space so made with a smile of beneficent adieu. If he ever used an epithet it was when no other term could meet the demand, and never, I think, in a personal way.

Possessed of a mild and loving nature, polished by a first-class education, he was every man's friend. Though bred to the legal profession, he preferred the Gospel ministry to the law. As an evangelist he made a good record, and also as pastor. It is not the object of this paper to attempt anything more than a voluntary tribute to our precious brother. We hope, ere long, to see in print something worthy of the man by an abler pen. When I took up my pen to write this article, I had in view to supply what the secular and the religious press is almost sure to omit.

Strong men are not always truly wise and great. Symmetry is the secret of beauty. After the fall of the "sum of all villainies" by the aid of his heavy blows, his eye fell upon another evil, greater and more to be dreaded—lodgers. Not as the multitude which sat down in blind exultation with no more to do but to shout victory, our brother, now venerable in years of hard work, which achieved this one triumph, advances upon intemperance and the lodge. Zealous and eloquent as he was against slavery, though now well stricken in years, he was just as zealous in all the new living questions, a consistent antagonist of wrong anywhere, in church or state, and would agree to no compromise with any evil thing. This feature in the character of a noble and fearless man shall not, by the secrecy of the press, be kept from the people.

Elder A. L. Post was as much an Anti-mason as he was anti-slavery, and took ground with the N. O. A. from the commencement of its grand work. He, more than any other one, kept an anti-secret resolution on the minutes of the Bridgewater Baptist Association. When our excellent brother, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, then about 21 years of age, took a set of resolutions, drawn up by himself, and signed by the writer, and many more staunch anti-secret men, and sowed them in the Baptist General Association, then in annual session, in Scranton, Pa., Elder A. L. Post was there. A blustering D. D. proposed a tirade against the "antis," when brother Post suggested to the savants that the job might be a heavier one than they anticipated. Those who knew him, saw the old fire of anti-slavery days blazing in his calm eye and prudently declined the battle. It was then and there that the pastor of the Pennsylvania Avenue church (then in charge) rudely forbade Pres. C. A. Blanchard the house and then the churchyard; and when said chivalric pastor attempted to drive him from the street-walk by police force, he was met with the "rights of an American citizen." Despite this Masonic prelate, "Charley" stood and gave out the resolutions to all who wanted them.

One other incident in this conflict of years ago, may interest some. When the writer, with Elder S. E. Miller, was on the programme to conduct an anti-secret meeting in the court-house at Montrose, Pa., ten or more years ago we were invited to the home of our deceased comrade in arms in the G. A. R. (Grand Army of Reform). Soon after we had entered the court-room on the evening of the first meeting, Dr. — came in and took himself through the room somewhat in the style of old Neb. just before "going to grass." Sarcastically he said, "Well, gentlemen, I have come to learn something," and strode through the room as though he thought himself above learning. Just at this juncture brother Post who sat at a table reading in Bernard's "Light on Masonry," said:

"See here, doctor, Bernard says in his book that the Knights Templars, in taking this degree, drink wine from a human skull. I believe you have taken this degree and you know. How is it, doctor?"

After some equivocal talk and a repetition of the question, he said, "Yes, they do," and then assigned the reason which I had never heard before. It was that a certain philosopher had found in the human skull the seat of the soul or immortality.

Just then a man sitting by said, "Doctor, you are too free." The doctor left almost instantly and came back no more during our meetings there.

The trouble was that right where was found the seat of immortality, as claimed, alcohol reigned. Thus our strutting doctor became too free and too leaky to suit the craft. If they took him out to drive the hoops, they never brought him back. We passed a vote of thanks to the doctor for the important concession of a fact we already knew.

In looking over the notices in the secular papers not an intimation is found that this grand man "held out to the end" the same reformer he was in the beginning. Though toiling under the weight of nearly three score and ten years, at the death of slavery, he cheerfully and promptly turned his attention to another system of human bondage, darker, deeper and more wide-spread than that. This last sacrifice of his ripper years, and deep experience in moral campaigning, is the glory which caps a sublime character. Of this glory the presses which bow to the lodge decree of silence, would rob our brother, and at the same time rob the cause of true reforms of the prestige of great and good men. Our brother did his last public work against the lodge in Thompson, Pa. Here his strength gave out and I think he never attended another convention. Many more interesting incidents might be given, but I forbear.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN THE SOUTH.

AN ADDRESS BY PRES. C. A. BLANCHARD AT THE KNOXVILLE CONVENTION.

The present has its roots in the past, and whether we approve existing facts or not, we must recognize them. The South is, in certain important respects, different from the North, and secret societies which are a danger and a demoralizing force at any time and any where, are especially to be dreaded in a region like this, and in a time like the present. I ask your attention while for a little time I speak.

1st. Of the South,—its advantages, opportunities, and dangers.

2. Of secret societies, their history, professions, disavowals, and practices.

3. Of the special danger to the colored race from these associations; and,

4. Of the remedy for present evils, and the security against future difficulties.

OF THE SOUTH.

The Southern United States, as appears from soil, climate, river systems, coast line, and mineral wealth, were divinely intended to be the home of a brave, prosperous and happy people. Fruits, grains, textile materials, coal, iron, marble, and other articles of comfort or luxury abound or can be produced with as little or less of labor and anxiety than in almost any other portion of the globe. But as Turkey, Italy and Spain, which in certain respects resemble the South, have been cursed by false religions and unjust governments, so that moral, intellectual and industrial deserts spread where a paradise should bloom; so here: into this possible Eden came slavery, and with its palsying touch deadened all. It demoralized both master and slave. It corrupted the one by unlimited power, by idleness, and unearned luxuries. It ruined the other by enforced ignorance, inevitable immoralities, and endless, unrequited toil.

Large plantations separated neighbors, prevented the establishment of free schools, and rendered impossible the education of any except the children of the rich. They increased the tendency, inherent in all slave labor, toward a half cultivation of the soil, and caused the master and his wife to wake at midnight from uneasy slumbers or dreams of insurrection.

A rude and primitive agriculture was the only industry. No glowing forges, no flying shuttles, no whirling spindles, no buzzing saws; nothing but the slovenly labor of slaves, in whom intelligence and enterprise were always considered dangerous and usually criminal. These mountains of marble, iron and coal were used only as a hunting ground for whites, or a hiding place for escaping blacks. These beautiful rivers were unweeded by the keels of a diversified industry; these fertile valleys were exhausted by a half cultivation; these increasing millions both white and black were steadily and rapidly sinking as to education and morals.

Let it not be supposed for one moment that we of the North claim innocence in this great national sin against God and crime against humanity. Upon the whole country did a just God send the penalty for that outrage on the rights of man. Politicians who wanted power, merchants who wanted trade, lawyers who wanted fees, ministers who wanted peace in their churches, fashionable people who didn't want to be shocked, and the great mass of men who didn't want to be bothered,—all shut their eyes and closed their ears and hardened their hearts against the bondman's cry; so that in the North as well as in the South, the garment rolled in blood was laid at every door: in every house there lay one dead. As we read together the story of our fathers' sin in the matter of American Slavery we find occasion for humiliation and not for self-righteous condemnation of our fellows. The whole trouble lay in the introduction of a wrong principle, the planting of a bad seed, the toleration of an iniquity for the sake of profit or peace. We were one in the guilt and shame, one in the horrors of war: let us be one in penitence and contrition.

RECONSTRUCTION.

At the close of the war the colored people were raised from the condition of chattels to that of men. Yet, while they were made men in law, they did not have the provision made for their wants which even cattle require. After two hundred and fifty years of toil, during which they had created the entire wealth of this region, they did not own the wretched cabins where they slept. They were not given a dollar of money or a foot of land. Bare-handed, with only the miserable rags they wore, they were turned loose to meet the hate, contempt and rage of those who had been living upon their labors.

From this crime against ignorance and helplessness, for which again we of the North were largely responsible, have flowed evils innumerable. Had the colored people of the South been allotted small holdings without the power of alienation for a term of years, none would have been injured, all would have been blessed. Justice injures no one, it benefits all. But this act of scant justice was not performed; and so, for all these years, through multiplied and needless, along with multiplied and inevitable difficulties, the colored people have been learning the lesson of acquiring and managing property. This lesson is being learned, and it is now said by those in a condition to know, that they at present own over five million acres of land and are taxed on more than ninety-five millions of property; while in particular instances large fortunes have been acquired as is shown by an article in the Forum for last August. The facts mentioned show that so far as material progress is concerned, there is a future full of hope before the colored race. It would be a lying folly to say that all can do what some have done. It is not needful that they should; but all can, if they will, attain a position where they will be moral, intelligent, and comfortable. That will be a great change from the present, and is all that any race can hope for. It is more than any race has yet attained.

THE LODGE QUESTION.

There are various forces which resist the onward march of men in general, of the colored man in particular. The demagogue who covets power for personal ends, and scrambles for votes as beggars for the handful of coppers thrown into a crowd, an ignorant ministry, blind leaders with a blind following, and all falling into the ditch together, the liquor trade, licensed by state and nation to make beggars and criminals, caste shutting well behaved men and women of one color up with ill behaved men and women of another,—all these are hindrances, obstacles. But perhaps there is no one evil which robs these seven millions of citizens of so many comforts; which so renders them contented in ignorance, vice and poverty; which so prevents their coming to Jesus, who alone can save men, as does this secret society evil, which is now sucking the very life-blood from the colored men of the South.

Secret societies are not a new thing. They have been in the world thousands of years, and have a clearly defined character. In India, Africa and Europe the mysteries were for substance like Freemasonry and other modern fraternities. They all pretended to convey some valuable instruction. They all were religious in character. They all were and are atheistic in constitution and tendency (One who has not Christ cannot worship the true God). They all seek by initiation to terrify the candidate. They all profess to advance the material interests of men. They all rival the Christian church. Wherever the church of Jesus Christ is strong the lodges are weak, and wherever the lodges are strong the churches are weak.

The old lodges were the churches of heathenism. The modern lodges are heathen churches in Christian lands, and their dances and pilgrimages are like the festivals of the older mysteries, when Aaron had set up the calf, the people sat down to eat and drink and rose up to play. It is not necessary to say that many worthy men are in these orders and are ignorant of their character. The Gentiles thought that they were sacrificing to the sun, moon or stars. They thought themselves worshipping forms of beauty and sources of power; but the Holy Spirit said that they were sacrificing to devils. Ministers of the Gospel now preach Christ on the Sabbath, and then write and speak for these infidel associations which profess to send men to heaven without confession of sin, prayer for pardon, or the mediation of Christ. They make pilgrimages with knights who dance, drink, and travel on the Sabbath. If Paul were to write of their proceedings he would probably speak as he did of the secret societies existing in his own day.

Even the Grand Army of the Republic, which includes a small percentage of the Union soldiers and arrogates to itself the above title, cannot be content without an altar on which are crossed swords and a Bible. Yet before that altar men who are Christian and men who are ungodly meet on an exact equality. How must Christ feel toward such a yoking of believers and unbelievers? How do the hundreds of thousands of enlisted men not paying tribute to that secret society feel when they hear it called The Grand Army of the Republic?

But we are not on this subject shut up to vague analogies. The authorities of Freemasonry plainly declare that it is a religion in whose services Christians, Jews, Mohammedans, and pagans can unite. McCoy's Cyclopaedia, page 43, says, "The members of our society at this day, in the third stage of Masonry, confess themselves to be Christians." The same author, on the 102d page of his encyclopaedia, says: "A true Christian faith maintained and well answered by walking according to our Masonic profession, will turn faith into a vision and bring us to that blessed mansion above, where the just exist in perfect bliss to all eternity." Albert G. Mackey says (Lexicon, p. 369): "All the ceremonies of our order are prefaced and terminated with prayer, because Masonry is a religious institution."

Odd fellowship does not put its claims in the same language, but they come in the end to mean much the same thing.

It is to make men brotherly like David and Jonathan, to make them mindful of death by the initiation, to provide for them in sickness and death by the treasury of the lodge. Even the Good Templars begin their initiation with the question: "Do you believe in one God?" And in general secret societies profess to make men moral or pious or both, and every Christian knows that the only power which can do either of these things is the Christian religion.

But while the secret society system thus claims to make men better and to supply their wants, it expressly excludes Christ and his plan of salvation. We have already seen how he is omitted from the creed. The question is, "Do you believe in one God?" not, "Do you believe in Jesus?" in the lodge. He is in like manner omitted from the prayers of these orders. Take the manuals and rituals and read the prayers provided for their public and private occasions, and in general our blessed Saviour is entirely ignored. I read at a single sitting sixty five prayers printed for use in secret societies, not one of which contained the name of Christ. Not only is the Saviour thus omitted from their creeds and prayers, but even, in certain instances, from the very Bible where it is read in the lodge. In the seventh degree in Freemasonry 2 Thess. 3: 6-16 is read, except that in both places where the name of Jesus occurs it is stricken out.

These facts alone are sufficient to keep every Christian man out of such societies, for this exclusion of Jesus is not accidental. It is intentional, and is designed to please men who do not believe in the Saviour. But though this is enough it is not all. Mere mention of Christ's name does no good if we disregard his example and disobey his commands. He himself says, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?" Now these orders not only exclude the name of Christ from their creeds, prayers, and Scripture readings, but they promise salvation without those qualifications which the Saviour has declared indispensable. The Word of God teaches that sin is not pardoned until it is acknowledged and abandoned. It teaches that when men confess their sins honestly, God forgives them wholly and creates within the soul of man a new heart which enables him to live a new life of godliness and uprightness, and it declares that men who do not confess their sins are turned into an everlasting hell, where is weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth. This the Christian man professes to believe.

Now these lodges which teach men to hope for temporal help, morality and heaven, do not require them to confess their sins or ask the aid of the Holy Spirit. The poor, sinful man is sworn not to defraud his fellow lodge-men, not to slander them, not to strike them, not to commit adultery with their relatives; and yet reasonably intelligent men talk of these orders as "schools of morality," and if they pay their dues and infringe no regulations of the orders, they are taught to hope for a home of peace beyond the grave. Their system of salvation is by works, not grace; by living, not believing in Jesus; but even in the matter of works, by which they are to be saved, there is no honest meeting of the facts in the case.

Men are sinners, that is, they have done wrong. Men are sinful, that is, they have natures which will lead them to wrong doing. Christ's sacrifice for sins is available for every one who acknowledges and abandons his sins. He does away with the sinful nature by the new birth, the regeneration of the man. Secret societies ignore sins past. No confession of them is any where required. They ignore the sinful nature, and set a man who is a rebel against God to doing good works as a means of salvation; painting over rotten wood to make it strong; white-washing sepulchers which are full of dead men's bones and all manner of uncleanness; attempting to draw sweet waters from a bitter fountain, to gather grapes of thorns and figs of thistles, to bring a good life out of a bad heart. No wonder that when the moral teaching is of this sort they swear men to obey a brother's sign and conceal his crimes! How dark and devilish does such a system appear when contrasted with the holy and benevolent religion of Jesus Christ! These orders are in general composed of men, and they swear to aid each other, not to wrong each other, to be pure so far as the homes of the brotherhood are concerned. Christ taught universal benevolence, an honesty that reaches even to the heart, a purity that forbids even a lustful look. To the Christian mind such a dark and selfish system of morals must be unutterably repulsive when candidly considered in the light of the cross.

A false religious system corrupts everything it touches. We have seen that the religion of secret societies is atheistic, and that the morals taught are in every respect contrary to those taught in the New Testament. Of course, so far as these orders prevail the church and home are ruined. These are two of the foundation institutions in society. There is one more, the state, and it remains to examine for a little the influence of the lodge upon civil government.

The only security for men in general is in the reign of law. The ignorant and weak find in it their only trustworthy friend. If money can buy decisions, or power influence them, or any secret influence secure them contrary to justice and righteousness, then the foundations of society are destroyed and anarchy is the certain and not distant result. The most dangerous men in any community are those who aid in perverting justice and corrupting courts. It matters not whether they are bribed judges or feed lawyers or sheriffs obeying secret signs,—any man who deliberately undertakes for any reason to secure the triumph of injustice, the overthrow of law, is a traitor to the state; and any organization which naturally lends itself to such an attempt is one which should be suppressed by law.

All this is clear, and hence secret societies generally disclaim any political intentions, while every reasonably well informed man knows that a secret society in a community cannot fail to influence law and determine political contests, if it be composed of voters. When orders obligate their members to conceal each other's secrets, to promote each other's interests, and to obey each other's signs, how can such an order fail to influence elections and courts? Years ago, in New York State, a man was murdered by a secret society for revealing its ritual. The community became much excited, and John C. Spencer was appointed special counsel to prosecute the men engaged in the abduction and murder. He spent two years of hard labor on the cases, and then reported to the Governor of the State that the lodge which had murdered the man had so much influence over witnesses, jurors and executive officers, that he found it impossible to bring the murderers to justice. What happened then may occur any time, and doubtless does occur in hundreds of instances which are never investigated. All that is known is that members of lodges commit crimes, and in some secret and unexplained way avoid the punishment which is due them.

The latest development of the lodge system indicates very clearly the anarchistic tendency of all such organizations. Thousands of men swear to obey officers whom many of them have never so much as seen. These head men order well paid, well satisfied men to strike, and at the word of this master freedom march out, while wives and children stand crying by. Employers seek to secure from the thousands of idle men those who will do the work, and the strikers mingle approbrious cries with deadly and murderous assaults. Unless the lodge system be checked, the time will soon be here, as foretold in Revelation, when men who have not received the mark of the beast in forehead or hand will not be permitted to buy or sell.

These orders are separating men from their wives, keeping fathers from their children, preventing officers from executing law, keeping witnesses from telling the truth, causing jurors to break their civil oaths, making jails like sieves, disintegrating the churches of Jesus Christ, and in all ways putting mankind on the road to barbarism.

LODGES AND THE COLORED RACE.

The ignorance and immorality of the colored people are the shame of the whites. How could any people trained as they have been, be otherwise than as they are? But though we cannot blame them, we must recognize the facts in any discussion of a problem like the one before us. Such regalias and titles as are used in secret lodges are specially attractive to uneducated, ungodly men. They are specially repulsive to cultivated men, or those who have drunk deeply into the Spirit of Christ. Feathers, swords, and loud-sounding titles are not according to the New Testament, and men who are much like Jesus have small liking for such things. But men who are ambitious and ignorant and unchristian will, of course, find the attractive power of such things, together with picnics, installations and festivals, practically irresistible.

Another fact is, that even good men, in the earlier stages of intellectual development, find it hard to separate the true from the false. Many men, if they see a Bible in a lodge room and hear men say that the order is founded upon it, will not stop to learn whether it is true or false. If a man tells them that an oath will not interfere with their duties, they will assume that it does not without investigation. If they are told by some worshipful master that an order does not meddle with the religious belief or political relations of its members, no matter who the man is, they accept the statement with unquestioning credulity. When they become more thoughtful and independent they will not only hear, but reflect and consider. At the first they go into captivity because they have no knowledge.

Let no one think that I am the enemy of my colored brethren, because I speak thus plainly. The shame of slavery and all its dreadful consequences is on my race, not theirs. I simply call attention to well known facts that together we may seek a remedy. In these few years past secret societies have swept through the colored population of the South like a tornado through a forest, or a prairie fire through the tall, dry grass. In many congregations there are so many lodge meetings that it is difficult to find an hour for an extra church meeting. These societies take so much money that in some instances churches cannot be built, and in others pastors cannot be supported. In the lodge festivals and picnics liquor flows like water, and members of the church dance all night with those who make no pretence of religion. Yet ministers sit quietly by and see God's sheep shorn and scattered and slain by these wolves. Dear brethren, these things ought not so to be.

The remedy for these evils, under which the church groans and the state staggers, is a faithful testimony on the part of the church. Let the cry be raised, "Who is on the Lord's side?" Let the watchmen on the walls give warning of the approaching danger. Let them lift up their voices like a trumpet to show God's people their sins and Israel her transgressions. No nation was ever yet ruined without the consent of the ministry. No people were ever yet destroyed until the church became apostate. When the line between the world and the church fades out, when preaching deteriorates to essayizing or generalizing, and popular sins find no rebuke at the altars of God, then national ruin is impending.

I well know that to do thus requires faith, courage, not infrequently, martyrdom. Had not Christ been lifted up he could never have drawn all men unto him. The servant is not greater than his master, the disciple is not better than his lord. It is enough that the servant be as his master and the disciple as his lord. Satan, unable longer to enslave the bodies of the colored race, is now forging chains for their souls. To proclaim liberty to the bondman cost billions of treasure and hundreds of thousands of lives, but in this battle of truth with error, the religion of Jesus with that of Satan, a faithful testimony by the ministers of the cross will bring victory. Utter this testimony. Deliver these bound souls. Save this glorious land, and heaven itself shall be more beautiful, more melodious, because of your labors in the Lord.

—A story of a minister's pluck is related of Rev. Dr. Meador of Washington. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company had placed a repair shop and round-house immediately in the rear of his church—the Fifth Baptist—and the work there on the Sabbath sometimes obliged him to suspend worship. No attention being paid to his protest, he entered suit, and, after years of persistence, has at last obtained, in the highest court, a decree of damages to the amount of $5,000, with liberty to renew the suit every three years until the nuisance is abated; and this he has successfully done, securing damages three times. The B. & P. R. R. now very wisely decide to remove their shop and round-house to some other locality. There is nothing like perseverance in a good thing.

—The Danish Synod at its recent session, passed a resolution to the effect that no secret society members should be tolerated in their churches.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

LIVINGSTON, Ky., Jan. 18th, 1887.

It was after much prayer and thought that I turned aside to visit Berea, and after three days I left it with regret that I could not prolong my stay. A most cordial reception awaited me at Bro. Fee's, whose house I made my home during my brief stay. Bro. Browne and wife showed me great kindness, and President Fairchild and his faculty could not have been more cordial. Accepting an invitation from Bro. Garry I met Bro. Myer of the A. M. A. and several members of the Faculty in the parlor of the Boarding Hall, and spent a social half-hour before supper was announced. The spacious dining room was occupied by, I should judge, 150 intelligent, eager young men and women. The tables were substantially provided, and everything was neat, orderly and well-appointed.

On Sabbath morning I preached to a grandly inspiring audience whose undivided attention was deserving of commendation. By request of Pres. Fairchild at 3 o'clock I spoke on the secret lodge system at a meeting specially called for that purpose. The attendance under the circumstances and the marked interest were noteworthy, whatever were the merits of the talk I gave on my observations and the incidents I had mainly gathered since coming South. Attendance at evening service was good when by request I filled Prof. Wright's appointment to preach. This morning I spoke a few words to the students, and commending them and the noble work of Berea College to God for his blessing, we parted, doubtless never to meet here again.

When departing Bro. Fee, though infirm in health, said, "I must accompany you as far as the 'Three Taverns';" and so, recounting the wonderful deliverances that God had wrought when death seemed imminent at the hands of seven different infuriated mobs, and pointing to places of historic incidents, we walked to the depot, where after a hearty benison and God-speed, from one whose mildness and candor disarms even hatred itself, I took the train for this place.

GEO. W. CLARK.

This old veteran in reform and prodigy of song is doing solid work and is right in his element among the colored schools and churches in the South. When we separated at Knoxville, he said, "I have spoken and sung to twenty-one different audiences since I came South, which makes one for each evening and two extra for each Sabbath in the time." Much of the intervening time is given to song and earnest private conversation, in which he never fails to rebuke intemperance, tobacco and the lodge, in no unmeaning terms. His purpose is to remain South during the winter, if health and means permit. He is not a man of fortune, and must pay $3 and sometimes more for every one hundred miles he travels. When we parted he had received one collection of only $1.26. It would be a very commendable thing to sustain this veteran brother in his work by sending through the N. C. A. office such sums as you can spare, which will not be squandered or misapplied.

A GLEAM OF COMING DAY.

While visiting the ministers of Knoxville I called upon a man whom I found cordial, intelligent and, in my judgment, the best posted Mason I have met in Tennessee. He was above that contemptible, evasive lying so frequently met among members of the order. He said, "Mr. Stoddard, I am the Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of colored Masons in the State of Tennessee, and every objection you have made against Masonry is true. I was re-elected over my protest, and have deliberately made up my mind that when my present term of office expires I will have nothing more to do with it. I went in when younger than I am now, and was pleased with the fun and frolic. I was sold at auction when a boy, and had no family when I became a Mason. I now have a home and enjoy being with my family much more than in the lodge and with its members. There is nothing but expense and show in Masonry, and our people are getting sick and tired of it. The colored lodges in this city and this State are doing no good, and unless there is a change Masonry will die out within ten years. When the war closed ministers came down here from the North and just filled this country full of lodges, and when they had got rich on the spoils taken from our poor people, they went back North to enjoy their ill-gotten gains. I know Bro. Countee well, and am thoroughly acquainted with that whole affair at Memphis. I think Bro. Countee sincere, but unwise in his methods," etc. The above is the substance of what the G. M. said, and most of it in his own words. His defence of Odd-fellowship was on the ground of its insurance, but he readily conceded that it would be far better for the people to bestow their charities through the church and thus honor Christ and his Bride, but thought it would require time and patience to make the people see it.

DARKNESS BEFORE THE DAWN.

My next call was upon a pastor who had not only refused to join any secret order, but had spoken against them. His home was humble and he seemed in limited circumstances. He had but partially recovered from a severe sickness during which he had received less attention than he might reasonably have expected from his people, though some had been very kind. He had been told that if he would unite with the Odd-fellows his initiation fee would be paid for him, and he would receive $3 per week and have watchers furnished. His reply was: "Show me authority from the Word of God, or in the example of Christ, for binding myself to obey laws that are unknown to me, and I will join your order. Wicked men might get control of the order and vote that I must kill somebody, and then I must become a murderer or break my oath. I can't do that. The good Master has taken care of me for twenty-eight years and I am going to trust him rather than the lodge."

I admired the fortitude of this poor brother with his wife and two bright babies to care for, and pitied him from the bottom of my heart when he said, "My church is in trouble over this question. My salary is not paid, and there is a move made to send me away because I am unpopular." Hasn't somebody got a few dollars to help this brother, who can be reached through the N. C. A. Treasurer, as I do not wish to expose him to the general persecution of the craft by giving his name without his consent? The uniform testimony of the colored pastors has been that the "societies," as they call them, are doing the church of Christ, and consequently the people, great harm; but some of these good brethren claim that the orders are a necessity under existing circumstances, as a means to a better, more intelligent union and perfect confidence in each other. While it is not difficult to show that the church could do far more and better with the same means than the lodge does or can, for the poor, it is not so easy to induce them to abandon and stand squarely against a system into which so many of their members have gone. The case is one calling for patience and prayer. Let us abound in both.

J. P. STODDARD.

ON TO RICHMOND.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 13, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I had expected to make a flank movement on this city by way of Hampton and Norfolk; but old Winter had laid his icy hand on the Potomac and the James and navigation is suspended. So I came direct, and found it much less difficult than did Gen. Grant in 1864. I reached here at 3 P. M. of the 11th and went to see Rev. John Jasper, the distinguished pastor of Mt. Zion Baptist church. I found him in bad health but improving. He was born in 1812 and has lived in this city sixty-five years. He is tall, very black, and scarcely gray. He says that his mother was 106 years old when she died, and was but slightly gray. His church numbers over 2,000 members and seems strongly attached to him, though of late he has had aid in his pastoral work. He says he never joined any secret order, and frequently speaks against them as injurious to the cause of religion and public morals. In order that there may be no excuse for them, he has favored the organization within the church of an open society for the relief of poor saints. His main objection is, that in these orders Christians are "unequally yoked together with unbelievers," and are largely under their control. He expressed his sympathy with my work and bade me God speed, but could not invite me to speak to his people, as they did not invite any one to their pulpit but regularly ordained Baptist ministers. He said he did not know more than one or two colored ministers in the city who did not belong to some secret order. Most of them belonged to several, and the churches, both white and colored, were ruled by them. He expected to do what he could but thought the work one of great difficulty.

The next minister I called on was Rev. J. H. Presby, a returned missionary from Africa. He received me with joy, and expressed a warm sympathy with my work. He thought all the churches ought to be visited and the truth presented, and believed there would be little difficulty in getting a hearing. He promised to go with me to see some of the pastors, and next morning we called on Rev. Richard Wells, who has lived fifty years in this city and is NATIONAL FEALTY TO GOD.

CINCINNATI, O., Jan. 14, '87.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In the tower of the cathedral at Strasburg there is a clock, wonderful in its combinations, marvelously complicated. The praises of the maker were spoken by all the people. The reigning prince became jealous and cast him into prison. The condition of his being liberated was a promise that he would never make another like it. This he stoutly refused to give. Then the prince ordered his eyes to be put out. The artist asked to be led to the tower that he might adjust his clock before the sentence be executed. He touched a secret spring which deranged the machinery and the work was spoiled forever. No artist in Europe could restore it. The workman and his work went out together.

The nation is the creature of God, born in his providence, and upheld and guided by his power. Let a nation reject its God and he touches the secret spring of national life and the machinery of government ceases to move and destruction is inevitable. The National Reform Association is seeking to save our nation by persuading her to swear eternal fealty to the God of nations and so avoid forever a fatal separation from him who is her author and life.

On last Sabbath morning I preached in the 4th Presbyterian church, Rev. R. H. Leonard, pastor, on the Dominion of Christ. There are 220 members in this congregation and they have a Sabbath-school of 250 children. Bro. Leonard is a National Reformer from principle. He keeps his people abreast with the reforms of the day. At 3 P. M. I preached in Smith and Nixon Hall, on "The Basis of Moral Legislation." This service was held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. They were disorganized last summer and it is only two weeks since the lines have been taken up again. Mrs. P. R. Worman is president and Miss Mary A. Howard, secretary. They have only 100 members. They held a meeting last Thursday afternoon to make arrangements for starting a coffee-house. They expect to start several in the city.

At 7:30 I preached in Trinity M. E. church. Rev. A. C. Hirst, D. D., pastor. The doctor is from Pittsburgh and has the reform spirit. He is the same type of man as Prof. D. McAllister, L. L. D., of Beaver Falls. Clear, direct, forcible, convincing, touching in his speech, he is a man of the people and for the people. The theme was, "The Reforms needed for the Hour." Three thousand little handbills containing the subject were printed and distributed. The doctor has one of the best young men's leagues in the church. Their work is invaluable. They mean to "push things." There are 550 members in this congregation and 700 scholars in their Sabbath-school. Their missionary tells me it will be up to 1,000 before the winter closes.

On Monday afternoon I attended the Presbyterian Ministers' meeting. The subject was "Christian Education." The paper was read by Rev. J. C. Wyckoff. This brother is conducting a classical school in the city. The paper was replete with valuable information. An alarm was sounded against the wide-spread tendency to secularize our public school system. Some of the brethren thought the remedy was for the churches to set up independent schools.

I expressed my convictions as follows: "I do not believe in abandoning our public schools. That were to give up the ship. Our system of instruction is an integral part of the Republic. Its relation to the state is vital. We have here a territory about equal to Europe. They have 334,000,000, we have 60,000,000. They have nineteen governments, mostly monarchical; we have one republic. They speak different languages, we use one. Immigrants come here from all those nations. We put them in the crucible of our public schools and in one generation they are Americanized. What the public schools are the nation will be. This is a Christian nation—Christian in her origin and history and life. A Christian nation ought to have a Christian government. It ought to be impossible for an avowed infidel or atheist to hold office. It ought to be impossible for immoral legislation to obtain in this land. A Christian government ought to have a Christian school system. This Christian nation has a right to demand it. It ought to be impossible for an ungodly man to teach the children of this people. The Bible ought to be in every school in the land. The church should not abandon our schools, but insist upon the rights of a Christian people in them. The schools should be Christianized."

On Tuesday evening I preached before Lane Theological Seminary on the kingly authority of Christ. Arrangements for this service were made by my friend, Prof. L. J. Evans, D. D., the chairman of the faculty. His prayer was as strongly National Reform as I ever heard offered. This Seminary has been in operation since 1832. They have graduated nearly 1,000 students. Bro. White tells me that in 1834 one hundred students and some professors left in a body because the trustees would not allow their Abolition views expressed. They bought a canal boat and went to Toledo, carrying on their recitations all the way. From there they footed it to Oberlin. After this Lane Seminary was a pronounced anti-slavery institution. They have five acres of ground and several buildings. The income of their property is $19,000 annually. In the recent death of Mr. Preserved Smith, father of the professor, the Seminary lost a valuable friend. In his last will and testament he left $15,000 to a scholarship which he had before established, $10,000 to the library, and $40,000 on condition that $200,000 additional endowment be raised. He had given more than this before. There are professors, viz., Rev. John De Witt, D. D., Rev. L. J. Evans, D. D., Rev. E. D. Morris, D. D., Rev. W. H. Roberts, D. D., and Rev. H. P. Smith, D. D. There are forty-eight students this year. It is a Presbyterian institution.

On Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock I addressed the Law School of Cincinnati College. There are six professors in the faculty. Hon. Jacob D. Cox, L. L. D., is Dean, and also President of the Cincinnati University. There are ninety students in the senior class. The junior is not so large. The Dean very kindly brought both classes together at that time. My subject was, "The Basis of Legislative Reform." They listened for an hour with undivided attention. It was a new field to them. If there is anything in the heartiest clapping of hands I ever heard after a National Reform lecture, and anything in their crowding around me and shaking hands vigorously and expressing their high appreciation of the address, then I certainly had the sympathy of the audience. The Law School is located in the College buildings, on Walnut street. They have a library of nearly 4,000 volumes.

On Wednesday evening I preached in the Poplar St. Presbyterian church, Rev. J. C. White, pastor. The little room was filled with attentive hearers. It goes without saying that the people are ripe for moral reforms. On Friday evening I am to preach in the Cumminsville Presbyterian church, Rev. J. M. Anderson, pastor, on "the Gospel for the Nations." The door is wide open here.

On Friday evening last week I attended the union prayer-meeting in the First Presbyterian church. Several persons asked for the facts given in a short address on Foreign Missions. The first missionary society was organized in Northamptonshire, England, 1784. In 1792 William Carey was sent to India. By manufacturing indigo he earned $450,000. He gave it all to the mission. As professor in the Royal College at Port William he earned $125,000. This he also gave to the mission. At the end of forty-two years he was permitted to see twenty-six native self-sustaining congregations and a vast community under their influence. He was followed by Dr. Duff. To-day there are 89,000 native communicants and half a million under their control. At the beginning of this century there were not ten missionary societies, now there are more than one hundred. Then not more than $250,000 were given to missions; now $15,000,000 are contributed. Then there were not 200 ordained missionaries; now there are 3,000 with an army of 30,000 helpers, native and foreign, 12,000 schools with 400,000 pupils, and upwards of 2,500,000 converts. Eighty years ago the work was a little streamlet; now it is a broad and deepening river, carrying us on to the ocean of universal triumph. J. M. FOSTER.

MASONRY AND THE SALVATION ARMY.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 17, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The Salvation Army came to this city for the first time about two weeks ago. They appear to have had some success. I say "appear," because the central figure on the platform is a Freemason, into whose hands the captain places the Bible; and the Freemason reads from it and expounds the Scriptures to the congregation. Yesterday at their holiness meeting the Freemason was present and manifested his religious emotions, declaring that he felt as though he was on the "mount of transfiguration." At the close of the meeting I asked him if he had renounced Freemasonry. He replied, "No, you cannot touch me on Masonry. I am a 32-degree Mason, and it is all right; Christ is there and it is all right."

Now they may dance about the platform and the streets clapping their hands and beating their tambourines as much as they please, we are certain that that Freemason's emotions are not from the love of God. We are quite free to admit that similar emotions do naturally flow from the love of God, but here we see in the case of Freemasonry the name of Christ blasphemed, debauched and prostituted to the development of a class of spurious emotions destitute of moral principle, calculated to deceive, were it possible, even the very elect.

Does General Booth know that his captains invite Freemasons to expound the Scriptures to their congregations? This captain has been told that this man is a Freemason. Perhaps the captain does not know what Freemasonry is; but if he does not, he is not yet fitted to be a true religious teacher, especially in this period of the age when Freemasonry is rampant in nearly all the churches and holiness meetings, developing and preparing for the "Man of Sin."

This is not written with the expectation that Freemasonry will ever be cast out of the churches by the Christians within them; there is hypocrisy enough in the churches to hold Freemasonry securely nestled in its bosom. When hypocrisy is made to acknowledge the badness of Freemasonry, it will plead for a place in the churches for it on the ground of the wheat and tares growing together until the harvest; admitting, meanwhile, that if Freemasons were to become Christians they would cease to be Masons. Hypocrisy is too blind to see its own inconsistencies. However, let every Christian know that he must stand alone, even as he must die alone; and let him know, as every Christian should know, that God has chosen him in Christ before the foundation of the world. "Foreordained unto adoption as sons through Jesus Christ unto himself according to the good pleasure of his will to the praise of the glory of his grace." Having believed "were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise." See Ephesians, 1st chapter.

In this faith we can stand though assailed by every foe to God and man, knowing that we "were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." John 1: 13. God will not pass upon us finally in a body as churches, but individually; let us take care, however, how we tamper with iniquity, seeing to it that we do not fail to "cry aloud and spare not, showing God's people their sins" committed by associating in church fellowship with Freemasons and other lodge idolaters. We may do well to remember meanwhile how Elijah met the fathers of Masonry on Mount Carmel and quietly vanquished them by fire from heaven; and know that God is always with the righteous. Churches, holiness people, and the Salvation Army people are too much guided by emotions rather than principles of righteousness as to what Christianity is. It is certain that God is going to judge this whole world on principles of righteousness; and people blinded to truth by their own sweet emotions of professed love to God will be punished with those who receive not the love of truth.

WILLIAM FENTON.

SCHUYLER'S LAKE LODGE PLANS A REPLY.

On the occasion of an Anti-masonic lecture in Schuyler's Lake, N. Y., in November, Masons contented themselves with frowns and the petulant remark, that the lecturer was setting wives against husbands and ought to be drummed out of town; but December 29th, they designedly made the installation of officers in the lodge public, and engaged lawyer Henry and the Rev. Mr. Ward, Universalist minister of Richfield Springs, to prepare addresses in reply.

Being urged by a Mason, I entered the room, and found an audience of fifty or sixty persons, consisting of twenty-five women, two or three children, twenty aproned lodgemen, and ten or fifteen cowans. A portion of the church choir were present and conducted the singing. One of the songs, as explained by Mr. Henry, had been composed to aid in extinguishing a debt of nearly a million, which had been incurred in building the Masonic temple in New York, and had contributed greatly to that purpose.

Rev. Mr. Ward prefaced the proceedings with prayer, mainly distinguished by frequent mention of "The Institution," absence of the name of Jesus Christ, and designation of God as "The Grand Architect." After installation the addresses, which were mainly composed of fulsome praise and innuendo, were delivered. Rev. and lodge chaplain Ward stated that he entertained the warmest feelings for the lodge, for twenty-two years ago he was here made a Mason. The Master could not be other than a loyal and moral man, from the requirements of the installation. Masonry taught men to walk uprightly, like the straight-grown tree, so that they could do no ill. Those who went around carping against it, would cut a better figure in political, religious, and, he dare say, family life, if they lived up to the rules of the order. Freemasonry was good. None could be more opposite in religion, politics, and otherwise, than himself and the Presbyterian minister at the "Springs," and it was only in the lodge that they could understand one another. This had often been a subject of remark and congratulation between them.

It is the harmony of the yoke. The statement that he was here made a Mason is confirmatory of the rumor that two rich men plotted the expulsion of a poor man to secure his admission. The "requirements" were embraced in a species of obligation, which in the light of expositions and history was apparently for show, to propitiate the public.

Like the preceding speaker, Mr. Henry had been precluded from preparation by official duties, but would read a historical sketch of the lodge, prepared by himself several years since for the corner-stone of the court house. The lodge had first been inaugurated in Richfield in 1808, held meetings until 1830, discontinued; resumed in 1849, and was subsequently removed to Odd-fellows' hall in this village, making a continuous existence of seventy-nine years. It had made 300 Masons, among whom were men of influence and wealth.

It is a tradition that Schuyler's Lake lodge, previous to 1826, existed independent of Richfield Springs lodge, and, therefore, the original has never been revived. I believe that it is also stated on Masonic authority in the "History of Otsego County," that the present lodge was opened in Richfield Springs subsequently to 1850. By what right does the present historian include an interruption of nineteen years? Was it a hibernation? The lodge has collected $6,000 for initiations, but the most perceptible result has been a reduction in church membership from hundreds to scores.

He added extemporaneously that Masonry had existed hundreds of years, always would exist, and no man or set of men could break it up. An institution was known by the company it kept. George Washington was a Mason, and found time amidst multitudinous public duties to mingle with his brethren in the lodge room. Masons did not seek controversies to prove Masonry was good; they knew that it was and that was enough. Others might denounce it if they chose, but they were satisfied to pass such by in silence. Occasionally a Mason spoke against it, but they were few and its enemies. All who were silent were its friends. It is not true that Masons are bound to hang together by an oath or obligation. He had joined the order in 1867, on attaining his majority. Freemasonry had never hurt, but had done him much good in causing him to walk uprightly, and without it he might have become a very mean man.

Freemasonry had its inception less than two hundred years ago, and that it spread over every country which was inhabited by Europeans in twenty or thirty years, is proof of its being then new, as novelties spread with greatest rapidity; but that it has reached maturity now is evidenced by a seed-time of minor orders. Washington wrote the year preceding his death, that he had not entered a lodge but once or twice in thirty years, and that it had not his approbation is evident from his advising a friend that Masonry is a benevolent institution which may be employed for the worst as well as for the best of purposes. If not bound together by oaths, why do Masons have signs of distress, which they must answer under penalty of having their throats cut across? If silence is their token of friendship, they fear few enemies.

Mr. Palmer, "High Priest" of the chapter at Richfield Springs, said, on invitation, that he thought with the father who advised his son, that all good men in and out of the lodge were good Masons, but not all in the lodge were good men. This son had asserted that he was invited to join, but the speaker did not think that this ever happened, it being a case of strong imagination.

"Crazy," "strong imagination," and "liar," are interchangeable terms which have ever been used to discredit truth. It may be inferred from the above statement that neither the good nor the bad are benefited by the lodge, and the improvement of morals is a delusion—a deduction their adversaries have in all time drawn.

After general invitation to speak, all were invited to supper, and the meeting closed with Christless prayer. Your informant now found leisure to examine the altar, the twin pillars Jachin and Boaz, and the three brazen candlesticks. Other implements and accessories were no doubt enclosed in divers boxes which were stored in the room for the preparation of candidates. The question arises, If those who cause wives to dissuade husbands from the lodge ought to be drummed out of town, why should not those who employ the same means (public discussion) in its favor, be subjected to the same usage? Why frown down, or otherwise seek to abridge free speech?

BIBLE LESSONS.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON VI.—February 6.—Lot's Choice.—Gen. 13:1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness.—Matt. 6:33.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

Abram had gone down into Egypt because there was a famine in Canaan. God gave him no orders to go to Egypt. He only had trouble and made trouble while he was there. It would perhaps have been better to have stayed where God put him, and trusted the Lord in the days of famine. But at last they returned to the land of Canaan, Abram and his wife, and Lot. And Abram was very rich in cattle and silver and gold. The prospering hand of God was upon him. He went up out of Egypt, from the fat, low, level valley of the Nile, to the highlands with their refreshing breezes, their living streams, their snow-crowned mountains. Egypt had civilization, architecture, and splendor, but a famine had the blessing of God, and he had become so rich in cattle that there was hardly room for him and for Lot. Now an Arab sheik is considered rich with one or two hundred tents, from sixty to a hundred camels, a thousand sheep, and as many goats. But Abram was very rich. He possessed not only gold, but silver, which was very rare in Egypt, and was known as "white gold." Gold was more common, and was much more frequently used. He was rich, or, as the Hebrew word signifies, "heavy," or as we should say in modern parlance, he was "one of the solid men." Wealth is a burden, and it makes men "solid," or heavy. Many a good man has lost all he had of Christian energy, and all ability to run with speed the Christian race, by being burdened with the wealth of the world; gained in care, kept in fear, a burden in the use, and a calamity in its loss.

He went on his journey from the south to Bethel, unto the place where his tent had been at the beginning. Troubled in Egypt, he sought the place where he had worshiped God before, and there called on the name of the Lord. Well would it be for many a one who in the days of famine has gone down into Egypt for bread and help, if they would leave the world which has deceived and betrayed them, and return again to God and his altar, renewing their allegiance to him, going back to where the Lord met them and blessed them, and entering anew into fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.

And Lot, also, who went with Abram, had flocks and herds. He still clung to Abram. He might quite as well have stayed in Egypt. He was not walking with God. He was walking with Abram. But the flocks consumed the herbage, and as they were moving to and fro they required much room, and now, having become so rich, they lacked room to dwell in.

This is one of the calamities of riches. When men add house to house, it is that they may dwell alone in the land. Great estates and broad acres are often the destruction of neighborhood and fellowship. The poor that should always be with us and bless us by their presence, are driven away, and great land-holders reside in solitude, surrounded by their retainers and their servants, forming a society much inferior to that which is enjoyed when humble folk dwell side by side in unity and love.

Lot chose "all the plain of Jordan." He greedily took the best of everything, but in choosing the best he chose the worst. They separated; Abram dwelt in the land of Canaan, on the highlands, over the home of health and freedom, of high aspirations and noble people; and Lot dwelt in the cities of the plain, and pitched his tent toward Sodom. The fertility of the plain enabled the people to pack themselves closely; hence cities arose, and these have almost always been centers of sin and corruption. There were five of these cities, Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zibolim, and Zoar,—probably in the plain of Jordan just north of the Dead Sea. And Lot pitched his tent toward Sodom. Day after day he went nearer and nearer, pitching his tent toward Sodom. Most likely his wife had got sick of packing and moving and wandering. She could not endure it. She wanted to be settled in a house, and be a pilgrim no longer. Doubtless the children went down to see the city, and came back and told the tale, and nothing would do but they must move to the city. So

Lot, from pitching his tent toward Sodom, finds himself at last in Sodom. And the men of Sodom were sinners before the Lord exceedingly. Lot's children found pleasure in Sodom, but Lot only found trouble. He was a just man, and had made a great mistake; he was a righteous man, and in seeing and hearing he vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds. But he vexed his own soul. Why did he not get up and get out? The spirit of Sodom had got hold of him; his family were there, his wife, his children, his friends, his associates, and it was not easy to get away. It is much easier to keep out of Sodom in the beginning than to get out when once settled in it. Lot found only sorrow there. He shared the calamities of the people; he was captured by an invading host, and only escaped through Abram's intervention. He lived on unconscious of danger, while Abram, afar on the hills, knew more about the fate of Sodom than Lot who dwelt within it. While Lot was vexing his soul with their unlawful deeds, Abram was entertaining angels and talking with God. While Lot's children were mingling in the riot and revelry of the godless Sodomites, Abram was interceding with God to spare the guilty cities of the plain; and when at last destruction came, a part of Lot's family lingered and went down in the fiery storm, his wife looked back upon her home and her children, and perished by the way, and the daughters, who with him escaped to the mountain, carrying with them the knowledge of Sodom's vice and intemperance, involved him in sin and shame. And while Abram, still walking with God, was on the mountain in fellowship with his Maker, the curtain falls on the self-seeking Lot, destitute of flocks and herds, stripped of his possessions, turned out of home, hiding for refuge in a cave, and at last passing from view in drunkenness, shame, and degradation.

Let Christians learn a lesson. Let men of faith follow the example of faithful Abram, and let those who selfishly follow the course that Lot pursued, beware lest they share a fate like that by which he was overtaken.—Notes from the Christian, Boston.

OBITUARY.

REV. ALBERT L. POST was born at Montrose in April, 1809, educated at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., studied law and was admitted to the bar of Susquehanna county. In 1837 he began the publication of the Spectator, a journal devoted to the freedom of the colored race. He was a staunch and fearless advocate of anti-slavery. In 1841 he was ordained to the Christian ministry, and devoted much of his time to evangelistic labors. For a time he was the president of the American Baptist Free Mission Society. He was a man of marvelous Christian integrity and conscientiousness, and would rather suffer than sacrifice a principle. Courageous as a lion in what he felt to be the right, but gentle as a little child in the simplicity of his life. Ever the friend of the oppressed he lived for the benefit of others. He was one of the early leaders in that movement which led up to that event which made our country the land of the free. This one by one these veterans are passing away from us, after living to see the principle so dear to their hearts embodied as the statute law of the United States. All honor to their devotion to the inalienable principle, freedom.—Scranton, Pa. Republican.

T. R. SHINER died at his residence near Catawba, Caldwell county, Missouri, Jan. 14th, 1887, aged sixty-five years and five days. He was a member of the United Brethren church, and has taken the Christian Cynosure ever since the Chicago fire. He was a lover of the church until secrecy was admitted into its fold. His testimony to the last was, "Jesus is still with me." He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn the loss of a dear husband and father. His friends were numerous and kind. He lived a godly life and set an example worthy of imitation.

MARRIED.

YAUKEY—IMMEL.—At the residence of the bride's father, near West Salem, Wayne county, Ohio, January 13, 1887, by Elder J. C. Hoover, Mr. Jereiah S. Yaukey, of Fayetteville, Franklin county, Pennsylvania, and Miss Maggie E. Immel, of West Salem, Ohio, were joined in marriage.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 27, 1887

FAITH CURE is a novelty only because faith has declined. One hundred and sixteen years ago the poet Cowper wrote of a sick friend:

"I have no expectation of his recovery except by a signal interposition of Providence in answer to prayer. His case is clearly out of the reach of medicine; but I have seen many a sickness healed, where the danger has been equally threatening, by the only Physician of value."

FAMILIAR SPIRIT WORSHIP.—The extract below, sent us by the gentlemanly editor of the Saratoga Eagle, is the first and only public intimation of Dr. Newman's belief; and this is like the Virginia cape, point-no-point. The Bible teems with recognitions of spiritual beings, good and evil, in the belt of eternity which lies next to time, "an innumerable company of angels," and "legions of devils." Christ, who came in from the unseen world, received worship; and Satan desired to. All the angels refused worship. Demons or devils inhabited the pagan shrines and received homage as idols, who, Paul said, were "nothing in the world." The tables and cups used in the idol feasts were tables and cups of devils (1 Cor. 10: 20). To consult or worship them was a capital crime among the Hebrews. No oath is sacred and no government possible in polytheism or spirit worship, but force. If Dr. Newman consults the spirits, he is an idolater. If his wife is a medium, she is a tool of necromancy or incantation.

DR. NEWMAN'S CREED.

The Rev. Dr. John P. Newman of Washington, in response to the statement that he is a spiritualist, says:

All I have to say about modern spiritualism and my belief in it is this: I pin my faith on the Bible and what it contains, and do not intend to lose the spirit of its teachings simply because they may have been perverted by others. I see no reason to doubt that there is a constant communion between the two worlds. Christ and his angels are continually watching and working for the salvation of men, and I think the spirits of those who have been here, especially the good, are also in communion with this world. I see no reason why, if Christ comes to this world, St. Paul, St. John and Wesley and Luther should not also. When I die I don't want to play on a little golden harp through all eternity in heaven. I expect to continue the work begun here on earth. If you can see modern spiritualism in that statement, I will stand by it.

CHURCH GOVERNMENT.

Ten years ago the Presbyterians opened the discussion whether ruling elders were eligible as moderators of their General Assembly. The church South has voted "aye"; and the main body, or church North, is likely to. In 1843, forty-four years ago, a hard-drinking lord opened the Scottish Assembly in Edinburgh; and a titled layman who drank liquor, presided in a seven hours' meeting of the Free Church in Exeter Hall, London.

These memories are stirred in us by an able and agreeable tract on the elder-moderator question by Dr. Gray of the Interior. Though long, we have read the article through, and re-read a large part for its intrinsic excellency. Though our readers are not all Presbyterians, they are all believers in church government and whatever concerns human and national welfare.

Dr. Gray holds that God gave elders to the church (Num. 11: 25) and that inspired men continued eldership (Acts 14: 23). Indeed, there never was an organization requiring discipline but committed the oversight of that discipline to some certain men; and whoever reads his Bible knows that those men overseeing the church throughout are called elders. And while the whole mass of Christ's disciples spake as the Spirit gave them utterance in the New Testament churches there were elders that ruled well (guided well) but did not preach; and as in both Old and New Testaments elders and deacons were "looked out" (elected, chosen) by the people and ordained by God in answer to prayer. The Christian people who chose or appointed them elders can elect them moderators.

But the trouble is the denominations have switched off from the Word of God to their own devisings. The elders must rule by the rule laid down by Christ in Matt. 18, which requires in the last resort to "Tell it unto the church" to which the offender belongs; and that is final. No appeal lies to any other man or body of men. Presbyterians allow three appeals to movable church courts, unknown to the Bible, the last, or court of final appeal consisting in one case of six hundred judges meeting once a year, which is the acme of Presbyterian absurdity.

The Congregationalists have dropped their Scriptural eldership, which they had for more than one hundred years, and adopted an absurdity equally preposterous, viz., to set a church consisting of men, women and children to try and decide questions of sinful conduct. The Friends "take a member under care for evil conduct;" but they have elders to do it. That is loving oversight. But the elders themselves are amenable to the body which elected them; though in the wise and faithful administration of their duties we are commanded to "obey them that have the rule over you and submit yourselves." Thus discipline as ordered by Christ, like criminal state-trials, must be near home where the offence is committed; and if that were done with prayer and supplication in the Spirit, the hurts of Zion would be healed, the churches have rest and increase, and Christ's kingdom would come.

The only use for synods, assemblies, conferences, councils and associations is to discuss and settle such questions as salvation by ceremonies or "about circumcision," slavery and secret societies. But when God brings up one of these fundamental questions involving the life of the church and of society itself the devil always springs some relatively unimportant matter to stave off discussion. A slave was seized in Ohio, charged with no wrong and brought to Cincinnati and put for the night in the third story of a hotel. He rose at midnight, plunged through the window, and lay dead on the side-walk. A while after the General Assembly met there and discussed with great zeal and learning the re-baptism of converted Catholics when there were none on hand to baptize!

It is now settled, and such men as President George of Geneva College, and Dr. Gray of the Interior have settled it, that the lodge is organized deism and its worship Gentile or devil-worship; and a Congress is called in Chicago to say what shall be done. If the Interior, Evangelist and Herald and Presbyterian will follow the noble Dr. McCosh and the now-sainted Hodge of Princeton, and endorse and urge the call to this Congress, those three papers can and will bring together a body of Presbyterians to meet the Lutherans, Methodists and other saints and followers of Christ who will be there, and by truth and the Spirit of God draw every child of God out of the lodges; save our Southern brethren whom slavery kept ignorant and the lodge-devils have seized; and in a little while there will be no need of premillennial conventions to decide about the mode of Christ's coming, for he himself will be here!

"RELIGION IN SCHOOLS."

The Christian Statesman reports at large an exceedingly able paper read by E. E. White, late president of Purdue University, now superintendent of schools in Cincinnati. The paper was read at the late National Educational Convention in Topeka, Kansas. The incident is more interesting because Cincinnati was the first city to exclude the Bible and religious worship from the public schools.

Mr. White says of the seven motives to appeal to in training the will, duty is the last and highest; and this, in its last form, is an "imperative obligation to do God's will." He says: "The great majority of American schools are still religious;" and "the Bible is permitted in four-fifths of American schools;" and "the most impressive forms of presenting religious sanctions to the mind and heart are prayer and the reverent reading of the Bible."

This strong paper was discussed, and after a speech from Missouri against it, a plain Kansas man arose and began to speak. At the call, "Platform," "Platform!" he clambered slowly up, and, though hesitating and unused to such a post, he gave his name, Wm. Baker, and forced his ideas into utterance, and changed the tone of the house from aversion and excitement into bursts of applause.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he began; "I believe you all wish morality in the public schools. I do not think there is one here who does not wish Socialism and Nihilism banished from this land of ours. And I tell you it is the absence of morality that breeds Socialism. This is what makes men and women disobey the laws, and seek to destroy the State. You all agree then that morality must be taught; but where is your standard? If I teach in the school room that three feet make a yard, and an argumentative child says, 'Our teacher, last year, taught that two feet make a yard,' what is the teacher to do? Why send to Washington, get the standard and the child is satisfied. So with regard to morality. A child says, 'Such a boy took twelve eggs out of a nest in the next yard; is that right?' I say 'No;' but the child answers, 'Our teacher last winter said, if there were plenty of eggs in the nest we might take nine or ten.' Now, ladies and gentlemen, I want some standard in such cases to measure morals with. This question of morality is to be the salvation or the ruin of the United States. If you are going to keep the States together; if to hold the people to obey the laws; if you will have boys obedient to parents; to keep them from destroying your property; you must keep them from breaking up the desks; and if you desire all this, and much more, I ask, when you have put the Bible out of the schools you must have a moral guide; and again I ask, where is your standard? What determines right and wrong when the Bible is gone?"

Mr. Baker continued some time in this strain, and sat down amid applause.

THE FIRST WHIRLS OF THE CYCLONE.

We again call attention to ex-Senator Pomeroy's reminiscences. His recent articles are producing a marked effect on our readers; and some in whose judgment we are wont to confide, think they should be bound and issued in a small volume. None of the histories, Greeley's, Grant's, or other stories of the war, contain these first whirls in the national cyclone; and when those who lived at the time, and saw the beginning of tempest and heard its first crash and roar, are dead, the rebellion will be known only as a series of battles between armies.

During the whole time covered by Mr. Pomeroy's sketches, the Pope was plotting with his American cardinals. Jeff. Davis was sending envoys to Rome; and the ten Masonic lodges in the District of Columbia were initiating Indians to fight the Government that fed them, and were dragging down the army officers, who had been educated at the Government's expense, from their loyalty to the Republic. If Senator Pomeroy could avail himself of the aid of the loyal Masons who quit the District lodges when they all went for secession; if he could thus uncap the national volcano and show us its subterranean fires, he would entitle himself to the gratitude of the present generation, and teach future generations the great lesson which D'Israeli (Lord Beaconsfield) said ministers must now learn, viz., that "Secret societies have everywhere reckless agents, who countenance assassination and produce massacre."

Why was Seward struck by the assassin's dagger, and Andrew Johnson made President in an hour after Lincoln's death? We know that Seward was an Anti-mason and Johnson had just been taking Masonic degrees. And if the men and women of the United States could see the lodges uncovered and their secret agencies in the rebellion disclosed, the effect on the popular mind would be similar to that produced on the people of England by the discovery of the Guy Fawkes' plot, and the gun powder under the Parliament House on the 5th of November, 1605.

"THE HECTIC GHOST."

Will Carleton has written another poem. Some benevolent women have undertaken "A Home for Consumptives" in the city of Brooklyn, New York; and Mr. Carleton read a poem at the meeting, and by request of the managers, last month. This is an extract from it:

God bless each heart
That loves the helpless sick, and takes their part;
God load with radiant favors, swift and sure;
The self-elected sisters of the poor. * * *
The angels that we read about are fair;
Their sylph-like forms float lightly through the air;
Their wings with heavenly radiance are bedecked;
Their robes with glittering star-dust all are flecked;
And sweet it is mid mingled hope and doubt
To feel that they are hovering about;
But give me in life's mingled sun and storm
An angel's spirit in a woman's form!

Any one who wishes to aid a charity so sweetly set forth, and one which we or our children may yet need to share, can send donations to Willis L. Ogden, 73 Pierpont street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors last Saturday, seven members being present, the report of a committee on the Leuty trust fund was given verbally and partially, and the committee was continued. The expenses of the Knoxville convention were reported to be $191.75 and the special receipts to pay them $100.74. As the committee of arrangements for the National Conference of Christians on the lodge was to meet in the afternoon, a committee was appointed to confer with them respecting the co-operation of the N. C. A. A committee was also appointed to correspond with the American Publishing Co., Washington, respecting bills of expense on the N. C. A. building in that city, forwarded to the treasurer here. Another meeting of the Board is to be held Saturday of this week.

—As we are closing up our forms for the press word comes from Miss Flagg of the death of her mother last week, the burial taking place Friday. We need not say how many hearts go out in precious sympathy to our bereaved friend, nor the prayers that shall call down for her divine consolation and strength. No mother ever had a more devoted watcher—so faithful, indeed, that she is herself physically exhausted and in need of a long rest for recovery.

—The following bit of lodge bombast over General Logan is by John C. Smith, a man so full of Masonic and Odd-fellow titles and honors that we almost forgot he is Lieutenant Governor of Illinois. The Masonic press print it as a "gem" and "grand." "The pall of darkness has fallen upon our district, a shadow is o'er our valley and the angel of Death has borne away a master workman, one skilled in Ancient Craft Masonry, a student of the mysteries of the Royal Arch, and a follower of our blessed Immanuel in the order of the Temple. A Sovereign Grand Inspector General and honorary member of the Supreme Council of the Northern Masonic Jurisdiction of the U. S. of America has gone to his celestial home on high." It is astonishing that the celestial spaces do not tumble through with such a weight of lodge dignity. After all, when it came to Logan's funeral the Masons had to stomp along in the procession like other plebians, and the G. A. R. was the only order which took part in the exercises.

—Respecting the lodge, the Y. M. C. A., the 600,000 young men of Illinois of whom mention was made lately in the Cynosure—a brother objects that our words seem to cast suspicion upon brethren who do not deserve it, because the names of the Y. M. C. A. workers who do not favor a discussion of the lodge are not given. The item was written remembering the scores of letters received at this office heartily accepting the Cynosure for Y. M. C. A. reading rooms, remembering too how some of the best men connected with the Y. M. C. A. in Illinois, present and past, Moody, Whittle, Needham, Jacobs, Kean, Hitchcock, McCormick, Reynolds and others are against the orders—notwithstanding this we regret to say we believe some do not want the young men troubled about this question. It does not seem necessary to give names. The Y. M. C. A. is by its charter from God opposed to the secret lodge system just as much as against the saloon or the gambling den. We believe Christ would be pleased if effect was given to that principle by a judicious circulation of literature bearing on the subject or by addresses from worthy and pious men who have studied the subject, or by any other lawful means so that the young men of our cities who are being fooled and defrauded might be saved from this evil.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—S. E. Starry of Clarence, Iowa, so long and favorably known for his useful labors against the lodge, has been for a few years studying law and is soon expecting to move to Dakota.

—Bro. John Gardner of Aurora, Ill., a member of the N. C. A. Board, lately slipped and fell receiving a painful injury but believed not to be serious. He was unable to attend the Board meeting Saturday.

—Bro. Geo. T. Dissette, for a year a co-worker with our Illinois friends, writes from Sabetha, Kansas, that he is engaged in a mission near to that place where he has preached several times against the lodge. He sends kind remembrances to all the friends in Illinois.

—Bro. Geo. W. Clark is singing his way through the South. He was announced to give one of his unique and interesting reform entertainments in the Tabernacle church (Bro. Countee's), Memphis, last week. No one could enjoy such a trip more than the old "Liberty singer and few can profit the colored churches more than he.

—William E. Catlin, who removed some years ago from Monroe, Wis., to begin business in this city, has now gone to Florida and has located at Tarpon Springs where he proposes to plant an orange farm for his boys. While in this city he was associated with evangelist Kirkland in his good work for the wretched at the Adelphi Theater mission. He is preaching now in school-houses and intends traveling and preaching in the South.

—Elder Rufus Smith of Maryville, Mo., has been extending his bishopric outside of his own town to the cities on the Missouri river, especially in connection with the Salvation Army. At Maryville he gave the use of his fine hall to the Army. By his efforts the reformed gambler Forrest was brought out as a Christian some time ago. Another reformed gambler, Dr. Nunnelly, has come out through his influence. Elder Smith ordered a tailor there to make the doctor a new suit of clothes when he was ready to give a history of his experiences. He is highly educated, has a stentorian voice, an excellent delivery, and bids fair to surpass Sam Small and rival Sam Jones.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Contrary to all prediction and to some well laid plans, Congress ignored the tariff puzzle for a whole week, and turned its attention and energies upon the Mormon question, interstate commerce, appropriations for the militia, and upon the bill for establishing an Executive Department of Agriculture with a seat in the Cabinet for its chief. Each question was pushed to a vote, and the result will be, if all this legislation effects what was intended, that the "twin relic of barbarism" will be rooted out of Utah; the people will be relieved of grievous oppression and extortion from the railroads; the citizen soldiery of the country will be provided with arms, and other equipments; and the farmers will have an imposing figure-head at Washington to look after their special interests.

The President gave the first State reception of 1887 to the Diplomatic Corps, it being a long-established custom here to pay the first honors of the season to the representatives of foreign nations. The official world of Washington is always formally invited to these levees, and persons in private life whose presence is desired are invited informally by the host or hostess. Although the rain poured down and the wind blew furiously, the White House was filled with a brilliant throng on this occasion. The venerable Mr. Corcoran, Washington's philanthropist, came to the reception early and remained late, seated on a sofa in the Blue Parlor, where he received much attention from the guests. The President seems to have recovered his health entirely, and after the fatiguing task of three hours of hand-shaking, went to work next morning with more vim than usual.

Many people think Mr. Cleveland will call for an extra session of the Fiftieth Congress. The tariff question is in such a tangle that the revenue reformers have little hope of doing anything this session. Unless Mr. Randall does make a move, the controversy will probably exhaust in talk until the end of this session, with the prospect of an extra session being called. Hon. Frank Hurd, of Ohio, who lost his seat in Congress through too much eloquence in behalf of tariff reform, is here now, and as eager as ever for tariff legislation. He is very anxious for an extra session, so that the tariff fight may be brought on as soon as possible. He asserts that public interest in the subject is growing stronger. A few years ago when he talked tariff no one would listen. Not one man in a hundred cared then one rap about the tariff. Now he says he gets letters every day asking him to deliver lectures on the subject. He thinks the administration will hardly dare to let the treasury surplus go on piling up until next year.

There will be a Norwegian in the Fiftieth Congress in the place of the late Mr. Price of Wisconsin, and he will be one of its greatest men so far as expansion is concerned. Mr. Nils Haugen is six feet four inches and weighs three hundred pounds. He is thoroughly American in speech and manner, however, having come to this country when a baby. He was educated at Ann Arbor, Michigan, and has been in the Wisconsin legislature for several terms. He has been State Railroad Commissioner since 1882, and is also a stenographer, having made his living reporting at court at one time.

Florence McCarthy, the eccentric but brilliant Baptist elder, lawyer, journalist, and postoffice clerk, is now in Washington organizing an effort to save the youth of the city from the evils of intemperance and licentiousness. His caustic letters to Sam Jones last year in Chicago were a reasonable evidence of his hatred of tobacco, and privately he has no love for secret societies, either. His effort for young men will not help them into some grand humbug with a monstrous nomenclature and a lot of false oaths across the threshold.

The International Bricklayers' Union is not a mob, but they know how to throw a brick-bat and hit the mark. They resolved to inform all mankind that they repudiate the principles of the anarchists, socialists, communists, or any other society which is inimical to our government and laws. "The stars and stripes is the flag that should be recognized as the standard of all labor organizations."

Did Grand Worthy Chief Templar Finch, during the heat of the late Presidential campaign, issue a mandate that Good Templars "must sustain and support" the Prohibition party? If any such command went forth it failed to come to our notice. Did Grand Worthy Chief Templar Finch go into his lodge and move that the Good Templars should support the Prohibition party? We have heard that Miss Frances E. Willard and her associates did it with the W. C. T. U. in face of all fears that it would divide that grand body, but we have never heard that John B. Finch peeped Prohibition party once in the presence of his lodge satellites. If we are mistaken in these surmises, somebody will surely correct us, but we have no fear of being corrected. Does our memory betray us or did prominent officers of the Good Templars, in New York State, give themselves to the work of drawing the votes of Prohibitionists to the Republican party? Were the published stories false which represented certain prominent Good Templars' lodges, as being closed against speakers who were known to be Prohibitionists? If any local, State or national Good Templars' lodges have passed any resolutions endorsing the Prohibition party, will somebody please name them and give us full particulars? It would be fresh news because we have not seen mention of it in our exchanges. If the Prohibition party is the child of the Good Templars, at least by a one-third interest, we can see propriety in calling on the parent to own the child in its infancy, but that the child must sustain the parent is absurd.—American.

—In one of his last public addresses, Keshub Chunder Sen uttered the following words, in a spirit of prophecy, more full of truth than perhaps he intended or understood: "Christ will surely reign over India. Already his benign rule has brought about many and grand blessings, and soon in the full light of his complete revelation, darkness will pass away, and the full and everlasting light shine never to set again; for India is already won for Christ."

OUR POLE STAR NEVER SETS.

THE CYNOSURE FOR 1887.

The readers who have welcomed our weekly visits for 1886 will be pleased to know something of the plans maturing for their benefit during the coming year.

The star beams of the Cynosure have shone upon the portraits and the characters of twelve noble men as the months of 1886 have passed: David Bernard, George W. Clark, John G. Fee, Charles C. Foote, John B. Gough, J. R. W. Sloane, George Thompson, Samuel D. Greene, Nathan Brown, Philo Carpenter, John Dougall, George F. Pentecost, and Charles Francis Adams—each a noble life, full of such excellencies as all should imitate.

We have in preparation biographies of other men as worthy, and fine portraits are already of such statesmen as: SUMNER, SEWARD, WEBSTER, GLADSTONE, with HOWARD CROSBY, and BISHOP HAMLIN, and "JOHN BROWN, OSSAWATOMIE BROWN."

The complete list we do not wish to promise, since the changes of the year will make calls that cannot be anticipated. But the biographical department will be as full and rich as ever.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED by "Great Men in the State," will be completed; and will be followed by the condemnations of "Great Men in the Church," of "the Public Press, and "Out of their own Mouth." The compilation of these extracts will involve prolonged and patient labor, but the work will be made as perfect as possible. A list of papers which oppose the lodge is also preparing. This is also requiring much examination.

The center of interest for the year will be in the Christian Congress. This meeting will receive the most careful attention of the Cynosure, and the most complete report may be expected in its columns. The development of the work in the South will also be closely followed, and in every possible way encouraged, as well as the lecture work in the several States.

NO GENUINE ANTI-MASON

can afford to be without the Cynosure next year. The growing list of contributors and correspondents constantly invites companionship with some of the bravest and noblest men living. Look back over the list of hundreds who have written and you may justly dread even a short separation from their estimable company.

The Christian Cynosure will be, God willing, the paper for Christian reformers in 1887. Let it have the patronage of thousands to whom it is now a stranger.

THE HOME.

THE WIFE'S SONG.

Linger not long!—Home is not home without thee,
Its dearest tokens only make me mourn;
Oh! let its memory, like a chain about thee,
Gently compel and hasten thy return;
Linger not long!

Linger not long!—though crowds should woo thy staying,
Bethink thee—can the mirth of friends, though dear,
Compensate for the grief thy long delaying
Costs the poor heart that sighs to have thee here!
Linger not long!

Linger not long!—how long shall I watch thy coming,
As evening shadows stretch o'er moor and fell;
When the wild bee hath ceased her weary humming,
And silence hangs on all things like a spell!
Linger not long!

How shall I watch for thee when fear grows stronger,
As night grows dark and darker on the hill?
How shall I weep when I can watch no longer?
Oh, art thou absent, art thou absent still?
Linger not long!

Yet I should grieve not, though the eye that seeth thee
Gazeth through tears that make its splendor dull:
For oh, I sometimes fear, when thou art with me,
My cup of happiness is all too full!
Linger not long!

Haste—haste thee home unto thy mountain dwelling,
Haste as a bird unto his peaceful nest!
Haste as a skiff, when tempests wild are swelling,
Flies to its haven of secured rest!
Linger not long!

FATHER.

Not long a pastor received a call from a young man, whose face he remembered having seen in church, but whose acquaintance he had not made. "I have come to live in town," said the young stranger, introducing himself, "in the employment of —, and have taken a seat in the High Street church. I have ventured to call now in consequence of a letter from home upon the desirability of uniting myself with your church."

"By letter?" said the pastor.

"On profession of my faith," was the reply.

The pastor was taken by surprise. With no friends, no appeals, no "revival interest," no spiritual drumming of any kind, as the pastor put it to himself, here was a young stranger asking to enter the church.

"Yes, yes," he answered hurriedly; "yes, yes, by all means. I see you have an excellent mother."

"I have," was the quiet reply.

"And her faithful letters are telling you, That is right, that is right."

"It is a letter from father," said the young man. "We are a family of rough, overgrown boys. I am afraid poor mother would have made little headway with us. My older brothers united with the church before leaving home. They are noble Christian fellows. I am the youngest. I was not expecting this place when father left home. He only returned the night before I left. That, I suppose, is the reason why I had not followed their example."

"And you—you are a converted young man?" said the pastor, hesitating.

His visitor did not immediately reply. "I have not much experience to speak of," he at length said slowly, "if that is what you mean. I was brought up in a true Christian home. The last night before I left home father came into my room and said, 'Arthur, shall we kneel down together, and will you distinctly consecrate yourself to the Lord?' I did. It was a great help having father by my side. He seemed to seal my poor prayer by his great heart of prayer. I can't say whether I am converted or not, but I feel certain"—and he stopped—"certain that I feel towards God as I feel about father. I want to do what he would like me to do above all things else."

"That is enough," said the pastor, feelingly. "You have a good father. He is a true priest in his house."

"Oh, father, sir, he always helped us just where boys need help. We were always free to talk with him. If it had not been for father—"

Father! Yes, we believe in such fathers, and only wish they were multiplied a thousand-fold; fathers who take pains to keep close to their boys' hearts and confidence; fathers who do not think that providing for bodily wants embraces the whole duty of man; fathers who do not leave all the counsel and correction of the children to mothers; who do not wait to be summoned in great disciplinary crises only, but whose wise and firm government controls and blesses every hour; who do not believe that a "word and a blow" are the best persuasives to repentance and amendment, or that easy neglect will foster only that which is good; fathers who do not leave all the Christian influence of the household to wives, but share it, taking their full share; fathers responsible for the Christian growth of their children.

Fathers often excuse themselves and are excused from family duties by the stress and hurry of business, as if mothers had not worries and anxieties torturing their nerves, crossing their tempers, and grieving their hearts. The mother can not excuse herself if she would; and if she would, think of the sermons and homilies taking her to task and instructing her in maternal duties!

"I can not talk religion into my children," said a father in excuse for their waywardness, just as if it should be done or could be done. The discernments of youth are quick enough to discriminate between formality and earnestness, and as naturally they revolt against the one and are won by the other.

Religion can not be talked into children. It can be talked out of them. It must come like the rain and sunshine on young grasses, entering into the growth of every day, naturally, lovingly, penetrating the atmosphere of home with its life-giving power, so that when children come to the crisis of life, choosing for themselves, they choose thoughtfully and willingly Christ and his grace and truth, as the saving and uplifting elements of their character.

The best means of Christian nurture reside in the family. Pastors can do something; Sabbath-school teachers can do something. These are everything to the young who have no one else to care for them: but in Christian households these are but supplementary to parental instruction and influence. At the family altar, the daily meals, the evening hours, the shifting scenes of work and play, are the real opportunities for sowing the seeds of eternal life in young hearts and exercising that spiritual husbandry which will nurse their growth and mature the fruit.

"Why is this?" we once asked, referring to one of this character.

"It is probably a case of praying mothers and 'professing' fathers," was the answer. "They don't draw together, and this variance, be it ever so silent, tells. It is hurtful, sometimes destructive."

Are there not many praying mothers with "professing" fathers—fathers who think lightly of the family altar, easily set it aside or neglect it altogether, the wife ever seeking to excuse and make up for the delinquency. Yet what father disregards the children will easily break from. This is all the sadder because the family altar, divested of formality, is the real spring of household piety.

Three times a day a family is quite sure to sit side by side together. Table manners and table talk are the index of the family atmosphere. Whose influence is likely to be in the ascendant? Father is the greatest stranger. He is the house-band, he is the bread-winner, he is the expected one, waited for and waited on. Father! Does his approaching steps spread gladness round? Does he not come with a pleasant smile, a kind word, with hearty inquiries about this and that, which lend fresh interest to the common employments of daily life? Or does he come in and sit down silent and preoccupied, or impatient and fault-finding, or moody and indifferent?

As children are stepping on the threshold of manhood and womanhood, is father still by with vigilant affection, watching how they lay hold of the new issues and uses of life and opportunity? Is he helping them in their supreme choice? Have they learned that noble living is the true and only end of Christian education, and that this is to be attained not by steadfastness in the virtues which are easy and pleasant, but by a surrender of the whole life to the will of God in faith, affection and loyalty? Have they been taught by father's example that the wages of truth and virtue are not paid in this world's goods: that strength, health, prosperity, riches, however good in themselves, are not the best or the fitting recompense for purity, self-surrender, and spirituality? Their true recompense is imperishable and eternal.

Happy and honored is the father who has imprinted these lessons on his children!—Christian Weekly.

IKE JONES.

You don't know Ike. I am sorry to say that I do. He is the nuisance of our neighborhood. He is the result of an idea. His father, Solomon Jones, does not believe with Solomon, the King of Israel, that he who spares the rod spoils the child. He is not an old fogey, but a modern Solomon. His theory is, "You musn't work agin natur. Natur will train up a child better than you can. You must get it what it hankers after. You must let it do what it wants to. You musn't make it do what it don't want to. To whip a boy because he don't learn his lessons is cruel. If it ain't nat'ral for him to study, you've no business to make him do it." Acting on his theory, Mr. Jones would say to Isaac: "I want you to go to school to-day." "But I don't want to go," replied the boy. "Very well, then, stay at home." His mother was enjoined not to insist upon the young hopeful's doing anything against his will. When he condescended to go to school the teachers were notified that they must, in no case, chastise him or try to curb his free spirit. The result was that Isaac did not go to school very often, or learn much when he did go.

Isaac is now nearly sixteen. He is a tall, gawky, saucy fellow. He spends his time loafing about the blacksmith shop and the grocery. He is ready for any kind of mischief. He has very vague ideas in regard to other people's rights. He thinks it is a good joke to shoot the neighbor's chickens, pretending that they are game. He comes into our orchards and vineyards, and helps himself, and insults us if we try to drive him out. He thinks it's "agin natur" for us to claim all the fruit we raise.

Folks would think that Old Solomon would begin to see the folly of his theory. But he don't. He contends that Isaac will come out all right. I found him plowing in one of his fields the other day. There was a fine young growth of thistles which he was turning aside. I said to him: "Why, Mr. Jones, what are you doing? Isn't that plowing agin natur? Natur wants these thistles to grow, and you won't let them. Natur don't want wheat there, and you have no right to try to raise it." He didn't know what to say, so he yelled at his horses and cracked his whip over them. "Stop, stop," I cried. "These horses do not want to drag that plow. They are agin you, and with natur. They would rather have thistles than wheat here. But he went on without any explanation.

Next day I saw him pruning in his orchard, and I said to him: "How is this? Natur wants all those suckers to grow, for she has started them. What right have you to go agin natur, and cut them down as fast as they sprout." He muttered "Trees ain't boys," and that was all the answer I could get out of him.

But soon after I saw him breaking a colt. It didn't want to be bitted and made to work. But Mr. Jones was agin natur, in the case of the colt, with might and main. He used both curb and whip freely. I laughed; how could I help it?

He was nettled, and said: "Look here, colts is colts and boys is boys. Natur gives boys brains to tell them what to do, but colts don't know and we have to teach them."

None of my neighbors have adopted Solomon Jones' theory of family government, out and out, but I am afraid that some of them act upon it. Boys and girls are not governed as they used to be. Fifty years ago we little folks got more whippings than sweetmeats. We were not coddled, and coaxed to be good. We were taught to obey, and if we didn't we were punished. I don't believe that the new system of training up children with toys, and candy, and picture-books will make as likely men and women as the old system of King Solomon and our fathers.

I knew a man, years ago, who was sort of fore-runner of Solomon Jones. He was the most popular lawyer in my native State, and a man of splendid intellect. He used to talk bitterly about his father's strictness with him when a boy, and to say that he wouldn't treat his children as he was treated. He had three beautiful boys. They were my playmates and schoolmates. They were indulged in everything. They were never punished for anything. How we used to envy those boys and wish we had as good a time as they had! Well, one of them became a common thief, and would steal the spoons from his father's table. They all became drunkards, and their father lived long enough to lay them in drunkards' graves. I used to pity that grey-haired, childless old man, and I often wondered if he didn't think his stern New England father was right after all. Is not the want of family government a great and growing evil in the land? Our children are no better by nature than the Jewish children three thousand years ago. And it is as true now as it was then: "Foolishness is bound in the heart of a child, but the rod of correction shall drive it far from him." Proverbs 22: 15.—Obadiah Oldschool, in Interior.

A BRAVE BOY.

I shall ever remember a lesson which I received when at school in A—. One morning while on our way to school, one of our scholars was seen driving a cow toward a neighboring field. A group of boys met him as he was passing. The opportu-

ity for ridicule was not to be lost by a boy of the name of Jackson.

"Hello!" he exclaimed, "what's the price of milk? I say, Jack, what do you fodder on? What will you take for the gold on the cow's horns? Boys, look here. If you want to see the latest Paris style, behold those boots."

Watson, waving his hand to us with a pleasant smile, opened the gate, saw her safely in the inclosure, and then closing it, came and entered the school with the rest of us. After school in the afternoon he let out the cow and drove her off, none of us knew whether, and every day for two or three weeks he went through the same task.

The boys attending A— school were nearly all the sons of wealthy parents, and some of them were dunces enough to look down with a sort of disdain upon a scholar who had to drive a cow.

With admirable good nature did Watson bear all their silly attempts to wound and annoy him.

"I suppose, Watson," said Jackson one day, "your papa means to make a milkman of you?"

"Why not?" asked Watson.

"Oh, nothing. Only don't leave much water in the cans after you rinse them—that's all."

The boys laughed, and Watson, not in the least mortified, replied: "Never fear. If I should ever rise to be a milkman I'll give good measure and good milk, too."

The day after this conversation there was a public examination, at which a number of ladies and gentlemen from the neighboring towns were present. Prizes were awarded by the principal of our school, and both Watson and Jackson received a creditable number, for, in respect to scholarship, these two were about equal. After the ceremony of distribution, he remarked that there was one prize, consisting of a gold medal, which was rarely awarded, not so much on account of its great cost as because the instances were rare which rendered its bestowal proper. It was the prize of heroism. The last medal was awarded about three years ago to a boy in the first class who rescued a poor girl from drowning.

The principal then said that with the permission of the company he would relate a short anecdote:

"Not long since some boys were flying a kite in the streets just as a poor lad on horseback rode by on his way to the mill. The horse took fright and threw the boy, injuring him so badly that he was carried home and confined some weeks to his bed. Of the boys who had unintentionally caused the disaster none followed to learn the fate of the wounded lad. There was one boy, however, who had witnessed the accident from a distance, who not only went to make inquiries, but stayed to render service."

"The boy soon learned that the wounded boy was the grandson of a poor widow, whose sole support consisted in selling the milk of a cow, of which she was the owner. Alas! what could she do? She was old and lame; and her grandson, on whom she depended to drive her cow to the pasture, was now helpless from his bruises. 'Never mind, good woman,' said the boy, 'I can drive the cow.'"

"But his kindness did not stop here. Money was wanted to get articles from the apothecary. 'I have money that my mother sent me to buy a pair of boots with, but I can do without them for awhile.' 'Oh! no,' said the old woman, 'I can't consent to that; but here is a pair of heavy boots that I bought for Thomas, who can't wear them. If you would only buy these we should get on nicely.' The boy bought the boots, clumsy as they were, and has worn them up to this time. Well, when it was discovered by the other boys at the school that our scholar was in the habit of driving a cow, he was assailed every day with laughter and ridicule. His cowhide boots in particular were a matter of mirth. But he kept on cheerfully and bravely, day after day, never shunning observation, driving the widow's cow and wearing his thick boots, contented in the thought that he was doing right, caring not for all the jeers and sneers that could be uttered. He never undertook to explain why he drove the cow, for he was not inclined to make a vaunt of his charitable motives; and, furthermore, in his heart he had no sympathy with the false pride that could look down with ridicule on any useful employment. It was by mere accident that his course of kindness and self-denial was yesterday discovered by his teacher."

"And now, ladies and gentlemen, I appeal to you; was there not true heroism in this boy's conduct? Nay, Master Watson, do not sink out of sight behind that blackboard. You are not afraid of ridicule; you must not be afraid of praise."

As Watson, with blushing cheeks, made his appearance, what a round of applause spoke the general approbation of his conduct.

Those clumsy boots on Watson's feet seemed a prouder ornament than a crown would have been on his head. The medal was bestowed upon him amid general acclamation.

The other boys who had ridiculed Watson were heartily ashamed of their conduct, and sought his forgiveness and friendship.—The Child's Own.

TEMPERANCE.

DR. EMORY POTTER.

While at Saratoga Springs we made the acquaintance of Dr. E. Potter, a most unselfish, earnest and esteemed temperance worker. We are happy to introduce him to the readers of the Cynosure in a short article of his which we find in the Saratoga Eagle.—ED. CYNOSURE.

THE VIEWS OF AN UNADULTERATED PROHIBITIONIST.

Emory Potter is totally deaf in one ear. This accounts for the fact that he never hears only one side of the temperance question.—Saratoga Eagle.

I am glad that if I cannot hear but one side of the temperance question I can hear the right side. I hear: "Woe to him who giveth his neighbor drink," but I cannot hear that this woe is removed by paying a lesser or larger sum into the treasury of the town. I have two good eyes—I can see professed temperance men and professed Christians saying by their votes to the rum-sellers—"Give us a portion of your gains and you may give your neighbor drink, you may put the bottle to him and make him drunk-en." I also see that the men who vote thus are no less guilty than the men who stand behind the bar. I care not who a man is or what his profession may be, whether he belongs to the church or not, if he votes for license, or if he votes for men who are in favor of license, or if he supports a party which is in favor of license, he is equally guilty with the rum-seller. There is no shirking this truth.

Rum-selling is legalized by law, and every voter who does not protest against such laws by his ballot—consents to and supports them. I am glad that those who see this truth are increasing rapidly. All the people need is light. When this truth bursts upon the minds of all the voters of our country who love righteousness and the happiness and prosperity of their fellows, as it has already dawned upon the minds of 30,000 in our State, then will they arise and sweep this terrible liquor traffic from our land. God speed the day! EMORY POTTER.

A FIENDISH CRIME.

The inside facts connected with the death of W. T. Clarkson at Junction City, Ky., on Christmas day, have just leaked out and are as follows: That morning Clarkson went to the home of Dan Twaddle, yard-master of the stove factory, upon some business, Clarkson being an employe of the factory. The latter had all his life been a temperance man, and Twaddle an anti-prohibitionist. Twaddle had egg-nog at his house. He asked Clarkson to drink with him. Clarkson refused, and Twaddle insisted repeatedly and said: "You know I've kept you in a job at the factory, and to show your friendship for me you ought to drink with me." Thus goaded on, and forced by repeated tenders of drink, Clarkson yielded and took one, two and more glasses which soon began to tell on him. Twaddle soon saw that Clarkson was his victim, and it was not long before they adjourned to the bar of G. W. Ball & Co., and when the doggerly was reached drink after drink was poured down until Clarkson lost all consciousness and sank to the floor.

While on the floor a grand jubilee was gone through with by those who had been taking delight in his fall. Time and again Clarkson was raised from the floor and liquor poured down his throat until he could contain no more. During all this time the motley crew in the bar-room were celebrating the fall of Clarkson, who has always borne a good character and enjoyed a reputation for sobriety, uprightness, and honor, in drunken songs and harangues upon temperance and the fall of their victim. When Clarkson became dead drunk, or as some say when he was lying on the bar-room floor dead, he was picked up and placed in a wagon, from which was raised a banner bearing the inscription: "Prohibitionist, died Dec. 25." After the body had been placed in the wagon, some of those who had been instrumental in the unfortunate termination of this spree got on the wagon and drove over Junction City, making a most disgraceful exhibition of themselves. All this time Clarkson was lying a corpse in the wagon.

This is the most disgraceful piece of business ever perpetrated in Boyle county, and great excitement prevails. Clusters of men can be seen conversing on the street-corners, and it is not at all unlikely that a mob will visit upon the heads of the perpetrators of this dastardly outrage condign punishment for their barbarous and fiendish act. The Coroner's jury was in session yesterday, but held back their verdict until they could consult with the Commonwealth's Attorney.

How long before the rum traffic shall be suppressed? How long the record of such fiendish crimes continue before the abominable nuisance shall be abated? Shame on the nineteenth century if it be not done speedily. Yours for God and home and every land.

DEATH-DEALING LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

BY S. CALVIN HART.

Of all the creatures here below,
The most remote from state seraphic;
None are causing greater woe,
Than they who ply the liquor traffic:
Crime-creating liquor traffic,
Desolating liquor traffic,
World-annoying,
Soul-destroying,
Vicious, cursed liquor traffic.

Of all the selfish men existing,
None exceeds the vile bar-tender;
None the law of love resting,
Like the murderous liquor vender:
Assassinating liquor vender,
Christian-hating liquor vender;
Orphan-making,
Vile, heart-breaking,
Law-defying liquor vender.

"Personal liberty!" they cry—
Yea! "Constitutional defenders!"
Nay, countless thousands yearly die,
Victims, lo! of liquor vendors:
Hypocritical liquor vender,
Mean, political liquor vender;
Lazy, lying,
Church-decrying,
Sabbath-breaking liquor vender.

"Sumptuary laws," indeed!
Flimsy plea of vile pretenders;
Never will it hide the greed
And laziness of liquor vendors:
Virtue-wrecking liquor vender,
Christ-rejecting liquor vender;
World-polluting,
Hell-recruiting,
Hell-deserving liquor vender.

Lecompton, Kansas.

A CHRISTMAS GIFT.

Christmas is Christmas, but what that may mean depends upon circumstances, and how it should be observed is a matter of taste in this land of freedom. A prominent contractor in New York city aqueduct works, a son-in-law of a St. Paul millionaire, to boot, announced to his several hundred laborers that he had a Christmas treat in store for them, and straightway they expected to hear of fat turkeys all around, or of new boots or gloves for the winter. Mr. Brunton did not do any of these things. He is building a saloon near the New Harlem bridge, and the idea which struck him most forcibly was to get all the men drunk and break up the monotonous quiet of Tenth avenue. He therefore took $700 and distributed it in wads of $50 at various saloons, and gave notice to his men that "free liquor" was to be had for two days. As soon as they knocked off work they besieged the saloon. Policemen were stationed at every door to keep them moving on, but the gangs soon got drunk, and as the liquor began to fire their besotted brains they began to defy the police. Three places in particular were made the scenes of rioting and uproar—the cable house at One Hundred and Forty-ninth street, the contract store of Ackley & Co., and Saul's Washington Park Hotel. Special police were ordered out, and soon there was a hand-to-hand conflict. The officers attacked, and, backed up against the wall, laid about them vigorously with their clubs. As fast as the men could be handled they were put into carts which had been impressed into service, and were taken to the station house.

Now, whatever may be thought of these scenes and doings, that which produces them and the men that engage in them is the saloon. This institution is well nigh omnipotent in our cities, and its fruits are seen on every hand. Yet they who would fight it are "fanatics," and are opposed by the almost solid political press of the country. The great daily from which the above account is taken is the friend and defender of the saloon, and has some editorial utterance in almost every issue which would delight and encourage the perpetrators of these very outrages.—Christian Standard.

the pastor of a large Baptist church. He told me that he had been a Mason, and had renounced the order as false and fraudulent and inconsistent with the Christian profession. He said that he had borne a faithful testimony against the orders, and incurred much opposition and obloquy in his own church. He said that the churches are all under the control of the orders, and in this city more than elsewhere. He thoroughly approved of my work, but thought that about the only chance of doing anything was to visit the schools, where the future ministers and educators are being taught. He referred me to the Richmond Theological Seminary and the Hartshorn Female College, both Baptist schools for the education of colored youth. Accordingly I called on Rev. Dr. Colby, president of the Theological Seminary, who, though not prepared to endorse our views, yet believed in free discussion, and told me that I might have a hearing from 8 to 8:30 A. M. of Thursday the 13th. I then called on Pres. Tefft of Hartshorn College, who expressed a hearty sympathy with our work, and bade me come at 9 A. M. and occupy the time after the morning exercises until 10.

This morning at 8 A. M. I was at the Seminary and met the 65 students, fine appearing young men, who listened with great apparent interest to my rapid review of the leading arguments against the lodge system. The president, who said that he was not prepared to oppose or endorse what I said, suggested some mild criticisms to which I made a brief reply. I then got on the street cars and after a long ride and rapid walk reached Hartshorn College before the conclusion of the morning exercises. I found assembled about 100 young ladies, to whom I was introduced and spoke for forty minutes, the president adding remarks of approval and endorsement. I arranged to have reform literature sent to each of these schools; and as there seems to be no other opening, I have concluded to go on to Chase City in the south part of the State. I subjoin a statement of lodges and churches as gleaned from the directory for 1886. The following is the relation of secret orders to the churches in Richmond, Va., according to the latest directory, with this exception, that the colored lodges are wholly omitted:

Baptist churches, white, 10; colored, 11; Catholic, white, 3; colored, 1; Christian, white, 3; Protestant Episcopal, white, 9; colored, 1; Friends, 1; Jews Synagogues, 4; Lutheran churches, 3; Methodist Episcopal, 9; Non-sectarian, 1; Presbyterian, 5; Universalist, 1; A. M. E. S. Total, 65.
Lodges, Masonic, 17; Knight Templar, 3; Ancient Architects, 1; I. O. O. F., 12; Knights of Honor, 13; Ladies of Honor, 1; Knights of Pythias, 13; Improved Order of Red Men, 9; Order of Golden Rule, 5; United Ancient Order of Druids, 5; Royal Arcanum, 6; American Legion of Honor, 6; Iron Hall, 7; Order of Chosen Friends, 3; Junior Order of United American Mechanics, 2; Sons of St. George, 3; Home Circle, 3; Sons of Temperance, 3; Jewish Secret Orders, 5. Total, 115.

Trades unions are not included. Thus it seems that of white lodges alone there are nearly twice as many as all the churches both white and colored.

BOYDTON, VA., JAN. 18.—I left Richmond, Va., at 1:30 of the 13th and came to Chase City in Mechenburg county, ninety miles southwest. It is a pleasant village and has in it a considerable Northern element. It seems to have been named from the great Ohioan, Chief Justice Chase. A mile north is Thane Institute, a flourishing school for colored youth, under the care of Rev. J. H. Vessey, assisted by three other teachers. There are nearly two hundred pupils in attendance, including some in mature life, and a considerable number of teachers have completed here a course of study and are engaged in conducting colored schools. A flourishing United Presbyterian church is connected with the school, which is under the patronage of the United Presbyterian Board of Missions. I was most cordially received, and hospitably entertained by Pres. Vessey, who most heartily endorses our reform movement. I also received a liberal contribution. On the evening of my arrival I attended a well-conducted and most interesting young people's prayer meeting.

Next morning after the usual devotional exercises I was invited to address the students on the secret lodge system. I spoke forty-five minutes and had undivided attention, the president adding words of endorsement and approval. On Friday evening, the 14th, they held a temperance meeting which I was invited to address. On Sabbath at 2 p. m. I met a crowded congregation of both white and colored and including a number from the town, and spoke an hour on the relation of secret societies to Christianity and civil government. There was marked attention, and if there was any dissent, it did not come to the surface. At 7 p. m. I preached in the Presbyterian church in Chase City to a full house, made up of the congregations of several churches.

This morning at 7 o'clock I was brought by Bro. Veazey to Boydton, twelve miles distant, and the seat of Boydton Institute, which was established by Dr. Cullis of Boston, and has until recently been under the care of Rev. John James, who formerly labored as a Free Methodist minister in Iowa, and who was the first man to suggest this reform work among the colored people of the South. His health has become seriously impaired and he has resigned his charge. Rev. W. H. H. McAllister of Maine takes his place.

Unlike most of the colored schools of the South, this institution found a large fine building ready furnished for its use. Boydton is one of the oldest villages in this part of the State, the county seat of Mechenburg county, and was the seat of Randolph Macon College, one of the oldest and most honored of the institutions of Virginia. In one of the upper rooms is a tablet that sets forth that Randolph Macon College died June 25, 1868, and Boydton Institute was born Oct. 4, 1879, with fifteen students. The building is four stories high, with a chapel and rooms for more than one hundred students. It is beautifully situated one mile west of Boydton, and has a tract of more than 300 acres of land. There are at present more than one hundred students with six teachers. There is also an orphan asylum in connection with the school under the care of Miss Odell of Nova Scotia.

Last night I spoke for an hour on the lodge system to the students and others, including one lodge man, who has been fourteen years a member of the Virginia legislature. My remarks were heartily endorsed by Pres. McAllister, and I go on my way to North Carolina feeling that it is good to have been here.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Daily prayer-meetings have been started in Geneva College by the students, indicating a happy revival of religious interest.

—The evangelist A. P. Bell, of this city, is spending the winter among the Methodist missions of Chicago, and great good is being accomplished.

—High Street church, Columbus, Ohio, Rev. C. W. Hiatt, pastor, is opening a protracted meeting. Several conversions are reported from a late Sabbath evening service.

—Evangelist Moody preached two powerful sermons last Friday, one in the afternoon at the First Congregational church, on "The Holy Spirit," and the other at the Second Baptist church in the evening, on "Sudden Conversions." Both services were largely attended, and in order to accommodate the overflowing audiences Mr. Moody will hold three services daily this week. His audiences have numbered some 3,500 daily and the pastors are much encouraged.

—Francis Murphy, the well-known temperance lecturer, together with his son, also a popular lecturer, have announced their intention to join Mr. Moody in Chicago, and to engage in a five months' vigorous warfare against intemperance and sin. This announcement may be a mistake as Mr. Moody has intimated nothing of the kind publicly.

—Frank C. Haddock, the only surviving son of the late Rev. Geo. C. Haddock, has entered the ministry and accepted a call to the pastorate of the Methodist church of Bagley, Iowa. He had entered the legal profession, and gained considerable reputation, but the tragic death of his father materially changed his plans of life-work.

—Captain Isaiah Bray, who took out the new missionary steam vessel "Morning Star" to the South Sea Islands some two years ago, is now secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Oakland, Cal. Capt. Bray left the vessel because of some disagreement with the American Board. The contract for its construction not having been fulfilled he does not wish to become responsible for another disaster. He prints a monthly Y. M. C. A. bulletin which he calls the Log-book.

—Bro. Shemeld writes to the Free Methodist from Estcourt, Natal, Africa, of a quiet communion season and the sickness of Bro. Harry Agnew, who was with W. W. Kelly at Inhambane, some distance north on the east coast, until the latter had to give up the field and return to America because of his health. The work now is among the Zulus, who are friendly toward the missionaries.

—The history of the First Union Presbyterian church, New York, for the past three years, is one of great prosperity, and the pastor, the Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, and his flock, are greatly encouraged, as well they may be. When Mr. Crafts commenced his work there in November, 1883, the membership numbered two hundred and forty-one. The present membership is five hundred and fifty, and over four hundred accessions have been recorded. The congregation has largely increased, and the benevolent offerings have grown in proportion.

—Deacon L. E. Willard, so long and popularly identified with Bible Class instruction in the Chicago Y. M. C. A., has resigned his work at Farwell Hall, in order that he may give himself more fully to the work of instructing students, Christian workers and converts in the fundamental truths of the Gospel. His talks at the noon meetings recently were greatly enjoyed, and were of great profit to all who heard. There is need of an hundred such men "to make the message plain" to the workers and converts in this city alone.

—The ladies of the W. C. T. U. of Greenville, Pa., have succeeded in uniting all the churches of that city in the greatest revival in the history of this community. For a week three meetings a day have been held, addressed by Major Hilton, of Washington, D. C. The enthusiasm was so high that the merchants contemplate closing their places of business and attending the meetings en masse. The night meetings have an attendance of nearly 2,000 each evening. All have thrown aside petty differences and are working heroically in the harvest of souls. This is the third week of the meetings.

—The Presbytery of Westmoreland, says the Midland, is not able to see that there is anything in membership in the order known as the Royal Arcanum inconsistent with membership in the United Presbyterian church. There was, however, a wide difference of opinion about it in the presbytery as the vote stood thirteen for, and twelve against the order.

—Egypt is mainly occupied by American missionaries and their native assistants, the only exception being Alexandria, where the Scotch missionaries are evangelizing. There are about 250,000 debased Copts, the only vestige of that once exalted intellectual type of Christians. The American missionaries, through them, are creating a Christian literature in the Arabic. The whole Protestant educational work in the country cost in 1885 over $23,000—the natives paying $14,275, or about two-thirds of the entire amount; the church in American paid only $7,659; the small balance was received from other sources.

FREE MISSIONS IN WEST AFRICA.

ATLANTIC OCEAN, Nov. 29th, 1886.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Rob't. L. Harris, with his Band No. 1 of Faith Missionaries, left New York city Oct. 30th, in the bark "Monrovia" for Monrovia, Liberia, W. C. A. Thus far we have had a very good voyage. Thirteen cabin passengers and one hundred and three in the steerage, and also the crew, make quite a field for Gospel labor. The roughness of the sea made it impracticable to hold religious services during the early part of the voyage, but God opened the way for us, and for a week since meetings have been in progress for the salvation of souls. But little interest was manifested at first, yet it has been increasing all the time until last night God took a walk through the ship by the Holy Ghost, and many went on their knees for pardon or purity.

This is our thirtieth day out and we are between the Cape Verde Islands and the mainland but we are willing that it be thirty more if God has work to keep us this long. The rules for our African Faith Mission will be published in the Vanguard. We believe that God endorses this plan and we are full of faith and courage in thus moving out for him unsalaried. It is the Apostolic way and God blessed that. Pray for us in this foreign field. Will be thankful to get the Cynosure as well as other publications promised us. God bless them all.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, Dec. 16th.—After a voyage of forty-five days and a few hours we are here full of faith and courage and in excellent health. Praise the Lord. Yours in service for Jesus,

MRS. JENNIE TORRENCE.

LITERATURE.

ART AND LIFE. A Ruskin Anthology. Compiled by Wm. Sloane Kennedy. Pp. 593. Price $1.00. John B. Alden, New York.

Few busy readers in America have the leisure if they have the perseverance to read carefully all the works of the eloquent and original English philosopher and critic, though the publisher of this volume issues them in handsome volumes and at the lowest price. Thousands must, therefore, hail the appearing of this volume which is a selection of the choice sayings of Ruskin on Art, Social Philosophy, The Conduct of Life, Science, Nature and Literature. Mr. Kennedy is a great admirer and student of Ruskin, to whom the selection must have been a labor of love. Portraits of Ruskin and his romantic home adorn the volume and a good index happily closes it.

The Century promises next month a portrait of Rev. Peter Cartwright, the famous Methodist minister, "whose life is the history of his church in the West for sixty years; and also that President McCosh, of Princeton, is to be the subject of an article, with frontispiece portrait.

Professor Edward L. Youmans, the distinguished writer and lecturer on scientific subjects, died in New York last Tuesday, in his 66th year. Professor Youmans was the well-known editor of the Popular Science Monthly. He was the author of a "Handbook of Physical Science," "The Culture Demanded by Modern Life," and other works of a scientific nature. His sister is Eliza Ann Youmans, the author of several scientific text books.

Scribner's Magazine for February opens with an article of general and scholarly interest, "The Likenesses of Julius Caesar," by John C. Ropes, the well-known writer of military history. It is illustrated with eighteen portraits, reproductions of photographs from statues of the Roman emperor. One of these portraits, engraved by W. B. Closson, forms a striking frontispiece for the number. The second installment of ex-Minister Washburne's "Reminiscences of the Siege and Commune of Paris," is even more interesting than was the first, dealing as it does with the most exciting incidents of the siege. The illustrations to the article are abundant and spirited. One of the artists, Mr. Thulstrup, was in Paris during the siege, and his drawings are from sketches and studies made at the time. Mr. Washburne seems to be getting no thanks from a class of French journals for his truthful history of the last French humiliation. Prof. J. R. Soley, of the Navy, writes on "Our Naval Policy," reviewing our national resources for naval defense and attack. As in the case of Captain Greene's article last month, we regret these able writers had not given their attention to the prevention of war.

LODGE NOTES.

The German Butchers' Assembly No. 6, 888 Knights of Labor has voted $250 to the "new trial fund" of the Anarchists. The publication in the Arbeiter Zeitung, Spies's sheet, of a series of fiery resolutions in which the statements that the Knights have no connection with the Anarchists is repudiated, and the eight condemned men are declared on the same basis as the Knights, makes it incumbent on District Master Workman Butler to either suspend the assembly in accordance with the order of Mr. Powderly, or run the risk of being himself suspended for not obeying the orders of the General Master Workman. Powderly's order was particularly severe in condemning the voting of the funds of the local assemblies for the assistance of the Anarchists.

The Machine Constructors' Assemblies of Philadelphia have resolved to surrender to the general officers of the Knights of Labor their charter, seal, rituals, and all other effects of the order, and to withdraw from the Knights in a body.

"Does your husband go to the lodge, Mrs. Gibberick?" "Well, he just don't. I broke up that little game quite a while ago." "Why, how in the world did you do it?" Whenever he started for the lodge I went with him as far as the skating rink, and told him to call for me on his way home. It only took a few doses to cure him.—Chicago Ledger.

Rev. O. C. McCulloch, pastor of Plymouth church, Indianapolis, the congregation of which is the largest in the city, and is composed largely of Knights of Labor, concluded a sermon lately by expressing the opinion that the trial of the Chicago anarchists was conducted unfairly, and that their conviction was unwarranted.

A remarkable boycott is in progress in Galveston. A female compositor of that city, a member of the printers' union, married a non union compositor, and then tried to get him to join the order. He refused, and the union voted a boycott in which the wife participated, having left her husband and begun proceedings for a divorce.

Those who receive the Cynosure with this item marked, will understand that the subscription is paid for by some friend, and will be stopped when the time expires unless ordered to be continued.

THOUSANDS ARE DYING

In early life with consumption, who can look back a few years—perhaps only months—when it was catarrh. Neglected when a cure is possible, very soon it will transform the features of health and youth into the dark, pallid appearance; while the hacking cough, the excess of blood gushing from the lungs, or night-sweats, all significantly proclaim it is too late; and thus neglected Catarrh ends in the consumptive grave.

NASAL CATARRH.

Sometimes the disease only affects the membranes lining the nasal passages, and they may be easily reached and cured by simple means. But when it is located in the "frontal sinus," or in the "posterior nares," or if it has entered the "Eustachian tubes," as all well-read physicians will readily attest, nothing can be relied on to effect a permanent cure but the inhalation of properly medicated vapor. In the same manner that we breathe a common air we can inhale and breathe a medical air; and it is perfectly simple, any one can see, thus to treat a disease of the throat, bronchial tubes and lungs. How much better this method, by which remedies are conveyed directly to the seat of the disease, than to resort to the uncertain and too frequently mischievous action of medicines taken into the stomach.

BRONCHITIS, OR INFLAMMATION OF THE BRONCHIAL TUBES.

This disease is so closely connected with CATARRH that it may be truly described as a branch of that disease, only modified and changed by the nature and organization of the parts affected; CATARRH being confined to the interior of the Nose while BRONCHITIS affects the small pipes entering the lungs, known as the Bronchial Tubes. Where the disease obtains its worst character, tumors grow up like mushrooms, creating inflammatory adhesion and discharge of offensive matter from the throat, extending through the Eustachian Tube to the ear, which becomes affected. The absorption of the tuberculous matter is very dangerous, and frequently results in PULMONARY CONSUMPTION and death.

My Experience.

Nineteen years of terrible headache, disgusting nasal discharges, dryness of the throat, acute bronchitis, coughing, soreness of the lungs, raising bloody mucus, and even night-sweats, incapacitating me from my professional duties, and bringing me to the verge of the grave—all were caused by, and the result of, nasal catarrh. For standing hundreds of dollars and obtaining no relief, I compounded my catarrh Specific and Cold Air Inhaling Balm, and wrought upon myself a wonderful cure. Now I can speak for hours without difficulty, and can breathe as freely of any atmosphere. At the calls of numerous friends, I have given my cure to the public, and have now thousands of patients in all parts of the country, and thousands of happy fellow-beings whose sufferings I have relieved. My cure is certain, thorough and perfect, and is endorsed by every physician who has examined it. If I can relieve my fellow-beings as I have been relieved of this loathsome disease, which makes the possessor at once disgusting to himself and others, I shall be satisfied and feel that I have done my little toward removing the ills of mankind.

THE EXPERIENCE OF OTHERS.

On account of so many patients having been swindled by unprincipled quacks and pretenders, who flood the country with their advertisements, we deem it only fair that every one that wishes should have the opportunity to ascertain whether we are able to accomplish all that we claim; and for this purpose we add a few of the many hundreds of unalloyed certificates that have been sent to us by grateful patients; almost any of whom will doubtless respond to any inquiry by letter, if accompanied by a stamp to pay postage. Having been cured themselves, they will doubtless be willing to let the afflicted know where they may find certain relief.

We have hundreds of certificates from all classes—physicians, clergymen, lawyers, judges, merchants, bankers, and business men; but many dislike the notoriety of having their names in their names; and this injunction is always most sacredly respected. Correspondence of all kinds is strictly confidential.

HE KNOWS IT CURES.

Rev. T. P. CHILDS, Boston, Mass., July 4, 1885.

DEAR SIR—It is now about five years since I put myself under your treatment. I was then a great sufferer from Catarrh and its effects upon my system. I had dyspepsia, a constant headache, ulcers in the posterior nasal passages, affection of the left ear duct, ringing in the ears—in fact, nasal and bronchial catarrh affecting all the passages of the head and throat. The above was accompanied with a great deal of physical disability, sometimes unfitting me for my regular duties.

Such was my condition when I commenced your treatment. I experienced immediate relief; the terrible pressure in my head relaxed, the bronchial tubes and nasal passages were soothed by the vapors sublimed and healed, the bronchial tubes recovered their wonted vigor, dyspepsia gave place to appetite, and the ringing in the ears ceased.

I could now endure fatigue and exposure better than for many years. The value of your medicines in the family, in the case of colds, etc., is incalculable. I firmly believe that no other treatment would have been so successful in my case; indeed, nothing I tried before did me any good. I humbly thank God that he has blessed your remedy in my case, and so restored my health. I am yours most gratefully.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington, in a letter written a year before his death: "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice during the last thirty years."

President Millard Fillmore, J. C. Spencer and others: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Chief Justice John Marshall: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of much evil and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

John Quincy Adams: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

General A. W. Riley: "I hold that the difference between the Christian and a heathen religion is, that one has morality and the other has not. And when our churches refuse to speak of such subjects as slavery, liquor-selling and secret societies, they are becoming heathen religions; that is, religions without morals."

Charles Francis Adams: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act, unless it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond, even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Charles Sumner: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistic to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield: In conducting the governments of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but secret orders to be considered, which have agents everywhere—reckless agents, who countenance assassination, and, if necessary, can produce a massacre."

General J. W. Phelps: "All secret organizations are links of one and the same chain which binds men to evil and not to good. The Masonic lodge is the parent source from which all similar modern organizations have emanated and this lodge is now in active operation in every city and considerable village of the country swaying our parties and churches; filling our offices, secular and divine, with its partisans; shaping our political destinies; and teaching a spurious and corrupting morality subversive both of the Christian religion and of free institutions."

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

A. M. Sullivan, Irish Leader: I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regarded them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization and are often on the whole more perilous to society than open tyranny."

Hon. Edward Blake, leader in Canadian Parliament, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

HOME AND HEALTH.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

Rubbing warts with lemon juice three or four times a day will, it is said, cause them to disappear within a month.

Tincture of iodine will check the growth of a sty. The lids should not be allowed to come in contact until the part touched becomes dry.

As soon as there are indications of a felon apply a poultice of equal parts of saltpetre and brimstone, mixed with sufficient lard to make a paste; renew as soon as it gets dry.

Do not be without sticking plaster, for cut fingers, and with it keep rags for immediate use. The time seems long that is used in hunting for the where-with to do up a cut finger, as everybody well knows.

Five cents worth of vaseline, which is tasteless and odorless, will cure all the chapped hands, sunburned faces and cracked lips, heal all the sores, burns, and abrasions which a family would ordinarily be afflicted with for a year.

To the thousands of ways of curing sore throat a writer recommends the application of cloths wrung out of hot water during the several hours in the evening. Honey dissolved in sage tea is said to be better for gargling than salt and water.

The smallest bit of gum camphor held in the mouth is excellent for sore throat. Chlorate of potash is another remedy for sore throat and diphtheria, which every family should keep. Keep it in solution and it is always ready, and can be reduced when needed for a ggle.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says that lockjaw, which so often follows the running of a rusty nail into the flesh, may be cured by simply smoking the wound, or any bruise or wound that is inflamed with burning wool or woolen cloth. Twenty minutes' application of this remedy will take the pain out of the worst wound, and repeated once or twice will allay the worst case of inflammation.

FIRE PROOF DRESSES.—This is how to make your dresses fire-proof. Chemicals galore have been used from time to time to render fabrics incombustible, but one of the most efficacious and least expensive is tungstate of soda, which may be most conveniently applied by mixing it with the starch for dressing: Add one part of the tungstate to three parts of good dry starch, and use the starch in the ordinary way. For fabrics which do not require starching dissolve one pound of tungstate of soda in two gallons of water, well saturate the fabric in the solution, and let it dry. It will not change the most delicate colors or affect the quality of the fabric in any way, and ironing will not in the least interfere with the efficacy of the process. Muslins or silks so treated may be held in the flame of a candle or gas without catching fire, so that, although the portion in contact with the flame by continuance may be charred or even destroyed, there is no danger of spreading the combustion.

At Shenandoah last week, a hanging lamp in the residence of Mr. James McCabe broke the chain by its own weight and fell on a table burning. The oil spilled and took fire, which spread quickly over the table. Mrs. McCabe taking a pan of flour dashed it on the blaze, which completely extinguished it.—Western Crank.

FROSTED FEET.—To relieve the intense itching of frosted feet, dissolve a lump of alum in a little water, and bathe the part with it, warming it before the fire. One or two applications is sure to give relief.

A KEROSENE LAMP left burning in the cellar will generally give sufficient warmth to prevent freezing in the coldest weather.

TO KEEP YOUR FEET WARM wear two pair of cotton stockings. They will be found much warmer than a single pair of woolen, though the thickest made.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable as a discovery of vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Emphysema.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing hum or saline on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cures. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

Hon. E. L. HERBES, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchitis and Catarrh of the Lungs, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend it to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

Dr. E. L. HERBES, 35 West 4th St., New York.
Mr. H. G. TEELE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh, coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan.
By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

This deeply interesting narrative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the East and how bad men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when they are in great trouble. For sale at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more percent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

"E'en his feelings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

The Christian's Secret

OR

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the truth and whets their faith. Its efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, while the adherent of a theologian, never loses the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Epistyle Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"This book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better and our efforts more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life with Christ in God can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological view of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom read with more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have fallen to find a dry line from title-page to end."—Religious Telegraph.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

The Presbyterian ministers of Chicago have considered "progressive euchre" in their Monday meeting and have condemned it as a game not to be allowed to their church members. That is well. The game of lodge euchre lies somewhere along the same way; when the Presbyterian brethren come to it what will they do?

Mr. Moody's work is gradually extending over the populous West Side of this city among the wealthy American churches lying west of the business center. Obliquely from the center to north and south is the great bulk of the foreign population of the city. To penetrate this dense mass of humanity he will probably not undertake. The pastors with whom he has been laboring rejoice in the promise of large ingatherings to their churches from this work. Dr. Goodwin of the First Congregational church says, after some three week's meetings with his people, that Moody is a greater popularizer than any one he has ever seen. His work is the most wonderful phenomenon he has ever contemplated. Last Thursday evening in a sermon on Elijah's command, "If the Lord be God, follow him," the evangelist made a powerful appeal for the separation of Christians from the world. "A short time ago," he said, "there was a great cry raised about keeping the church from going into the world, but there was no need for any more anxiety on that point, for the trouble was the world had come into God's church and taken possession, and lots of people did not know the difference between God's altar and Baal's."

Constitutional prohibition is marching on. The Senate committee of the Missouri Legislature is ready to report the House concurrent resolution providing for a submission of a prohibitory amendment to the people. A majority is promised for the measure. In Tennessee the Senate by an almost unanimous vote adopted a prohibition amendment last Friday. In Michigan the Upper House passed a similar measure by a vote of 22 to 10, the Republicans all voting aye but two, and one of these explained that his vote represented the wishes of his constituents and not his own convictions. So one by one the Jerichos of Liquordom are tumbling. Be ready, men of faith, to spring over the ruins and destroy the last remnant of the cursed traffic.

After a life full of devotion to the lodge Alfred Shaw, a Northern bred man, but residing in New Orleans since before the war, died not long since in that city. He is said to have been one of the best known lodge men; his praise indeed seems to have been in many of the lodges, not, like that of Titus, "in all the churches." It is claimed that he had taken more Masonic degrees in various rites than any man living, and has held the highest offices in the order under the Albert Pike regime. He was not only Freemason, but—mark this!—he was the presiding genius in numerous other orders. He was Past Grand Master and Past Grand Representative of the Odd-fellows. He was one of the founders of the Seven Wise Men, and instituted the first lodge of Red Men in that city in 1855. He was also the organizer of the first Knights of Pythias lodge in New Orleans. With such a lodge record, in a city where soon after the war the lodges ruled openly and made war upon the State, until Sheridan went down with U. S. troops, it was to be expected such a character would be seldom out of office; and so it was. He was a convenient man as judge of the district court and member of the school board, and while nominally a Republican he had no trouble from political enemies, who shot and hung other Republicans without mercy. But it is some surprise that he was retained as dean of Straight University Law School, after Mr. Healy, a Knight Templar, left the first place in the institution. It is grievous to think how one so encumbered with the dignities and titles of this world will stand before a righteous and holy God.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

The friends of Mr. Moody are preparing for him an appropriate remembrance of his fiftieth birthday which is on Saturday of this week. They wish to raise an endowment for the Northfield schools. These were started some seven years ago. When the evangelist returned from his successful work abroad and selected Northfield, Massachusetts, the place of his birth, as his permanent home, he began to think of some effort for the benefit of his native village. He always felt the great disadvantage under which he labored because of lack of early education, and decided to organize a school. He first opened his own home for young ladies. The work rapidly grew, for parents with children and men with money all had confidence in Moody. There are now eight buildings for the girls' school with accommodations for 300. These buildings occupy 250 acres, beautifully laid out in park and woodland. Mt. Hermon, the school for young men, is situated some two miles away. This was opened in an old farm building, but 400 acres of ground and eight other buildings have been secured or built. About 500 pupils attend these schools and are being trained for practical Christian work as missionaries and teachers. The millions who have been benefited by Mr. Moody will remember these schools with bountiful and grateful gifts.

The effort of Jonas Gilman Clark to build a monument to his name in Worcester by setting apart a million dollars to found "Clark University" suggests some contrasts to the Northfield enterprise of Mr. Moody. One, begun in farm houses to train men and women for God's work, has become directly a success. The other is an attempt to force one more institution for literary culture into a land already crowded with them. The success of the attempt is problematical. It suggests that such enterprises can be bought and sold in the market; and so wonderfully cheapens them in public esteem. They are rather a growth than a purchase; and need, back of all endowments, or apparatus, or mental qualifications, the rare gifts of moral power and conviction. If Mr. Clark wants a monument he has been ill-advised in this matter. His million will not make a university in Worcester, but it would make ten west of the Missouri river, and would put a tablet on the records of a hundred struggling institutions in the growing West which would forever cause his name to be heard with benisons.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF DANIEL WEBSTER.

BY MRS. A. E. KELLOGG.

Attending a Sabbath evening service in an Eastern city where an accomplished clergyman from a neighboring parish preached the sermon, I became painfully interested in the illustration of his subject, for it seemed almost profane. He used for his text the prayer of the Publican, "God be merciful to me a sinner." He treated his subject in an able and impressive manner, as he spoke of that intensely human cry wrung from a penitent heart after every refuge of lies had been swept away and every subterfuge had failed. One could almost see the despised tax-gatherer as he stood utterly without hope from human sympathy or human help, smiting on his breast.

But, lest anyone present should feel that the prayer, though quite becoming to this extortioner, did not fit respectable people like themselves, the speaker sought to make the application from the highest point that he could reach; and so he chose from the annals of greatness a man whom the world had delighted to honor, and that man was Daniel Webster. He took him from his pedestal and forced him to stand face to face with a moving panorama of his life, so that he could see his "sins of omission and his sins of commission," his fruitless ambition, the decadence of his temperate, virtuous life; until, a broken-hearted man, he turned away to die. And then, beside the Publican, he forced from him the same despairing cry in these words:

"Show pity, Lord, O Lord, forgive!
Let a repenting rebel live.
Are not thy mercies large and free;
May not a sinner trust in thee?"

However true, however apt the illustration, it grated on my ear with a pitiless harshness and left no harmonious impression; rather I felt that Daniel Webster had loved and served his country long and well. His name had been written high on the scroll of fame. The grave had sheltered his massive head, and his soul had returned to God who gave it; with whom the people to whom he had given the best of his grand life might well leave his faults, his weaknesses and his sins.

While listening to the above my thoughts wandered and my memory recalled an event which transpired in a Western village many years ago. Daniel Webster was making a kind of triumphal progress through the Western States, particulars of which I do not recall, beyond the fact of a barbecue in St. Louis and the incident which follows.

No railroads at that early day offered the facilities which steam and palace cars afford the traveler of 1887. Instead, a private coach, with baggage strapped behind, was the conveyance used for this long and tedious journey. He was on his return to the East, and his approach had been heralded from place to place so that no time need be lost in assembling the people who should desire to see and hear him. But this notice had been omitted. Why, was not known. It may have been that the 4th of July festivities, which at that time were quite distracting, afforded a reason; for it was on the 5th that the coach halted in front of the best hotel in the village in White Pigeon, Michigan, where it was supposed the party had been expected. But the landlord experienced a shock when informed that the great statesman desired accommodations. Not a room in his house was in order, as the patriotism of the young people had held out most of the night before. In his dilemma he crossed the street to my husband's store and told his tale; the result of which was that Mr. K—— returned with him, and after an introduction, mounted the seat with the driver and directed him to his own gate, where he left them to inform me of the honor which awaited us.

I was very young and inexperienced, so it was with much trepidation that I descended from my chamber to receive the Hon. Daniel Webster with Mrs. Webster and Miss Julia. My fright, however, was quite unnecessary, for they were so affable, without superciliousness, that they immediately made me feel quite at ease; and as my house was ample for the emergency, they were soon shown to their rooms, from which they emerged in due time for a delightful afternoon. The visit was a continual surprise. They entered into the interests of my daily life, admired my flowers, and made friends with my baby whose blue eyes and flaxen curls were the expressed admiration of Miss Webster, who was herself a decided brunette. Her last charge to me was, "Now, Mrs. K——, be sure that you never allow this baby to get tanned." And Mrs. Webster begged the privilege of singing the little one to sleep, while I attended to some household matter, a feat of which she seemed quite proud.

An early tea afforded time for a stroll about the village and a climb to the lookout on the tower of the village church from which a charming view of quiet scenery was obtained. Mr. Webster gave great pleasure to my husband by the admiration which he expressed, as he looked off over the rich and well cultivated farms, with their comfortable houses, clusters of trees, ample barns and hay stacks. "Never in my life," said he, "did I look on such a garden as this!" The village stood on one side of a prairie which extended five miles in one direction, and three in another; the village being midway between the extremes, the roads crossing at right angles divided it into mile squares which gave it indeed the appearance of a garden.

Arrangements were made at the hotel for Mr. Webster to meet such of the citizens as should choose to call; an hour remained before it would be time to go, which was spent in pleasant conversation, on the part of Mr. Webster both entertaining and instructing. I remember very well the subject of politics was under discussion, when Mr. Webster asked Mr. K—— how the people stood on some question of general interest. He replied that he took very little interest in politics, the fact being, that a Christian could not mix up with politics and go to primaries, and caucuses and all that, without compromising his self-respect; so he knew very little about it until the results of the elections were published.

I did not sympathize with this view, my father having been a public man; so I watched Mr. Webster's countenance during these remarks, and was not surprised when he said, "I am very sorry, sir, to hear you say so! Because I think that you, and many others who agree with you, make a serious mistake. Our liberties, sir, are a sacred trust; and when a Christian forgets this, and satisfies his conscience by going to prayer-meeting, while he leaves the interests of his country to the management of the unscrupulous and the base, he offers his God tithes of mint and anise and cummin, while he leaves out the weightier matters of the law, judgment and the love of God. 'This ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone.'"

He made some slight apology for his vehemence and the gentlemen soon went to the hotel. The next morning when ready to leave, they parted with us as with friends, Mr. Webster saying, "Mrs. K——, I cannot tell you how much pleasure it would give us to have you burst upon us at our home in Marshfield, as we have done upon you," and then with strongly expressed appreciation of our hospitality they went on their way.

The visit over, I supposed that we should drop out of their memory, as individuals are lost in a procession; but I was proved to have misjudged them by two autograph letters afterward received by my husband. I have always remembered this, as one of the pleasant experiences of my early life; and have felt glad to have met the great statesman, and to have heard his voice, before his eye had grown dim, or his natural force was in the least abated.

Denver, Col.

THE TWO SYSTEMS OF CIVILIZATION AND THEIR CONFLICT.

BY HON. S. C. POMEROY.

THE NATIONAL CONFLICT INAUGURATED.—TWO SYSTEMS OF CIVILIZATION AT WAR WITH EACH OTHER.

In all great movements there are underlying principles, and primeval causes, which operate to produce results, and with which the actors have little to do. Things meant for evil have been overruled for good ever since Joseph was sold into Egypt. While this lessens not at all the responsibility of the actors, still it is gratifying to trace good coming from evil, wrath being turned to praise; as light emerges from darkness or the verdure of spring from the frosts of winter. More than one vine has been brought out of Egypt and "the heathen driven out to plant it."

It was more than one year after 1620 before it became known that Plymouth and Jamestown had secured a landing and settlements, one of white and the other of black men, the same year. Two systems of labor, two civilizations, two discordant and irreconcilable elements took footing together upon a virgin soil, which had remained until since the "morning stars sang together." The immigration from the old world kept up a steady increase of the New England colonies. The slave-trade, too, fostered by English merchants, was kept up until the American Revolution, and after that for twenty years, for the most part by our own vessels. The slave power controlled England at that day. Her kings and queens, lords and commons, judges and generals gave the slave trade their undeviating support. "For more than a century," said Horace Mann, "did the madness of this traffic rage." "The clock of eternity," he said, "never counted a minute that did not witness the death, treachery and violence done to some father or mother of Africa." But this infernal traffic went on all the same until over three hundred thousand slaves had been landed on these shores. Half as many more died upon the passage or were killed in the capture. If the ocean was transparent, one might trace the track of slave-ships through the deep waters; their bleaching bones would mark the way from continent to continent. And when "the sea gives up its dead" there will arise "an army which no man can number," attesting to this damning traffic of human slavery! At the time the United States became an independent nation there were no less than half a million of black people within the States, mostly slaves.

The institutions of freedom were prosperous on the soil where first planted, and did not deteriorate by being transplanted. They moved in parallels of latitude westward with the "star of empire," planting in the pathway the shining monuments of a Christian civilization. These monuments of learning and religion stand in the valleys, by every stream, upon the borders of all the lakes, over the swell of rolling prairies, up the sides of the mountains and to the golden shores of the Pacific. Slavery, too, spread its desolating tread over the old States in the South, and several new ones in the Southwest. It acquired the "empire of Texas," and secured a division of the public domain on the line of "thirty-six thirty."

But the antagonisms of these two systems began at an early day and continued until it assumed the form of an "irrepressible conflict." The continent of North America seems to have been reserved as a theatre where could be enacted the grandest drama in human history. No other field in all the world was so well suited for the exhibition. Never before was there such an accumulation of material for a conflict and such a range for unlimited display. The few had become a great nation and the weak one strong. Experiments to establish a free government for man, where equality of rights and liberty under law could be maintained and enjoyed by each and by all, had been tried in other lands and failed. The national conflict of 1861 put the tremendous experiment upon trial here. This real issue was fairly joined, and no one doubted but that the life and integrity of the American nation and human liberty were in the contest.

No human foresight could have predicted what our eyes have seen and our ears have heard. The fathers, we say, were in ignorance. I may add we are no less so. Still the closing years of the nineteenth century are eye-openers. While no generation of men ever appreciated their own place in history, we are at least able to see movements in progress which will produce decisive results during the remaining thirteen years of this century. When this century began human hands performed all the world's work. Dr. Atkinson took eight months of hard work to go from New England to Oregon; but he returned easily in six days. When I was born there was not an iron or a steel plow in all the world: to-day there are almost none other. When Chicago was laid off, there were no railroads: to-day the world has 250,000 miles, enough to girdle the world with ten tracks. I was twenty-eight years old when Prof. Morse sent his first telegram from Washington to Baltimore: to-day he could flash that dispatch over 600,000 miles, and reach the ear of half of mankind. So that the conflicts and triumphs of freedom in America were the crisis-point in turning the world's battle to the freedom and elevation of man.

We have lately celebrated "Forefathers' Day," but really what a day was that to them; it was rather a night than a day. They had landed upon a continent they knew little about, and cared more to escape tyranny and oppression than to found an empire of Liberty. It took over one hundred years for their settlements to ascend the Alleghany mountains, and another century to awaken the sleeping valleys of the Ohio and the Mississippi. To us, how short-sighted seem the fathers! To posterity we shall seem the same. They did not know of the Connecticut valley for over ten years after Boston was settled, and never expected to people it: what would they have said to have been then told what we to-day have, viz., a Republic of thirty-eight States, controlling a territory sixty times as large as all Great Britain. We have more good agricultural lands than the whole empire of China, which now supports 360,000,000 people. China feeds her untold millions from a poor soil, without a single plow that an Illinois farmer would use an hour, while we feed 50,000,000 at home, and can ship enough abroad to feed as many more. This country also has wonderful wealth under the soil, in the mountains and amidst her waters.

Why may not I again repeat, this continent with such extensive resources was reserved by Almighty God for such a people and for such a conflict and such a victory.

This country in its triumphs and victories has its relations to all other nations and is soon to be an acknowledged center of the world's civilization as it now is of the English-speaking nations. This last year we sent five hundred plows to Natal and $12,000,000 worth of manufactured iron to India with $100,000,000 of cotton goods to other nations. This civilization which we have acquired will sustain a thousand men where a hundred savages would starve. What a prophecy Matthew Arnold made when he said, "America holds the future!" What a benighted set of men we had to contend with, who tried to found a nation with human slavery for its cornerstone, and set back the world's progress for a thousand years!

But it was an unequal contest. The just sentiments of mankind opposed them. No war can succeed against the judgment of the world. The prayers of struggling millions of poor people in all the world were against them. I heard of prisoners in despotism dungeons, condemned to darkness for opinion's sake plead our cause with God. How could they think of prevailing in such an unequal controversy? Every attribute of Almighty God was arrayed against them. They had thrown themselves across the line of the world's progress, and their defeat and desolation became inevitable.

ROME AND OUR NEXT PRESIDENT.

BY REV. A. SMITH.

It is stated as highly probable that the Democracy of New York will present the name of Governor Hill to the next Democratic nominating convention as a candidate for President. It seems that his main political strength is his favor with the church of Rome. According to the Catholic press and a late encyclical letter of the Pope, it is the aim of Rome to fill all offices with Romanists or their tools. Rome is too cunning to nominate at present a papist for that high office. It would open the eyes of the Protestants and might spoil the papal scheme by being premature. She will wisely prefer a tool—a man outside of her pale, who will still be her willing slave and do all her bidding. Mr. Hill in his first message gave a sop to the Pope by pledging himself to sign the Freedom of Worship bill, a Catholic measure, if passed by the legislature. It was this sop probably which elected him for the last term. In his late message he appears to very clearly court the votes of the Vatican. He recommends as follows:

"An amendment to the election laws of the State so as to permit naturalized citizens to be registered without the production of their naturalization papers, in case of the loss or destruction of such papers, and making the oath or affidavit conclusive evidence of citizenship for the purposes of registration."

Gov. Hill must know that in such cases the oath of a papist is worthless except sanctioned by his confessor. Is the governor anxious to secure the votes of foreigners? Again he recommends:

"An enabling act for the purpose of enforcing that part of the constitution which declares that:
"The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State to all mankind."

Does Gov. Hill here express anxiety for the church of Rome? Is he anxious to have the Freedom of Worship bill become a law? It certainly looks as though he was bidding for papal support and as though he had been counseled by the Jesuits.

DANIEL WEBSTER ON LODGE OATHS.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 11, 1835.

Hon. Daniel Webster, Boston, Mass.

SIR:—The Democratic Anti-masons of Allegheny county, by their delegates in Convention assembled, have this day appointed the undersigned to represent them in a Democratic Anti-masonic State Convention, to be held at Harrisburg on the 14th day of December next, with instructions to urge your nomination by that body, as a candidate for the office of President of the United States.

Your Anti-masonic fellow-citizens here have been influenced in their decision, not only by the esteem in which they hold your character as a statesman, and devoted friend to the Constitution, but also by the impression which has been made on their minds of your entire accordance in opinion with them on the subject of secret associations.

For the satisfaction of our political friends in other sections of this Commonwealth, we shall be most happy if you will enable us to submit to them your opinions respecting the order of Freemasonry, an institution, whose principles and obligations the people of Pennsylvania firmly believe to be dangerous to civil liberty, and in contravention to the established rights of American citizens. We are, very respectfully, etc.,

HARMAR DENNY,
BENJAMIN DARLINGTON,
JAMES C. GILLELAND,
NEVILLE B. CRAIG,
W. W. IRWIN,

Delegates from the County of Allegheny to the Democratic Anti-masonic State Convention of Pennsylvania.

REPLY OF MR. WEBSTER.

Boston, Nov. 20, 1835.

GENTLEMEN:—I have the honor to acknowledge your favor of the 11th inst., the receipt of which has been delayed a few days by my absence from home.

Permit me, gentlemen, to express my grateful sense of the respect shown me by my fellow-citizens, the members of the Convention of Democratic Anti-masons of Allegheny county, in their recent proceedings, as set forth in your communication. The esteem they are pleased to express for my public character, and their confidence in my attachment to the Constitution of the country, demand my profound acknowledgments.

Nor do they do me more than justice, in their belief of my entire accordance in their opinion on the subject of secret societies. You express a wish, however, that for the gratification of friends in other parts of the State, I should enable you to make known my sentiments respecting the order of Freemasonry. I have no hesitation, gentlemen, in saying, that however unobjectionable may have been the original objects of the institution, or however pure may be the motives and purposes of individual members, and notwithstanding the many great and good men who have from time to time belonged to the order; yet, nevertheless, it is an institution which, in my judgment, is essentially wrong in the principle of its formation; that from its very nature it is liable to great abuses; that among the obligations which are found to be imposed on its members, there are such as are entirely incompatible with the duty of good citizens; and that all secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and good government. Under the influence of this conviction, I heartily approved the law, lately enacted in the State of which I am a citizen, for abolishing all such oaths and obligations.

[This copy is taken from the volume of Webster's letters edited by his son, Fletcher Webster, but in a pamphlet published by Ezra Lincoln, Boston, 1841, the above sentence reads thus: "Under the influence of this conviction, it is my opinion that the future administration of all such oaths, and the imposition of all such obligations should be prohibited by law." Ed. CYNOSURE.]

I express these opinions, gentlemen, with the less reserve on this occasion, inasmuch as they have been often expressed already, not only to some of your own number, and many of your friends, but to all others, also, with whom I have at different times conversed on the subject.

Of the political principles and conduct of the Anti-masons of Pennsylvania I have spoken freely in my place in the Senate, and under circumstances which took from the occasion all just suspicion of any indirect purpose. The opinions then expressed are unaltered. I have ever found the Anti-masons of Pennsylvania true to the Constitution, the Union, and to the great interests of the country. They have adopted the "Supremacy of the Laws," as their leading sentiments; and I know of none more just or more necessary. If there be any among us so high as to be too high for the authority of law, or so low as to be too low for its regard and protection, or if there be any, who, by any means whatever, may exempt themselves from its control, then to that extent we have failed to maintain an equal government. The supremacy of the Constitution and the laws is the very foundation stone of Republican institutions; if it be shaken or removed from its place, the whole system must inevitably totter to its fall. Your obliged friend and fellow-citizen,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

WEBSTERIANA.

HIS APPEARANCE.

Mr. Webster was less than six feet in height, yet every artist has portrayed him as of almost heroic stature. The fact was that he impressed those who saw and heard him as of gigantic mould. A Liverpool navy is said to have pointed at him in the street, and called out, "There goes a king!" and Carlyle is reported to have said that he looks like "a walking cathedral." His head was very large, of fine shape, and with a most noble brow, beneath which great eyes looked out full of dusky light when in repose, and glowing like fires when he was excited. His massive features, black hair, and swarthy complexion, together with a manner extremely grand and solemn, all contributed to render him impressive to an extraordinary degree. His voice was one of great richness and compass, in its highest pitch never shrill, but penetrating to the remotest corner of hall or Senate-chamber, and in the open air to the very outskirts of a vast crowd. When he rose to reply to Hayne, he must have had, like Lord Thurlow when he answered the Duke of Grafton, and in a still greater degree, "the look of Jove when he has grasped the thunder."—Henry Cabot Lodge in the Atlantic Monthly.

HIS PRESENCE AND MANNER.

Nobody who once saw him ever forgot him. Of all Americans he was probably the most imposing in his appearance. Others have had a finer, loftier, more refined, more spiritual aspect, as there have been Americans of a far higher essential greatness. But there was a certain grandeur in Webster's look which was incomparable. His Olympian presence gave an air of significance and dignity to whatever he said. We have heard him deliver the most astonishing commonplace in such a way that the audience seemed to be listening to a new revelation of great truths. Of the singular charm of his private intercourse there are scores of published records. But the private circle of friends seemed to be always a little oppressed by the consciousness of his greatness. His manners were those of what is called the old school. His dress upon great occasions was that of the English Whigs, blue and buff—a yellow waistcoat, and blue dress coat with brass buttons. Personally and politically he will remain always, probably, the most striking figure of our second political epoch.—George William Curtis in Harper's Weekly.

THE BASIS OF HIS FAME.

The essential question was liberty or slavery as the controlling power of the government. It was a question which necessarily absorbed and included all others. It was in its nature, as Seward said, an irrepressible conflict. Yet in the city of Samuel Adams it was the voice of Webster that exhorted Americans—for that was the substance of it—to conquer their prejudices for liberty. We do not reopen the debate, which is happily closed forever. We know all the pleas that have been urged, and every allowance will be made by the student of that angry time. Yet it is not to the 7th of March speech, but to the Plymouth oration, and to that at Niblo's Garden, that the lover of Webster's fame as a man, a statesman, and a patriot, will point. Among all eminent American statesmen the renown of none will be more permanent. The orator of Plymouth Rock, of Bunker Hill, and of Faneuil Hall; the advocate of the Dartmouth College case and that of Gibbons and Owen, settling great principles of law; the diplomatist of the Ashburton treaty and the Hulseman letter, defining national boundaries and announcing a national policy; the Senator whose ample and complete exposition of the fundamental principle of the government earned for him alone, among all American statesmen, and indisputably, the title of EXPOUNDER OF THE CONSTITUTION—by all these permanent public services the name of Webster is secure. His countrymen, proud of what he was and of what he did, will only wish that he had crowned all by heeding the young Sumner's adjuration, to add to his illustrious title the still higher one, "Defender of Humanity."—George William Curtis.

THOMAS CARLYLE'S OPINION.

One morning Carlyle met Webster at breakfast in London. Afterwards he drew the following portrait of the great American statesman: "I will warrant him," Carlyle said, "one of the stiffest logic buffers and parliamentary athletes anywhere to be met with in our world at present—a grim, tall, broad-buttoned, yellow-skinned man, with brows like precipitous cliffs, and huge, black, dull, wearied, yet unweariable looking eyes, under them; amorphous projecting nose, and the angriest shut mouth I have ever seen. A droop on the sides of the upper lip is quite mastiff-like—magnificent to look upon; it is so quiet withal. I guess I should like ill to be that man's nigger. However, he is a right clever man in his way, and has a husky sort of fun in him, too; draws in a handfast, didactic manner about 'our republic institutions,' etc., and so plays his part."

WEBSTER AS A FINANCIER.

Much has been said and written about Mr. Webster's extravagance and negligence in money matters. He was not, indeed, a worshiper of Mammon; or, if the world will have it so, he knew not the value of money. But what matter? He never defrauded a neighbor, and he scorned, above all others, the character of a miser. He made money with ease, and spent it without reflection. He had accounts with various banks, and men of all parties were always glad to accommodate him with loans, if he wanted them. He kept no record of his deposits, unless it were on slips of paper hidden in his pockets; these matters were generally left with his secretary. His notes were seldom or never regularly protested, and when they were they caused him an immense deal of mental anxiety. During his long professional career he earned money enough to make a dozen fortunes, but he spent it liberally, and gave it away to the poor by hundreds and thousands. Begging letters from women and unfortunate men were received by him almost daily, at certain periods, and one instance is remembered where, on six successive days, he sent remittances of $50 and $100 to people with whom he was entirely unacquainted. He was, indeed, careless, but strictly and religiously honest in all his money matters. He knew not how to be otherwise. The last fee which he ever received for a single legal argument was $11,000.—Boston Journal.

HIS DRINKING HABITS.

Mr. Webster had grown up at a time when almost every man took his daily glasses of toddy, when decanters of brandy were on the tables of the first-class hotels, and when wines and liquors were genuine, not manufactured from poisonous ingredients. Towards the close of his life, when stricken by domestic sorrow, and deserted by some whose fortunes he had helped to make, he may at times have sought to drown care. But he was not habitually intemperate, and what he did drink was taken with no disguise or hypocritical concealment.

He never gambled, although at that time gambling was another open and fashionable vice here. Occasionally, he would play a game of whist with friends, but he played very badly, and he enjoyed an occasional bout at "seven-up." But he never bet a cent on the result of a game, and he was entirely unacquainted with checkers, backgammon, chess, billiards, or ten pins.—Ben. Perley Poore.

THE 7TH OF MARCH SPEECH.

Granting all you please about Webster's antecedent services to the Union, the fact remains that he and his fellow-compromisers, so far as they had influence, weakened instead of strengthening the moral sentiment without which slavery never would have been abolished. They postponed the battle; but they demoralized the forces. President Lincoln's anti-slavery proclamation was issued and enforced in spite of their influence, not by reason of it. The proof of this is that, as a rule, the men who had sustained Webster and the Fugitive Slave Law were found in bitter opposition to that proclamation; while the President's hands were held up by the public sentiment which had revolted against

Webster. The "ten years gained," over which Mr. Wilkinson and others have exulted, would have been ten years lost but for the growth of the anti-slavery sentiment in spite of the great compromisers. Had their teachings had the weight they desired, there would have been no Proclamation of Emancipation at all. Undoubtedly the earlier labors of Mr. Webster in behalf of the sentiment of union in the nation were a great source of strength to it in carrying through the war. This is a fact which his sternest opponents have lived to recognize. But when any one goes beyond this, and tries to show that the seventh of March speech was a source of anything but aid and comfort to the Slave Power, he contradicts the common sense of the community. The Webster who helped us in the hour of conflict was not the Webster of the compromises, but of the reply to Hayne. Those who looked for later inspiration had to look quite another way. What did the "Webster Regiment" itself sing, as it marched through Boston to the front? The seventh of March speech set to music? Not at all; it sang the "John Brown Song."—The Nation.

HISTORIC PLACES IN TENNESSEE.

BY PRES. C. A. BLANCHARD.

Leaving Nashville we arrived in Chattanooga shortly after nine o'clock in the evening, and took a room at the Reed House. We had hoped and intended to spend the morning, before leaving for Knoxville, in viewing the battlefields of Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain. We, however, spent our entire time until we were compelled to leave, with Rev. Mr. S——, the pastor of a colored church, and hence had only such glimpses of those two historic fields as could be obtained from the city. Lookout Mountain to the west lifted his head above the low-lying clouds, and on the east four miles or so away the waving line of hills showed where the rebel line was first assailed and rolled back when Grant and Sherman took the offensive in '63.

Chattanooga shows in every street the tokens of material prosperity. Large, new buildings filled with choice goods, well arranged, iron mills and cotton factories, these are signs that the life currents of society are moving, that the old South is dead, that the new South is here. Slavery cursed society in every way; it made soil and people poor. It was not only a sin against God and a crime against humanity, but it emptied the master's pocket at the same time that it hardened his heart. It is gone, and whites and blacks alike are glad. Its effects are not gone. In the caste prejudice, in race pride, in unsanctified disappointments, and, above all, in churches which attempt to couple the love of God with hatred and contempt for the poor negro, the spirit of slavery still lives, and, like the unquiet ghost of some foul murderer, lingers around the scenes of its unrepented crimes.

Brother S—— told us that every man in his church, with two exceptions only, was a member of one or more secret societies, most of them being Odd-fellows. He said that this same state of things, so far as he knew, prevailed generally throughout the South, and that he did not know of one colored church which could live if the lodge men were refused admission. Of course I do not profess to give his words, but his thought as nearly as I am able. He himself is a member of no secret society, and is opposed to them; but he says that his members, even when they are opposed to such orders, feel compelled to unite with them in order to get bread. In all these particulars he corroborated fully the testimony of a pastor in Nashville, who spoke to the same effect.

Leaving Chattanooga with these dreary words sounding in our ears, we took the train for Knoxville, one hundred and eleven miles to the north-east. Here we arrived without incident about three o'clock, and were met at the station by our good Brother Hinman, who, more than any other one man, opened this Southern field to our National Association.

Knoxville was the city of Parson Brownlow, and here his widow still resides. Mr. Brownlow was a Methodist minister, the editor of the Knoxville Whig, the Governor of the State, and a Senator in Congress. He was an unflinching Union man, a member of no secret society, and perhaps the most gifted in the use of invective of any man who ever spoke the English language. We may not criticize him. His was rough work and he was compelled to use rough tools. His sons were both officers in the Federal army; his daughters have several of them married Democrats.

This city is the seat of a number of educational institutions, chief among which in its interest for us is

KNOXVILLE COLLEGE.

Its president, Dr. McCulloch, was the presiding officer of our National Convention. At his home I was a guest while lecturing in New York city in 1874. To the College, after the adjournment of the Convention, I returned with Mrs. Blanchard to give an address to the students especially.

KNOXVILLE COLLEGE.

This institution was planted by the United Presbyterian church in 1875, and had last year three hundred and twenty-seven students. The buildings are entirely of brick, with stone trimmings, and are excellently well adapted to their intended use. They stand on a beautiful hill, only half a mile from Fort Saunders, where Longstreet charged Burnside's line in 1863. The earthworks of Longstreet's men ran directly across the College grounds, and are still plainly visible after twenty-three years of peace. These buildings are one hundred and ninety-four feet long, from forty to fifty wide, and four stories above a good basement in height.

There are several things which specially distinguish Knoxville College from other schools of similar character. In the first place it has connected with it the only colored church which excludes secret societies, of which I have yet been able to hear. I do not mean to say that it is exclusively colored, but its membership is mainly colored, and membership in a secret lodge shuts one out of the church. In the second place, all the work about the institution is done by the pupils,—washing, ironing, baking, table-setting, dish-washing. There is no hired help about the College. Yet this work is so well arranged and supervised that no pupil works more than one hour per day. And in the third place, the expenses are so reduced that a young man or woman who desires to attend here can do so at an expense of from fifty to seventy dollars for the entire year of nine months. These are three wonderful facts to me, and I think that the United Presbyterian church has very few investments which are paying as large an interest as this is.

In leaving this mountain city with its beauties and memories, there are a few impressions which I would gladly convey to others. It seems to me that there is no field where God's children should be more lavish of their means than here in the South. I do not depreciate the importance of other points, but here is a large population, eager to learn, capable of learning, naturally religious, by inheritance tractable; but just now in danger from these infidel associations known as lodges, from the liquor shop, from an ignorant ministry, and from the political demagogue. They need education and they need it NOW.

In the second place it seems to me that the two main lines of labor should be with the ministers and through the schools. If the ministers could be led to see how these lodges are sapping the foundations of the churches, and what God requires of them in view of this fact, I believe that many of them could be persuaded to take a stand against these iniquities. One of the prominent ministers of Knoxville told me that he intends to do so, and he was a few years since connected with six of these societies. To go on organizing new churches which are full of these orders, which must by and by be converted or useless, does not seem to me a wise use of the Lord's money. I do not at all profess to comprehend fully this field, but give my honest judgment from the limited observations which I have been enabled to make.

As to the schools, there is need of care and prayer for them, but there can be no question that they are to-day the hope of the colored race of the South. They are sending out young men and women who will be centers of influence all over the South, dotting the night of ignorance and immorality with stars of Christian light. The two schools which I have seen are open to our workers, and Mr. Hinman, who has been a conscientious and successful laborer here, tells me that, so far as he knows, all the Northern schools among the colored people are open to this along with other truth, except only Atlanta. The faculties and students of Fisk and Knoxville certainly gave me a candid and sympathetic hearing. I suppose that the same would be true of all others.

I trust that in these last days God's children will open their treasures and bring forth gifts, gold, frankincense, and myrrh. Oh, that the children of the kingdom would stop heaping up dirt, gathering together fuel for the last burning, spending upon the lust of the eyes, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life. Dear friends, can we not take hold of the Lord's work as never before, and fill our lives with more real labor for the good of men?

McLEANSVILLE, N. C., Jan. 21, '87.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—My visit to Boydton Institute was one of great interest. From there I went back thirty miles to the junction with the Richmond and Danville railroad, and then southwest to Clover in Halifax county, where I found Mrs. Miller, with whom we were associated in missionary work on the coast of Africa, and who is conducting here a flourishing school which is under the patronage of the P. E. Mission Board.

From there I went next morning to Greensboro, N. C., which I found a pleasant little city, the county-seat of Guilford county. In this part of the State there was before the war, and is still, a large Quaker element, which did, and still does, materially modify the conditions of society, both religious and political. I called on a leading "Friend," Mrs. Mendenhall, who expressed her hearty appreciation of our work, and directed me to Bennet Seminary, as a place I might profitably visit. This is a flourishing school, occupying a large, fine building on the border of the town, under the patronage of the M. E. church, and presided over by Rev. W. S. Steele. He received me most cordially, expressed his hearty sympathy with our work, and told me how as a young Methodist minister he was providentially kept out of the lodge. He said he should be very glad to have me address the school that evening, and referred me to the Baptist school as affording an opportunity of doing good. This is known as the "Baptist Normal and Theological Seminary," and is under the care of Hon. C. Davis, who was for some years a member of the Virginia State Senate, and a (colored) Baptist minister. He told me he was a Mason and Odd-fellow and belonged to several other orders and thought highly of them; nevertheless, if I wanted to address the school, I could do so at 9 A. M. next morning.

We had a most interesting and profitable meeting at the Bennet Seminary. I spoke an hour and had undivided attention. Prof. Steele expressed his hearty approval of what had been said; many questions were asked and tracts eagerly accepted. Next morning I visited the Baptist school and spoke twenty-five minutes, and was accorded a vote of thanks.

I then hastened back to the depot and took the Raleigh train for McLeansville, a little village eight miles east. A walk of three miles brought me to the hospitable and pleasant home of Rev. A. Connett, whom I found in his school room, his son, the teacher, being temporarily indisposed. Bro. Connett has been eight years laboring as a missionary of the A. M. A. He has borne faithful testimony against the lodge, and invites me to remain over Sabbath and address his people.

HILLSBORO, N. C., Jan. 25.—Guilford county, North Carolina, of which Greensboro is the county seat, has been the scene of the conflicting forces of Christianity and heathenism for a long period. Besides the silent influence of the Quakers, here the Wesleyans had some of their most earnest struggles. Hon. Daniel Worth and Adam Crooks suffered persecution and imprisonment for daring to speak against human slavery. Here, too, was the scene of "The Fool's Errand," and "Bricks Without Straw." Judge Tourgee lived in Greensboro, the "Verdensville" of his books, the representations of which were taken from life. Among the patient, earnest workers on this field is Rev. Alfred Connett, a native of Washington county, Pennsylvania, educated at Oberlin, and for the last eight years missionary of the A. M. A. He has a large commodious house of worship, which answers also for a school, and another smaller church and school house, respectively three miles south and one mile north of McLeansville, and east of Greensboro. In the larger house, there worships the First Congregational church of McLeansville. The Second Church worships in the smaller. There are about 200 members in the First, and fifty in the other. A good school is taught in each. I had the great pleasure of speaking to a full congregation in the First Church on the evening of the 22d, on the secret lodge system, and was heartily endorsed by the pastor who told me that not one of the members of either of these churches had joined any secret society, though much effort had been made to establish such societies among them.

On Sunday morning of the 23d I preached in the Second Church to an intelligent and attentive congregation, and in the afternoon to a similar audience in the First Church. At night I also spoke to a full house on Africa and its missions. On Monday night, the 24th, we went to the Second Church, where I lectured on the secret orders and was heartily endorsed by the pastor, who has not failed to let his testimony be heard on this question. During my five days' stay I was most kindly entertained by Bro. Connett and his excellent family, and was brought to the depot by one of his deacons, who spent most of his years under the yoke of slavery, but has never yet sold himself to the lodge.

Among the distinguished men in that vicinity is Rev. G. W. Walker, D. D., of the German Reformed church, a man distinguishing alike for his learning, piety, and missionary zeal. He preaches to several large congregations. He was loyal in the time of the war, has consistently opposed the fruit brandy and tobacco business, two sources of demoralization, and lifts up his voice against the lodge iniquity. He has served the people in the Legislature, and might have continued to do so if he would have consented. Guilford county and that Congressional district went Republican at the last election, but will soon go for Prohibition.

At 12 m. I left McLeansville for Hillsboro, thirty-six miles distant, where I am staying at the pleasant home of Rev. G. W. Walker, missionary of the A. M. A., who heard me lecture at Howard University in the fall of 1882, and was made an Anti-mason. He has since contended earnestly for the faith. I expect to speak to-night and to-morrow night to his people and then go to Raleigh. H. H. HINMAN.

FROM THE OHIO AGENT.

HOW TO START AN ODD-FELLOWS LODGE—A DEATH-BED CONFESSION AND PEACE.

SENECAVILLE, O., Jan. 26, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since last reporting I have spoken five times as follows: Rix Mills United Presbyterian church; Muskingum College, New Concord; and twice in the Free Methodist and once in the Wesleyan churches of this place. All meetings have been largely attended, notwithstanding dark nights, rain and mud. I have met the usual warm reception of friends and the frowns and curses of those who hate the light.

Anti-masonry is no new theme in this section. The Riches, John Levington, Ronayne and others have done work here which have left lasting impressions; nor has the constant agitation been helpful to the lodge as is in some places claimed by its members. They have recently brought the flag ends of a defunct lodge of I. O. O. F.'s here from a neighboring town. So far as I can learn they have only secured a few green boys who are more curious than wise, and who think more of a brass badge and a peculiar grip, than they do of an education or respectability. I don't think the thing can live long here. There is too much light to make skeleton shows very profitable.

Yesterday I met a lady who gave me the history of her husband's connection with the lodge, the substance of which I repeat, as it confirms the testimony of many that "Odd-fellowship will do to live by, but not to die by."

"My husband's name was B. F. Ward. He joined and was for some time a member of Quaker City Lodge of I. O. O. F.'s. We were living here when he was taken sick. A member of my husband's lodge by the name of Johnston came to see him. As I was in the next room while Mr. J. was talking with my husband, I overheard part of their conversation. Mr. J. said that my husband was not entitled to help from the lodge, as he was behind with his dues; but that the lodge would advance his dues and care for him, if he would let them bury him (provided he died), and this said he, "would help us start a lodge here." I did not like to have my husband used as an advertisement for the Odd-fellows, and told him so. He replied that I need have no fears of their burying him. As it became more evident that he could not live, he was much exercised about his salvation. My brother, Geo. Shaw, was called to pray for him. George requested him to pray for himself. He replied that he could not. God would not hear his prayer. When questioned, he said that something stood in his way, his soul was bound. He could not pray without a confession which he dared not make. After much urging and a great trial he said that his connection with the lodge stood in his way. He did not believe any man could be a Christian and stay in the lodge. A preacher by the name of Waltz was called in, who had been a lodge member, but who had silently stepped out. He praised God when he found Mr. W. had renounced the lodge. After this," said Mrs. W., "my husband found peace with God and died trusting in Jesus."

Much of my time of late has been occupied in securing readers for the Cynosure. Rev. J. H. Leiper recently in comparing the circulation of a good paper to the lecture work, said, "The lecturer comes and goes, but the paper comes, and comes, and comes." Will not our workers consider this. Yesterday and to-day Rev. Thompson and I have been riding through the mud over the hills getting new readers. As nearly every one we have asked has subscribed, we certainly cannot complain. A gentleman somewhat in years grasped my hand with a great deal of pleasure to-day, when he learned that I was a grandson of Pres. Blanchard. "Why!" said he, "I used to know about your grandfather in the old anti-slavery days. I remember well when he went to the town where Thaddeus Stevens lived to deliver an anti-slavery lecture. Mr. Stevens, a lawyer, was away from home at the time. The people refused to hear him and passed resolutions against him. When Mr. S. returned, learning what had been done he called a meeting of the citizens, reviewed their resolutions sharply and asked any citizen who would vote for them to stand up. No one arose. He then wrote Mr. Blanchard to return and lecture. He did so. Mr. S. sent him on his way with a twenty-dollar bill and told him to go ahead."

He had allowed his Cynosure to drop because of the hard times, but said he could not refuse to renew when asked by a grandson of Pres. Blanchard. Owing in part to the faithful work of Bro. John Leiper, and in part to the earnestness of our friends, I find that the Cynosure has had a place in many homes of this community for years. The friends showed their appreciation of my efforts by a liberal collection on last evening.

I would like to speak of the many who kindly entertain and assist me in the work, but should I commence I should not know where to end. I had hoped to have visited Whigsville, Summerfield and other points in this section, but as roads are very bad, will work north through Guernsey county. I go in the morning to Lore City, thence to Cambridge and north. W. B. STODDARD.

THE YEAR WELL BEGUN IN IOWA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On Dec. 31st, I lectured at Mt. Zion Presbyterian church and by invitation left an appointment for a second lecture the following week. Sabbath, Jan. 2nd, I preached in the U. P. church of Birmingham at 11 A. M., and in the Free Methodist church of Winchester at 7 P. M. On Monday night I lectured at Winchester, and though the lodge influence here is strong, the order was good. On Wednesday night I gave the second lecture at Mt. Zion church. I lectured at Tole's school-house, at the Lebanon Cumberland Presbyterian church, and at the Doud's Station Baptist church on the other evenings of the week in succession.

Sabbath evening, Jan. 9th, I preached in the same church on Satan's Conspiracy to supplant Christianity by substituting deistical infidelity through the secret lodge system. They have three lodges at Doud's. The Baptist church has become extinct, and the church edifice has fallen into decay. But for the fact that the Methodist circuit riders are giving them preaching once in two weeks, the women, children and cripples, that are not fit material for the temple of lodgery, would be without the means of grace.

Wednesday night I lectured at the Raney school-house, and Friday night at the Slab Town school-house. A brother, who has been an Odd-fellow, loudly praised Odd-fellowship for its benevolence, to those who stood around him after the meeting was closed. But, to my charge that Satan was working through Odd-fellowship, to popularize deistical infidelity and make it the universal religion of the world, he did not reply.

I have learned what was the benevolence of Odd-fellowship, as exhibited in the summary of Grand Lodge reports for Iowa from its introduction into the State until 1884. It seems that in Iowa three out of every eight dollars contributed by the order has been returned in relief. How long would the church send money to foreign missionaries through a missionary society that absorbed five out of every eight dollars contributed? They would immediately repudiate it. Yes, they would at once publish it as a swindle! Why should not the children of this world be as wise, at least financially, as the children of light?

Sabbath, Jan. 16th, I preached in the Christian church, four miles from Birmingham, morning and evening. On Monday night I was to have lectured at Kilburne, but the weather and going prevented my reaching that place till Tuesday. On Wednesday a notice was circulated, and that evening there was a full house, and close attention on the part of the Methodist brethren. On Thursday night I lectured at the Leech school-house, across the Des Moines river from Kilburne. Rain prevented a lecture Saturday evening at Pittsburgh, Van Buren Co. The class-leader of the M. E. church of Pittsburgh said that he was in sympathy with my work; that he had noticed that when a church member became a Mason he soon lost his interest in the church, and the Methodist church of Keosauqua had suffered loss from this cause. On Sabbath, Jan. 23rd, I preached to the United Presbyterian congregation at the Leech school-house.

Not long ago I sent twenty-six subscribers to the Cynosure; more recently I sent thirty-one more. Let us unitedly pray and unitedly work to prepare the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight; not doubting but what his kingdom will come in power, and prevail over the saloon, the lodge and the brothel; yea, mightily prevail, until the stone cut out

CORRESPONDENCE.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

THE PASTOR OF BOWDOIN SQUARE CHURCH.

Opinion concerning the exiled preacher of the old Baptist society of Bowdoin Square, has wonderfully changed in his favor, and even the bitterness of his worst opposers begins to be tinged with sweetness. In the afflicted minister the community, though rather tardily, begins to see an exemplification of the immortal lines of the great poet, "truth crushed to earth will rise again." It has been a weary drag of one long and tumultuous year under indictment and bonds, subjected to gross misrepresentations, insults and ridicule, reduced to extreme poverty and misery. He has been ignored and denied a fair hearing by brother ministers, who should have eagerly obeyed the injunction: "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou also be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ." Gal. 6:1, 2. Before the papers took the matter up, at the onset, these men should have performed their duty, leaving the consequence with God. Whether they are aware of it or not, at their door lies the (indirect) cause, I think, of a very large proportion of the magnitude which this case has assumed. Said Mr. Downs, "Had one of them, Dr. Gordon, for instance, called on me, I would have taken him by the hand and said, 'I am innocent of these charges. Will you stand by me until I am proven guilty or not?'" Could anything be more fair?

After bearing all I have enumerated, and after thumping one year at the court-house doors, begging for a trial; in fact, endeavoring in every way to pronounce the magical sesame which ought to have opened those doors long ago, Mr. Downs to his disappointment finds himself acquitted by the courts,—his case nolle prosequi on the ground of "lack of evidence against him," and yet Judge Allen at a late hearing of the Taber vs. Taber divorce case, stated, in substance, that if he did not say he believed Mr. Downs and Mrs. Taber guilty he would be unworthy to occupy his position. Since, however, District Attorney Stevens has dismissed Mr. Downs's case, the very pertinent question of the public is, On what evidence did the Judge base his opinion? On what evidence did the Baptist ministry base their severe judgment. The reply to man's query is of little importance. What it will be to God's will be known at the judgment.

Another reason rendered by Mr. Stevens was a desire to protect public morals, a very worthy sentiment indeed, in itself, but hardly consistent, it must certainly appear to candid minds in examination, in its connection with this case, for, during the past year, as alleged by the defendants, the court has not hesitated in securing the most revolting immoral evidence. The impression apparently given is, that at a trial the disclosure of Mr. Downs's doings would affect public morals. If there is not sufficient evidence against Mr. Downs to try his case, as the court now claims, how could any revelations concerning him affect public morals?

Can it be, as many suspect, that the Secret Empire governs the case in the interest of Mr. Downs's persecutors? Can it be that in this noble man, who comes so fearlessly to the light to have the charges preferred against him investigated, we have another Morgan, so far as the persecution is concerned. Of course it is to be hoped that such is not the case. Several of Mr. Downs's chief enemies, however, including Taber himself, are members of the same lodge of Freemasons. Several of the court officers before whom these matters have come are also Masons; and, although Mr. Downs was once himself a member of Architect Lodge, 519, F. & A. M., in New York city, he makes "no bones" of openly declaring that in this long and bitter contest against the combined powers of darkness, Masonry has been used against him for all it is worth.

SAM JONES IN BOSTON.

Sam Jones has set up his guns in the People's Church and fired his first shot at the almost impregnable strongholds of Boston iniquity? I say Boston iniquity, not because wickedness in itself is different anywhere, but because the expression of it in this city is peculiar. Before he leaves Mr. Jones will discover that the cardinal sin, in the estimation of a Boston sinner, is the deficiency in the ability of even a repenting sinner to express his contrition in a rhetorical or educated manner. Let a poor penitent use two negatives in conflict, or pronounce one syllable out of fashion and the hideousness of his crimes will be forgotten in his transgression against grammar. Sam Jones may fire away to his heart's content at the dens of infamy, gambling hells and rum holes and not receive one exchange shot; he may attempt to unveil duplicity and rottenness in high places and low and receive only a playful shrug of the shoulders or a knowing wink; but let him strike one blow at its established rules of etiquette, or pet educational vanities, and he will find himself in a hornet's nest immediately. Boston is aware of its crimes, its general sinfulness—as well as brother Sam. Moody, and even eccentric Henry Morgan, awakened them to that fact. It has been struck so hard and often that these parts have become thoroughly calloused. It has only one vulnerable spot,—its weakness for educational superiority and caste. If he can get a bullet in here he will bring the hippopotamus down, when he will be able to dissect him at his pleasure.

Pastor Davis, in preparing his church for the preacher's coming, said that although he would doubtless shock a great many, he would nevertheless, he believed, do good in his own peculiar manner. They must let him have his own way and prepare themselves as spiritual reapers to gather into the garner the bountiful harvest which Mr. Jones's efforts would doubtless yield. If he did not believe in the sincerity of Mr. Jones, with all his eccentricity, he would not have sanctioned the use of his pulpit. Such an indorsement from one so honored and beloved as young pastor Davis can hardly fail to have an influence in dispelling apparent prejudice against the famous exhorter. That Sam Jones is just the remedy Boston needs is a question which cannot be answered until this already overdosed child has swallowed him. If he were not so conspicuously labeled "Methodist" he might go down; but that name to a Bostonian is very much like the words "castor oil" to a youngster. Boston is anything but Methodist. Here the bone of religious "ism" lies between Baptistism and Unitarianism. Had he labeled himself unsectarian there would be little doubt as to his success. Sam, on the contrary, is actually wrapped up in Methodism. Howsoever, Methodist medicine is good, very efficacious—if the patient will take it. Let us wait and see if Sam can make it palatable enough for the average Bostonian, in spite of his "culchah."

D. P. MATHEWS.

TEN YEARS OF THE NEW HAMPSHIRE ASSOCIATION.

The first decade of the New Hampshire Christian Association having passed, it is fitting to pause and review the years, so fraught with interest and encouragement. In June, 1875, at the Yearly Meeting of the New Hampshire Freewill Baptists held at Farmington, a mild resolution reaffirming the Anti-masonic position of the denomination was voted down without debate. Whereupon thirteen Christian men met and voted to request all interested in the inquiry as to the moral and religious influence of oathbound secret societies to tarry for consultation at the close of the next public service. A large number remained, but the Freemasons in the person of three popular preachers consumed so much time in defence of secretism, although pungently rebuked for diverting the meeting from its real purpose, that no business could be done. Nothing daunted the meeting adjourned to the close of the evening public service, when a committee of five was chosen to call a State convention to organize a N. H. C. A. auxiliary to the National Christian Association. This convention was held at Lake Village in November. Rev. J. P. Stoddard of Ill., and Rev. D. P. Rathbun of N. Y., were the speakers. Elder J. F. Browne was chosen President and S. C. Kimball secretary. Although the association was organized specially to oppose the corrupting influence of secret societies yet it has resolutely discountenanced all popular evils as they have appeared. In these earlier years our workers often met with insult and abuse, while their meetings and lectures were disturbed by outrageous and riotous proceedings. These offensive demonstrations by the fraternities have long since ceased. When this association was formed scarcely a Christian man in N. H. dared, above his breath, to speak his honest opinion of secret societies. Now young men in college brave class ostracism rather than join a secret fraternity; ministers boldly assail the whole lodge system in their conferences; while the number of intelligent and outspoken opponents of secretism is steadily increasing.

In consequence of this change in public sentiment the deluded dupes of the various lodges find far less difficulty in breaking away from the bonds of Satan, and some are being led by the cords of Christian love into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. To be sure, some of the lodges truly claim that their members have not diminished; but when ministers, deacons, and other Christians are coming out, their places are filled by men whose presence in the lodge effectually closes the door against every intelligent Christian. One of the characteristics of this association is that as Christian women were among its founders, so they have been among its most faithful and efficient laborers; nor is this to be wondered at when we remember that heart-broken wives and mothers suffer most keenly from the slimy trail of the lodge serpent.

TRUTH WELCOMED IN CINCINNATI.

CINCINNATI, O., Jan. 21, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The National Reform Association proposes to harmonize all elements of society, laborers and capitalists, rulers and ruled, by introducing the divine law in every sphere. "The rich and poor meet together: the Lord is the Maker of them all."

On last Sabbath morning I preached in the First Presbyterian church, 4th street, Rev. F. C. Monfort, D. D., pastor. This is an old and substantial congregation. They have 350 members and as many scholars in their Sabbath-school. They are carrying on a mission in Pilgrim Chapel, Lock street. There are more than 100 members and 150 scholars. The Dr. preaches here every Sabbath evening. There was a large audience and the best of attention.

On Sabbath evening I preached in Asbury M. E. church, Rev. L. F. Van Cleve, D. D., pastor. The membership here is 275, and 300 Sabbath-school children. We had a large and enthusiastic audience. The Dr. thanked the Lord that these good and wholesome truths had been brought to them, and prayed that they might be proclaimed all over this land. One brother said, "I felt like shouting amen all through your sermon. I heard Francis Murphy, but yours is an electric light compared with his." This indicates the direction of the wind.

Monday afternoon, at the ministers' meeting, "the second coming of Christ" was discussed. Rev. A. Ritchie read the paper. He urged the pre-millennial-council view. He adopted a middle ground between Drs. Brown and Kellogg. He thinks the world will become more intensely wicked until Christ comes; then the righteous dead will be raised and reign with Christ on earth a thousand years; then the wicked dead will be raised. From these Satan will muster an army and compass the camp of the saints. Then cometh the end. The members generally adhered to the orthodox view: When Christ comes the second time it will be "without sin unto salvation." "Whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things, spoken of by the mouth of all the prophets since the world began."

On Tuesday I visited the Lebanon Normal School, where are 700 students. The president said they were very much cramped for time. They began at 7 A. M. and continued until 9 P. M., and thus they worked fifty weeks in the year. But they are ready to give moral reform a hearing. Accordingly arrangements were completed for a lecture. He said I must come to his house and be their guest. They have a prophet's chamber and entertain their friends. What medicine that is for a reformer's heart! It makes him feel that the kingdom is coming at once.

On Wednesday evening I preached in the Fourth Presbyterian church, Rev. R. H. Leonard, pastor, on the "Gospel for the Nations." The interest deepened to the end. It is good for one's soul to talk to such earnest, enthusiastic people. They are ripe for the Master's use.

I called on the editor of the Commercial Gazette, Murat Halstead. He said he was willing to give our cause a hearing. Accordingly last Monday one-third of a column was devoted to our statement of the character and work of our society. The editor of the Times-Star made a similar promise. The editor of the Herald and Presbyterian, a Presbyterian weekly, kindly offered his columns to discuss the Christian theory of civil government.

Last Saturday I met with the superintendent and principals of our city schools and heard them discuss the proposal of the superintendent to abolish written examinations as the basis of promotion. He told them they were in a rut here and must get out. He would not abolish written examinations as tests of knowledge, but only as the ground of promotion. The superintendent, Prof. Emerson E. White, L. L. D., is a new man here, and is doing a good work. I held an interview with him, and when I mentioned our work, he said, "I heard of your movement in western Pennsylvania. I have heard Dr. Sloane discuss it. I crossed the ocean with him once, and he told me all about it." He offered to aid me in general ways in getting a hearing in our city.

Francis Murphy returns and begins a two weeks' campaign next Sabbath evening. He is to hold his meetings in the Ninth Street Baptist church, Rev. Johnston Myers, pastor. The Commercial Gazette has raised him a fund of $500, so that he will not have to ding at his audience every night for a collection to pay expenses. He has been often and bitterly assailed, but he takes it all kindly. His motto is, "Malice toward none; charity for all." It was Lincoln's duty once to give an official reprimand to a young officer who had been court-martialed for a quarrel with one of his associates. It is "the gentlest recorded in the annals of penal discourses." Here it is: "The advice of a father to his son, 'Beware of entrance to a quarrel, but being in, bear it that the opposed may beware of thee!' is good, but not the best. Quarrel not at all. No man resolved to make the most of himself can spare time for personal contention. Still less can he afford to take all the consequences, including the vitiating of his temper, and the loss of self-control. Yield larger things to which you can show no more than equal right; and yield lesser ones though clearly your own. Better give your part to a dog, than be bitten by him in contesting for the right. Even killing the dog would not cure the bite." J. M. FOSTER.

PITH AND POINT.

A LODGE FOR EVERY 350 PEOPLE.

In our little town of 7,000, we have twenty secret societies, as reported by the R. W. Printing Co.'s Annual for 1887. Open anti-secrecy finds little open favor but much fear. Born in 1820, and brought up in central New York, I have quite a distinct recollection of the early days of Anti-masonry and Abolition, and am "died in the wool" on those reforms, as well as those of the present day. I am glad to join you in looking for the glorious coming of the Master, in these things, before he shall come in person to judge the world.—S. S. GRAN- NIS, Red Wing, Minn.

A CYNOSURE WELCOME.

The visit of our friend this morning which 52 times the past year has gladdened our hearts, is to us as fresh and welcome as ever in its history. Its battles are the severest of anything on the record of time. May the struggling army fight the battle to the end and the victory for God and man be made complete. May this year be the best in all its existence crowned with glory and honor and eternal life.—STEPHEN GROVER, East Boston, Mass.

FROM AN AGED "ELECT LADY."

I have long desired to know that my donation to the reform is paid up before I go hence and be no more, therefore, having forty dollars on hand, I forward it now knowing you will understand it and give it proper attention. I am not as well as usual, but have sufficient health to cause my heart to overflow with gratitude to my Shepherd who supplies all my wants. The weekly visits of the Cynosure are food for my soul. I read it with increasing interest and feel that I have an interest in the prayers of those who are praying for the downfall of Satan's kingdom. May God speed the time, is the prayer of your sister in Christ.—SALLY GILKREY.

THIS MAKES THE EDITOR FORGET HIS TROUBLES.

I consider the Cynosure one of the best papers published, and heartily wish all the good people of our country could be rallied to the support of anti-secret society principles, which it so ably advocates.—W. G. WADDLE, New Athens, Ohio.

BIBLE LESSONS.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON VII.—February 13.—God's Covenant with Abram.—Gen. 15: 5-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Fear not, Abram, I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward.—Gen. 15: 1.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]
From Peloubet's Notes.

"Look now toward heaven, and tell the stars if thou be able to number them." In the promise to Noah, the rainbow was made a sign, appearing occasionally, but at the very times when fears for the fulfillment of the promise would naturally arise. To Abraham God gives a brighter sign, that every night would speak to him of God's faithfulness.

"So shall thy seed be." (1) His natural descendants, who, during the last 4,000 years, are countless, and the end is not yet. (2) His spiritual descendants through Christ, the children of Abraham through faith (Gal. 3: 29). These, too, are innumerable. (3) These descendants shine like the stars upon the darkness of earth, and are the permanent, as well as shining, proofs of God's faithfulness and love. The promise of so many descendants included in it the promise of protection, for he could not have the children unless he was preserved.

"And he counted (reckoned, imputed, set to his account) (his faith) to him for righteousness." (1) In this case Abraham could do nothing but trust; there was no way of manifesting his faith by works, as there was later in the sacrifice of Isaac, and therefore the Lord accepted his faith (his loving heart, that would obey if it could, but could only choose, and trust and love) in the place of deeds of righteousness. Just as a loving desire to help, which is kept from putting itself into action by poverty, is accepted in place of the kind gifts that would gladly be given. The faith that cannot manifest itself in works, but would if it could, is accepted in place of the works. As shown by St. Paul, in Rom. 4, Abraham did not in any way earn or merit the things promised. God did not make the promises to him because Abraham had any claim upon him, but of his own free goodness. Abraham accepted them as God's free gift, and God treated him just as if he had deserved them. He fulfilled every promise as perfectly as if he were under obligation to Abraham. The faith was the source and fountain of righteousness. It was a faith that obeyed that bore fruit wherever fruit was possible. But in itself a loving, trusting heart is the best righteousness, is that which God most desires in us, and all the "good works" in the world, without this, are nothing (see James 2: 17-24).

"I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur." It was in God's plan, in bringing him out of Ur, to give him possession of Canaan. This is enough. Will God now falter or fail in the midst? So the Christian may encourage himself in God by looking back at all that God has already done for him, at the ways in which he has already led him.—Jacobus

"Take me a heifer, etc." The way in which the Lord chose to meet his wish is in all respects remarkable. He entered into a formal ritual covenant with him, after the manner of men.—Kitto. This form of making a covenant was probably that usual in Babylonia, and thus Abram received the assurance of his inheritance by means of a ceremonial with which he was familiar.—Ellicott.

"When the fowls came down... Abram drove them away." The descent of the fowls may be regarded as emblematic of those obstructions to communion with God which arise from (1) the principalities and powers of the air. (2) The persecutions and oppressions (or, where these are absent, the pleasures and engagements) of the world. (3) The disturbances and distractions of vain thoughts and sinful motions in the heart. How they were removed: (1) By watchfulness. (2) By opposition. (3) By perseverance. (4) By divine help.—Whitlaw.

"For the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." As the chief and leading tribe, they are used here for all the Canaanite nations. We learn from this declaration that the Canaanites were not extirpated by any wilful decree to make room for Israel, but as an act of justice, like that which, because of their moral depravity, overwhelmed the Sethites with a flood.—Ellicott. From this simple sentence we have much to learn. (1) The Lord foreknows the moral character of men. (2) In his providence he administers the affairs of nations on the principle of moral rectitude. (3) Nations are spared until their iniquity is full. (4) They are then cut off in retributive justice.—Murphy.

"Behold a smoking furnace and a burning lamp." It is the symbol of the gracious presence of God; the splendor of his glory, the consuming fire of his holiness, which no mere human eye can bear, before which no sinful child of man can stand, is veiled beneath his grace.—Kurtz.

"That passed between those pieces." The oven of smoke and lamp of flame symbolizes the smoke of destruction and the light of salvation. Their passing through the pieces of the victims, and probably consuming them as an accepted sacrifice, are the ratification of the covenant on the part of God, as the dividing and presenting of them on the part of Abram.—Murphy.

"The Lord made a covenant with Abram." A solemn agreement or promise on the Lord's part, and absolute faith in it, acceptance of it on the part of Abraham. To estimate the full effect of this awful solemnity upon the mind of Abraham, it should be borne in mind what solemn importance was, in ancient times, attached to oaths and covenants in almost all nations, even those who, in the ordinary intercourse of life, were by no means remarkable for truthfulness. The judicial legislation of the East does at this day recognize a false oath as a moral impossibility. Even in ancient Greece, where a lie was a small matter, to distrust an oath seems to have been regarded as a high crime.

MASONIC OATHS,

BY

E. Ronayne,

Past Master of Keystone Lodge,
No. 639, Chicago.

A masterly discussion of the Oaths of the Masonic Lodge, to which is appended "Freemasonry at a Glance," illustrating every sign, grip and ceremony of the Masonic Lodge. This work is highly commended by leading lecturers as furnishing the best fragments of the nature and actual character of Masonic obligations of any book in print. Paper cover, 201 pages. Price, 40 cents.

National Christian Association,
921 West Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington, in a letter written a year before his death: "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice during the last thirty years."

President Millard Fillmore, J. C. Spencer and others: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Chief Justice John Marshall: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of much evil and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

John Quincy Adams: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

General A. W. Riley: "I hold that the difference between the Christian and a heathen religion is, that one has morality and the other has not. And when our churches refuse to speak of such subjects as slavery, liquor-selling and secret societies, they are becoming heathen religions; that is, religions without morals."

Charles Francis Adams: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act, unless it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond, even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Charles Sumner: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistic to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield: In conducting the governments of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but secret orders to be considered, which have agents everywhere—reckless agents, who countenance assassination, and, if necessary, can produce a massacre."

General J. W. Phelps: "All secret organizations are links of one and the same chain which binds men to evil and not to good. The Masonic lodge is the parent source from which all similar modern organizations have emanated and this lodge is now in active operation in every city and considerable village of the country swaying our parties and churches; filling our offices, secular and divine, with its partisans; shaping our political destinies; and teaching a spurious and corrupting morality subversive both of the Christian religion and of free institutions."

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

A. M. Sullivan, Irish Leader: I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regarded them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization and are often on the whole more perilous to society than open tyranny."

Hon. Edward Blake, leader in Canadian Parliament, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

James G. Birney, candidate of the Liberty party for President, was a Freemason, "but never entered a lodge after he joined the church, and, as his sons grew up, he cautioned them against joining any secret order."—Gen. Wm. Birney.

Hon. Ezra Butler, ex-Governor of Vermont: "One Masonic obligation requires that a Mason shall vote for a brother in preference to any other person of equal qualifications. Is not this political Masonry? The Masons in Vermont are about one-twentieth part of the freemen, and they hold about three-fourths of all the important offices in the State. Is this owing to their superior fitness, or to political Masonry?"

Philo Carpenter: "This saint of God (Moses Stuart) like the old prophets, was satisfied with the institutions and ordinances of God's house, and consequently did not give his influence or aid in supplementing the same with human ordinances and worldly alliances; in other words, he was opposed to secret, oath-bound societies, into which many good men, and even clergymen, have been, and are being 'ensnared.'"

Charles P. Sumner, father of the Senator, and a renouncing Mason: "Masonic engagements, whether they are called oaths, obligations, or promises, ought never to be made. They are not sanctioned by law and are not obligatory. They make it a Masonic crime to divulge that which the good of the community requires should not be concealed."

Hon. Cadwallader C. Colden, Mayor of New York and M. C.: "It is true that I have been a Mason a great number of years, and that I have held very high Masonic offices and honors. It is equally true that I have for a long time ceased to have any connection with the institution because I have believed, and do now believe, it is productive of much more evil than good. I have long entertained my present opinion, that a man who would eschew all evil should not be a Freemason."

Horace Greeley: "Many persons were brought to trial on account of the murder of Morgan, but no one was judicially found guilty of murder. It was established by seceding Masons that the oaths—at least in some of the highest degrees—that were administered, and taken by those admitted to Masonic lodges, disqualified them from serving as jurors in any case where a brother Mason of like degree was a party, and his antagonist was not."

Hon. Seth M. Gates, ex-Mason: "Profoundly convinced by long experience and observation that Freemasonry is an evil and pernicious institution. I wish once more in my advanced age to lift my warning voice publicly against it and all kindred organizations, and to beseech Christian men to have no connection or fellowship with them. Jesus is not, and cannot properly be recognized in Freemasonry. He must be ignored in the lodge-room, in its lectures, instructions, and in its prayers."

Hon. Heman Lincoln, ex-Governor, Mass.: "Freemasonry, as a distinct, independent government within our own government, and beyond the control of the laws of the land, by means of its secrecy and the oaths and regulations which its subjects are bound to obey under penalties of death, has occupied much of the attention of the committee."

We believe, in the language of the Edinburgh Review, that all secret societies are justly deemed odious, wherever the government is tolerably free, and can only be excused where the existence of arbitrary power, foreign or domestic, leaves no other means of escaping from hopeless slavery.

Gen. Henry Sewall, a companion of Washington: "I was initiated an Entered Apprentice to the Masonic rites in October, 1777, at Albany, soon after the capture of Burgoyne, being then an officer in the American army. . . . I was led by the influence of this 'perfect rule of faith and practice,' during the year 1784, to view speculative Masonry in a shape still more deformed. Its charity appeared to be selfishness, because restricted to its own members; its religion deism because entirely devoid of the Gospel. Its history appeared fabulous; its claims to antiquity unsustainable; its titles fulsome; its rites barbarous and absurd; its oaths extra-judicial, unlawfully imposed and blindly taken, and the penal sanctions annexed, horrid and impious."

WEBSTER AGONISTES,

OR THE AMERICAN SAMPSON.

Milton entitled his tragedy, "Samson Agonistes," from the resemblance of Samson's exploits to those of an athlete or champion. Allowing for the difference of their times between physical and moral sense and intellect, the life of Webster was nearly a transcript of the life of the Nazirite. Both had pious parents. Both were miraculously endowed. Each succumbed to his degenerate age. Both became voluptuous and lost their strength. Both became slaves of slave-holders, tyrants and oppressors of their country; and both were mocked by them. Both died disappointed. The sun of both set in clouds; yet sent forth, through the gloom which covered them, gleams of unearthly brightness, testifying to the true religion, "obtaining a good report through faith." Both left stories which parents will always tell to their children; and both left names over which Christian patriots have "Shed tears feelingly and fast."

This sketch is not a biography. That is not needed. Curtis, Ticknor, Lodge, Harvey, the general press, Congressional records, and an army of review writers have made Webster's life familiar. His Puritan descent; his log-cabin birth in his forest home in Salisbury, N. H., in 1782; his stalwart, swarthy father, at once ranger, Indian-fighter, farmer, judge, and Revolutionary captain when he guarded the tent of Washington; his puny infancy, like the babyhood of Sir Isaac Newton, which, unlike Newton's, waxed into a robust, muscular manhood which a fabled Apollo or Hercules might have envied; as also, his early struggles, education at Dartmouth, his resplendent success at the bar and in the Senate, his world wide fame in diplomacy, his longing for the Presidency, his bitter, life-crushing mortification at his final failure, his death and funeral at Marshfield,—these are all familiar to American readers.

This sketch aspires to a photographic likeness of Mr. Webster taken under the camera of reform, that the readers of the Cynosure, especially our young readers, may gain wisdom from his lofty example as sailors get light from some towering lighthouse, not to guide their course by (the chart and compass must do that), but to escape life's rocks and breakers by shunning his frailties and mistakes.

Young Webster, when a child, could repeat Watts's Lyric Poems, taught him by his mother at her spinning wheel, and when the old master in the low log schoolhouse offered the prize of a jack-knife to the boy who should repeat most texts of Scripture, the lad recited the Bible till the good old man cried "Enough!" and gave him the coveted prize. This simple, sublime literature, with the learning imparted by the still, solemn forests and their wild inhabitants,

"The melody of woods and winds and waters," which stretched from his father's cabin to the British possessions,

"And the hills
Rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun;"
these were the teachers of this extraordinary child; and their lessons followed him till at three score and ten he wrote the epitaph which is chiseled on his monument in the vast New York City Park: "LORD, I BELIEVE; HELP THOU MINE UNBELIEF"—that beautiful prayer by which a father prevailed with the Saviour for a son over whom the enemy had prevailed for a time.

Mr. Webster was born when the United States was six years old. He read his first lessons by the light of the furnaces which forged out our liberties. His father helped light those furnace fires. The church of Christ, the sun-clothed, star-crowned woman of the Revelation had fled to the American wilderness from the man-devised dragon-worships of the old world; and "the wings of a great eagle" which brought her here, were the sails of the Mayflower.

"That ill-fated bark,

Built in th' eclipse and rigged with curses dark"

landed slavery at Jamestown, Va., the very year when the Mayflower anchored at Plymouth. But the first two slaves brought to New England were sent back to Africa at the public expense; and the bringer was denied communion with the church. But the Masonic lodge, which swears men, on penalty of death by mangling, to abjectly obey unknown superiors, had been in New England forty-nine years when Webster was born. But it had not yet polluted the church or darkened the popular mind. The clergy of New England said the lodge belonged to "the kingdom of Satan"; and that Freemasons were "hand-in-hand with the devil." The venerable Storrs of Braintree assured the writer that the above were the opinions of the New England ministers during and prior to his youth, which was the period of Webster's birth. Such was the doctrine of New England divines. Her statesmen were equally explicit. In 1776, six years before Webster's birth, they had declared liberty which the lodge swears away to be the birth-right of man, natural and inalienable. A man therefore cannot sell himself as a slave. The moment the buyer takes his purchase he takes all the slave is and has: and a bargain without a legal consideration is not traffic but crime. The lodge is equally criminal with slavery. The Mason swears to obey Masonic signs wherever sent him, and that not for compensation, but at his peril if he disobeys. Of course such a promise has—can have no legal consideration. If others swear a like abject obedience to him, that only doubles the crime: and as Christ's life and teachings were a protest against secret religions, every Masonic oath is a sworn insult to the Son of God. This was the voice of New England. John Hancock, who, more than any other signer of the national Declaration, felt and reflected popular sentiment, said; "I am opposed to all secret associations."

Such was the country and condition of things when Webster stepped on the public stage. It was the advent of an era. He excelled men in intellect as Samson did in strength: and like Samson he began to deliver his country from the two curses which threatened its life, despotism and Dagonism—slavery and the lodge. Years afterward when Sumner succeeded Webster as Senator, he wrote to Mr. Greene:

"I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both antagonistic to our free institutions,—Freemasonry and Slavery. They must both be destroyed if our country is to be what our ancestors designed it."

Against these two foes of our Republic Mr. Webster struck blows which nobody could equal, much less excel.

The slaves were now three millions. They could not yet wear fetters in New England, but furnaces in sight of Plymouth Rock made hand-cuffs and chains and sold them South. The slaves, too, made molasses which Atlantic cities converted into rum. Slavery was corrupting politics and Freemasonry the church. Webster was thirty-seven years old, and in Congress. The original understanding when the Constitution was adopted was that there should be no more slave States; and that slavery itself was to cease in twenty years (1803) when the slave trade was to be and was abolished. The word "slaves" was not permitted in the Constitution, that posterity might not know there were any. But cotton, molasses and rum were affecting the North; as Phillip, the father of Alexander, subdued cities by introducing "an ass load of gold." In 1819 the slaveholders demanded the admission of Missouri with slavery in its constitution, boldly demanding one-half the country for slavery; which being gained they soon demanded the whole, including Bunker Hill!

In this debate Mr. Webster first stood up against the Philistine aggression. He said:

"We appeal to the justice and the wisdom of the National Councils to prevent the further progress of a great and serious evil. * * * We appeal to those who look forward against a permanent, growing and desolating evil. * * * We have a strong feeling of the injustice of any toleration of slavery. But to permit it in a new country where no habits are formed which render it indispensable, what is it but to encourage that rapacity and fraud and violence against which we have so long pointed the denunciation of our penal code."

This was spoken encircled by slave-holders, and these excerpts are but sparks taken as specimens of a flame. But next year (1820), Mr. Webster was invited to speak at Plymouth, Dec 22, the day of the landing of the Pilgrims, a custom originated by the Congregational ministry to perpetuate their memory and preserve their principles from decay. In that Plymouth Rock speech many believe Mr. Webster ascended to the pinnacle of his fame. Among these were Ticknor, Chief Justice Story, and, above all, the venerable patriot, John Adams, the most eloquent orator of the Congress of the Revolution, who had heard Pitt and Burke and Sheridan, who was at the trial of Warren Hastings and who had been President of the United States. This great man, orator, and statesman wrote to a young man then thirty-eight years of age: "Mr. Burke is no longer entitled to the praise—the most consummate orator of modern times." On that day the past and the future seemed to meet. History and humanity, reason, religion and God stood with Mr. Webster and spoke through him.

"I hear the sound of the hammer; I see the smoke of the furnaces where manacles and fetters are still forged for human limbs. I see the visages of those who, by stealth and at midnight labor in this work of hell, foul and dark, as may become the artificers of such instruments of misery and torture." "That ocean, * * * what is it to the victim of this oppression when he is brought to its shores and looks forth upon it for the first time, loaded with chains and bleeding with stripes." "If the pulpit be silent whenever or wherever there may be a sinner bloody with the guilt of this traffic, the pulpit is false to its trust." Well might the venerable patriot quoted above say; "If there be an American who can read that speech without tears, I am not that American."

We thus see that Mr. Webster smote not only the slave trade but slavery itself, as Samson the Philistines, "hip and thigh." If he had seen the bloody fields of 1861-5 in vision, his words of denunciation could not have been more just; and ten years later he stood like adamant against compromise or slavery extension. And when the right of petition and free discussion of slavery was haughtily denied, he met the arrogant demand for unquestioning submission to the slave power with: "It is the ancient constitutional right of this people to canvass public measures and the merits of public men. It is a home-bred right, a freiside privilege. It has ever been enjoyed in every house, cottage and cabin in the nation. It is not to be drawn into controversy. * * * Living I will assert it, dying I will assert it; and should I leave no other legacy to my children, by the blessing of God I will leave them the inheritance of free principles and the example of a manly, independent, constitutional defence of them."

One who should have predicted his 7th of March speech from the lips which uttered the above would have seemed a sprite from the pit. That speech advocated the infamous fugitive slave bill of 1850; the seizure and return of fugitive slaves while utterly silent concerning slavery itself. It scouted the Wilmot Proviso, which asserted only his own previous doctrine of the non-extension of slavery; and, to crown the horror of his fall, in the words of his biographer, Lodge, "He stood forth as the champion of the Southern policy of placing the territories in the grasp of slavery." A great star had fallen from the firmament of liberty, which, like that in the Revelation, turned a third part of the waters of truth to wormwood. (Rev. 8:11.) But the Abolitionists survived the shock and rallied. Mrs. Stowe ridiculed the fall of Webster in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and five years after (1856) a million and a half votes were cast for Fremont.

The causes which produced this national catastrophe (for Mr. Webster's fall was no less) were various. Popular applause, always a powerful solvent of integrity, in his case amounted almost to adoration; and his kingly form and universally acknowledged superiority lifted him up so high that he had nobody to compare himself with and seemed to exempt himself from the necessity of paying his debts and living like ordinary men. Then the cotton, molasses and rum corrupted the Atlantic cities which were his clients and princely supporters and enslaved him to their "Southern trade." And as his years increased more liquor became necessary to keep up his waning strength, till his flask was his constant companion. All these foes might have been conquered, but when he saw General Taylor, a man whose principles were unknown, nominated for President by that Whig party of which he himself was considered the founder, placing him beyond all rational hope of reaching the first office in the world, he denounced the nomination, forsook the Whig party, and advised his followers to vote for Democracy and Franklin Pierce, whose one only fitness for the Presidency was subservience to the slave power. What slew Samson slew him. He felt as Samson did when three thousand Israelites, his own people, instead of accepting him as their divinely commissioned leader, after he had shown himself capable of subduing their enemies, went up to him in the rock Etam to bind Samson by "the compromises of their constitution" and give him up to the Philistines (Judges 15:11), to worship his gods.

In 1835, when Mr. Webster still wore the locks of his strength, the Dagon-worshippers of the lodge murdered a citizen of New York, and the popular leaders appealed to Mr. Webster. He replied: "All secret associations * * * are dangerous to the cause of civil liberty and just government. Under the influence of this conviction it is my opinion that the future administration of all such oaths and obligations should be prohibited by law." The Freemasons never forgave Webster that great utterance as they never forgave Seward for a similar one. They crawled, they hissed in their secret dens. Their lodge-rooms are caucuses in perpetual session. They joined the Freemasons of the South. They ejected Adams and held Liberty and the country by the throat till God raised up Lincoln and his Cabinet of Anti-masons in answer to the prayers of godly men and women, who had at one time two thousand Abolition societies with a concert of prayer for every one! Then slavery fell "by act of God" and the hand of Abraham Lincoln! O, if the churches of Christ, which he joined in his youth, by Webster's advice had stood firm against the Christless temples of Dagon, our mighty Samson would not like the ancient Nazirite have lost his locks of strength,

"Eyeless in Gaza at a mill with slaves."

But let us rejoice that the deliverance which both these mighty men began has been completed. The worship of Jehovah was restored in Judah and lodge-sheltered slavery has fallen in the United States. Samson, though taken captive for his sins, never swerved from the true God to little lodge-gods of his day, and Webster wrote his own epitaph beginning with a prayer to Christ.

"No further seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode.
There they alike in trembling hope repose,
The bosom of his Saviour and his God."

NATIONAL REFORM ASSAILED.

THE AMERICAN SENTINEL.

This is an able paper, just finishing its first year, in Oakland, Cal. Its conductors are members of the Seventh-day Advent church. Its one sole aim is to antagonize and resist those who would have our national Constitution amended by inserting the single word "Christian" so as to distinguish between the "free exercise" of the Christian religion, and the "free exercise" of child murder, polygamy, assassination, and whatever crimes are called religion: or, perhaps, to insert the word God, so as to derive the "just powers" of government from God, through the consent of the governed, criminals excepted; the sole object of the promoters being to prevent the Constitution from covering crime. Christ asked nothing of men or nations but confession; not coercion. He appointed no bailiffs, built no jails, employed no agents, and used no implements of coercion. Thumb-screws, racks, faggots and stakes were the inventions of priests and high priests, as of Masonry and Mormonism,—a sort of gentlemen whom our American Sentinel seems to treat with silent respect, though surrounded by them. Christ never forced a man to his knees to say his prayers, or to go to the communion-table. When he wept over the Jews who rejected his two principles, supreme love to God and equal to man, his sharpest indictment recognized their freedom, saying mournfully, "Ye would not." "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life."

But the American Sentinel fires an alarm gun and cries, "If the Constitution be amended as these Covenanters desire, a violation of their amendment would require the whole military power of the United States."

We answer: Doubtless it would if the violators should arm and make war on the Constitution. But the Sentinel, or we do, misapprehends the whole case. What, practically, do we want? We want a Bible oath in our courts, and chaplains, and Thanksgivings such as we now have and have had from the first; a recognized standard of law and morals so as to know by what God to swear witnesses, and to furnish definitions for public vices and crimes. We wish for a Constitutional barrier against the religion of Dahomey, which celebrates the king's birthday by piling up human heads. We wish to exclude from our court-houses Chinese oaths, sworn by yellow paper and dead cocks' heads, and the secret oaths to have throats cut and bodies mangled to enforce partiality or protection for criminals and concealment of crime. In short, we want our nation to be and to continue a Christian and not a heathen country.

This was what our fathers intended to give, and thought they had given us. But anarchists, atheists and Freemasons have come to us from over the water, and tell us that because the name of God is not in our Constitution, whose framers only thirteen years before had appealed to the God of the Bible, and put forth a Declaration which is related to the Constitution as the underpinning to a house; because of this omission, perhaps in deference to French principles in Mr. Jefferson's party, they tell us that our laws have no standard, our schools must have no Bible and our country no God!

This Pacific Coast Sentinel, with an air of injured innocence declares, "We believe most decidedly in keeping the Ten Commandments, every jot and tittle, according to the word of Christ;" and he blames the National Reformers and their organ, the Christian Statesman, as guilty of ill usage because they call the Sentinel ignorant or atheistic. And yet he prints in the same number a letter from an admirer of the Sentinel, who lauds what he does, but urges him to go a little farther and say with the fool and Ingersoll that there is no God but those made by men.

As the Sentinel has paid its respects to the Cynosure, if the editor will tell us whether he wishes our country to be heathen or Christian, or what really he does wish and mean, we will consider his difficulties with the National Reformers and endeavor to remove them. We can scarcely regard him as sincerely believing that we would "call all the bayonets of this mighty nation" to aid us in voting into our Constitution what our fathers intended to and supposed they had put there.

—Bro. Hinman spent the Sabbath at Raleigh, the North Carolina capital, and expected to go on from there to New Berne and Beaufort.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, of whose work we have some good testimonies this week, is this week in Tonica and will work on toward the center of the State. He hopes to have some aid from Secretary Stoddard soon in organizing the work as he brings together those who are willing to engage in it.

—The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Daily News reports a very interesting interview with ex-Senator Pomeroy who gave him an animated account of a remarkable scene in the U. S. Senate when Colonel Baker, a former political associate of Lincoln in Illinois, made an impromptu reply to Breckenridge of Kentucky—one of the most remarkable and eloquent speeches of the kind on record. Mr. Pomeroy's article in the Cynosure of last week was the other day pronounced by an enthusiastic friend as "tremendous." It is well worth taking up again after an interval and re-reading.

—Rev. Lewis Johnson of Pine Bluff, Arkansas, was the secretary of the late convention at Knoxville, and spoke ably on Bro. Hinman's report of the work in the South. He desires to engage with the N. C. A., and visited Pittsburgh to arrange with the Presbyterian Board of Missions for Freedmen, who now employ him, but have required only his services on the Sabbath, allowing him the whole week to teach in the public schools. But when the matter of exchanging school work for efforts to strengthen the churches by ridding them of lodgers, the Board votes that "its work demands the entire time of its missionaries and does not feel called upon to take any present action concerning secret societies." Verily, such missionary societies need to have missionaries sent to them. There is too much smoke in the eyes of good men about Pittsburgh. Bro. Johnson will enter our work as soon as he gets work from the N. C. A. Board. Will the Cynosure readers back them in this effort?

PERSONAL MENTION.

—The address of Elder Nathan Callender is changed from Thompson, Pa., to Brown Hollow, Lackawanna county, in the same State.

—Our old reformer bard, Clark, after an exhausting trip to Memphis, attempted too soon to speak and sing to two congregations in one day, and the tax on his system, with a severe cold superadded, laid him by for several days. He was most kindly entertained at Le Moyne Institute meantime, while brethren Imes and Countee were assiduous in their good offices.

—Mrs. Gen. J. W. Phelps is living with her mother in Northfield, Mass., eleven miles from her home in Guilford, Vermont, where her beloved husband died two years ago. Their little son is now almost three years old and a promising boy. Gen. Phelps was a brave soldier, and one of the first to see the right and necessity of emancipation. —Mrs. Prof. O. F. Lumry, a member of the Illinois State Executive Committee, has been for several weeks in the W. C. T. U. Hospital in this city for treatment. Her assiduous labors as chairman of her Congressional district for the W. C. T. U., aggravated a stomach difficulty from which she has suffered for years. Last weeks she was attacked so severely with torturing pains that, after summoning the attendants, she feared that the hand of death was upon her, and lifted her heart to God for help. Her prayer was immediately answered and the remedies were not needed. It is hoped that she will now speedily recover.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The week has been marked by meetings of various conventions and by an unusual amount of legislation in Congress. Washington has long been the most popular place in the country for holding of national conventions, and every year it seems to grow in favor as a rendezvous for the representatives of all sorts of national interests and industries. It is a common thing for several associations to be in council here at one time, and during the past week six different organizations were in session.

It may now be considered settled that the Centennial of the Constitution, dating from the inauguration of the first constitutionally elected President, will be appropriately celebrated under the auspices of the Government in the spring of 1889,—a year to be known hereafter as the Jubilee Year of the Republic. The sentiment of the country in favor of this movement seems to be practically unanimous. It touches the patriotic impulses of the whole people. The Senate has responded with resolutions of approval, and has taken steps toward carrying out the grand celebration. The President has also conveyed to Congress his unqualified endorsement of the undertaking, and notwithstanding his wise reticence with regard to the proper place for holding this Centennial, it is generally conceded as a matter of course that Washington will be the favored city.

Speaking of Washington's conventions reminds me that a prominent one is now begun. It is made up of women who want to vote, with Miss Susan B. Anthony as mistress of ceremonies. They come to hold their nineteenth annual convention in Washington, where they have held the eighteen preceding ones, and as usual for many successive winters, Miss Anthony came early to clear the way and complete arrangements. Next year the association will celebrate the fortieth anniversary of its existence and they propose then to have a union of every branch of woman's work. After this they say the younger women must come to the front and let some of the older ones retire.

The Anti-mormon bill will of course be assailed by the woman-suffragists. The Senate bill by Edmunds and the House substitute by Tucker both disfranchise actual Mormons, and Congress did not see fit to except Mormon women, who are often the most bigoted of the sect, from its provisions. Miss Anthony will be heard on this measure before she departs from the city. The women must vote, Mormon or no Mormon.

The bill which passed the House without a division takes the Mormon hierarchy by the throat and practically places the entire government of the Territory out of the hands of the Mormon majority except the lower branch of the Territorial legislature, and places it in the hands of the Federal Government. Among the sweeping provisions of the bill are the dissolution of the financial corporations known as the Church of the Latter Day Saints and the Perpetual Emigration Fund Company, and the Attorney-General is directed to wind them up by process of court. All laws for the organization of the militia of the Territory and the creation of the Nauvoo Legion are annulled. Polygamists are made ineligible to vote, and a test-oath is prescribed to all persons desiring to vote that they will obey the laws of the United States, and especially the laws in respect to the crime defined in this and the original Edmunds act. The bill provides for the immediate appointment by the President of all judges and selectmen of the county or probate courts, and by the Governor of all justices of the peace, sheriffs, constables and other county and district officers. There is some objection in the Senate to the latter clause which makes some 2,400 offices dependent on the Governor. But it is better with him than the President or a transient commission. The Mormons have a strong lobby and plenty of money here, but are not likely to effect anything against the aroused and just indignation of the country. The supporters of the bill did not aim at polygamy alone, but sought to destroy the Mormon hierarchy which has established itself in treasonable defiance of the laws of the land.

THE HOME.

THE BLIND MAN'S TESTIMONY.

He stood before the Sanhedrim;
The scowling rabbis gazed at him;
He recked not of their praise or blame;
There was no fear, there was no shame,
For one upon whose dazzled eyes
The whole world poured its vast surprise;
The open heaven was far too near,
His first day's light too sweet and clear,
To let him waste his new-gained ken
On the hate-clouded face of men.

But still they questioned, Who art thou?
What hast thou been? What art thou now?
Thou art not he who yesterday
Sat here and begged beside the way;
For he was blind.

—And I am he;
For I was blind but now I see.

He told the story o'er and o'er;
It was his full heart's only lore;
A prophet on the Sabbath day,
Had touched his sightless eyes with clay,
And made him see who had been blind.
Their words passed by him like the wind
Which raves and howls but cannot shock
The hundred-fathom-rooted rock.

Their threats and fury all went wide;
They could not touch his Hebrew pride;
Their sneers at Jesus and his band,
Nameless and homeless in the land,
Their boasts of Moses and his Lord,
All could not change him by one word,

I know not what this man may be,
Sinner or saint, but as for me
One thing I know, that I am he
That once was blind, but now I see.

They were all doctors of renown,
The great men of a famous town,
With deep brows wrinkled, broad and wise,
Beneath their broad phylacteries;
The wisdom of the East was theirs,
And honor crowned their silver hairs.
The man they jeered and laughed to scorn
Was unlearned, poor, and humbly born;
But he knew better far than they
What came to him that Sabbath day;
And what the Christ had done for him
He knew and not the Sanhedrim.

DANIEL WEBSTER'S TESTIMONY.

On the morning of Saturday, October 23, 1852, Daniel Webster said to his physician: "I shall die to-night." Dr. Jeffries, much moved, replied, after a pause: "You are right, sir." The gorgeous and jewelled October day rolled on at the edge of the sea; and, when evening came, the last will and testament of your greatest statesman and orator was brought to him for his signature, which he affixed, and then said: "Thank God for strength to do a sensible act; O God, I thank thee for all thy mercies." His family was brought to his bedside, and his biographer, Curtis, noticing that Mr. Webster was about to say something which should be recorded, took a seat at a table and caught these last words. Curtis says they were uttered slowly, in a tone which might have been heard through half the house: "My general wish on earth has been to do my Master's will. That there is a God all must acknowledge. I see him in all these wondrous works. Himself, how wondrous! What would be the condition of any of us if we had not the hope of immortality? What ground is there to rest upon but the Gospel? There were scattered hopes of the immortality of the soul, especially among the Jews. The Jews believed in a spiritual origin of creation. The Romans never reached it; the Greeks never reached it. It is a tradition that communication was made to the Jews by God himself through Moses. There were intimations—crepuscular, twilight. But, but, but, thank God, the Gospel of Jesus Christ brought life and immortality to light—rescued it—brought it to light." Then the greatest reasoner this country has ever produced caused a sacred hush to fall upon his dying chamber, and in a loud, firm voice he repeated the whole of the Lord's prayer, closing with these words: "Peace on earth, and good will to men—that is the happiness, the essence—good will to men."

Webster knew his own need of these petitions. I am not here to say that he lived a Christian life. I raise this morning, when Webster is before the nation, the question whether there is any evidence that he died repentant. I hope there is. Not many years ago I sat, on a howling winter night, at the fireside of John Taylor in garbled New Hampshire, and he said to me: "Webster always attended communion service when he was at Elms Farm. Till his death he was a member in good standing with the Salisbury church, with which he united when a young man." "But," said I, "was the church strong enough to discipline a statesman?" "If Webster had shown," John Taylor replied, "anything of intemperance, or other evil ways in New Hampshire, he would have been disciplined by that church. What he did in Washington I know not. Here, among those who knew him best, he was always ready to kneel at the family altar. There was one hymn that we always used to like to sing together," said John Taylor, with his immense bass voice, and wholly unconscious of the expression he was making of his own massiveness. "We liked to sing together 'Old Hundred'; it seemed to fit us." The venerable Judge Nesmith, whose guest I have sometimes been at Franklin, has told me things almost too sacred to be repeated here, concerning Webster's religious thoughtfulness in his last years. "Were they the last words I have to utter," said John Taylor to me, "I should say Webster died a Christian;" and just this testimony has been given by the profound Judge Nesmith, who stands highest among all authorities concerning Webster's life in his native haunts. Your Robert C. Winthrop, at New York on Saturday, said he had knelt with Webster at the table of our Lord, and witnessed the fervor and tenderness of his devotions.

But, gentlemen, a death-bed repentance is never to be encouraged before the time, or discouraged at the time. What I wish to insist upon, face to face with all the small philosophies of our time on both sides of the Atlantic, is the record of Webster's last speech revised by himself. The sentences which Curtis caught are the last unrevised speech. But on Sabbath evening, October 10th, the last formal speech was written, and on October 15th was revised and signed by Webster's own hand. These, his last revised words (Curtis's Life of Webster, Vol. II., p. 684), stand upon the marble of the tombstone at Marshfield. Plymouth Rock looks on them, and they look on Plymouth Rock. This is the record Webster left as his last word to men in all ages; and ought it not to be copied in marble in some spot more conspicuous than that brown Marshfield shore?

"Philosophical argument, especially that drawn from the vastness of the universe as compared with the apparent insignificance of this globe, has often shaken my reason for the faith that is in me; but my heart has assumed and reassured me that the Gospel of Jesus Christ must be a divine reality. The Sermon on the Mount cannot be a merely human production. This belief enters into the very depth of my conscience. The whole history of man proves it."

At twenty-three minutes of three o'clock, on the Sunday morning following that Saturday which was illumined by the serious words of immortality, Webster passed into the Unseen Holy into which all men haste.—Joseph Cook.

WEBSTER'S PERSONAL CONFESSION OF FAITH.

Dr. Smith, of Concord, N. H., has put into our hands the following letter of Daniel Webster to Rev. Thomas Worcester, formerly pastor of the Congregational church in Salisbury, which is accompanied with a confession of his religious faith, both of which are in his own hand-writing. We have seen Mr. Webster's name in the records of the church in Salisbury, enrolled among its members, if we mistake not, about the time the letter below bears date. He remained a member of that church till his death. The letter and confession were never before published. They are as follows:

"BOSCAWEN, August 8, 1807.

"DEAR SIR:—The other day we were conversing respecting confession of faith. Some time ago I wrote down, for my own use, a few propositions in the shape of articles of faith, intending to exhibit a very short summary of the doctrines of the Christian religion, as they impress my mind. I have taken the liberty to enclose a copy for your perusal. I am, sir, with respect, Yours, etc., D. WEBSTER."

I believe in the existence of Almighty God, who created and governs the whole world. I am taught this by the works of nature and the Word of revelation.

I believe that God exists in three persons. This I learn from revelation alone. Nor is it an objection to this belief that I cannot comprehend how one can be three or three one. I hold it my duty to believe not what I can comprehend or account for, but what my Maker teaches me.

I believe the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament to be the will and word of God.

I believe Jesus Christ to be the Son of God. The miracles which he wrought establish, in my mind, his personal authority, and render it proper for me to believe whatever he asserts. I believe, therefore, all his declarations, as well when he declares himself to be the Son of God as when he declares any other proposition. And I believe there is no other way of salvation than through the merits of his atonement.

I believe that things past, present, and to come are all equally present in the mind of the Deity; that with him there is no succession of time nor of ideas; that, therefore, the relative terms past, present, and future, as used among men, cannot, with strict propriety, be applied to Deity. I believe in the doctrines of foreknowledge and predestination, as thus expounded. I do not believe in those doctrines as imposing any fatality or necessity on men's actions, or any way infringing free agency.

I believe in the utter inability of any human being to work out his own salvation without the constant aid of the Spirit of all grace.

I believe in those great peculiarities of the Christian religion, a resurrection from the dead and a day of judgment.

I believe in the universal Providence of God, and leave to Epicurus and his more unreasonable followers in modern times the inconsistency of believing that God made the world which he does not take the trouble of governing.

Although I have great respect for some other forms of worship, I believe the Congregational mode, on the whole, to be preferable to any other.

I believe religion to be a matter not of demonstration, but of faith. God requires us to give credit to the truths which he reveals, not because we can prove them, but because he declares them. When the mind is reasonably convinced that the Bible is the Word of God, the only remaining duty is to receive its doctrines with full confidence of their truth, and practice them with a pure heart.

I believe that the Bible is to be understood and received in the plain and obvious meaning of its passages; since I cannot persuade myself that a book intended for the instruction and conversion of the whole world should cover its true meaning in such mystery and doubt that none but critics and philosophers can discover it.

I believe that the experiments and subtleties of human wisdom are more likely to obscure than to enlighten the revealed will of God, and that he is the most accomplished Christian scholar who hath been educated at the feet of Jesus and in the college of fishermen.

I believe that all true religion consists in the heart and the affections; and that, therefore, all creeds and confessions are fallible and uncertain evidences of evangelical piety.

Finally, I believe that Christ has imposed on all his disciples a life of active benevolence; that he who refrains only from what he thinks to be sinful, has performed only a small part of his duty; that he is bound to do good and communicate, to love his neighbor, to give food and drink to his enemy, and to endeavor, as far as in him lies, to promote peace, truth, piety, and happiness in a wicked and forlorn world, believing that, in the great day which is to come, there will be no other standard of merit, no other criterion of character, than that which is already established—"By their fruits ye shall know them."—Springfield Republican, about 1860.

A TESTED REMEDY.

It is related that Bishop Kavanagh was one day walking, when he met a prominent physician, who offered him a seat in his carriage. The physician was an infidel, and the conversation turned upon religion.

"I am surprised," said the doctor, "that such an intelligent man as you should believe such an old fable as that."

The Bishop said, "Doctor, suppose years ago some one had recommended to you a prescription for pulmonary consumption, and you had procured the prescription and taken it according to order, and had been cured of that terrible disease, what would you say of the man who would not try your prescription?"

"I should say he was a fool."

"Twenty-five years ago," said Kavanagh, "I tried the power of God's grace. It made a different man of me. All these years I have preached salvation, and wherever accepted have never known it to fail."

What could a doctor say to such a testimony as that? And such testimonies are what men need to turn them from the error of their ways, to the personal experience of the saving power of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"How would you prove the divinity of Christ?" said some ministers to a young backwoods preacher whom they were examining.

"What?" said he, puzzled by their question.

"How would you prove the divinity of Christ?"

"Why, He saved my soul," was the triumphant reply.

But to give this answer one must be saved, and know it in his heart, and show it in his life, and he then becomes a living epistle known and read of all men.—Sci.

KICKING AWAY THE CRUTCH.

It was a miserably inclement day in Washington. There had been a heavy fall of snow and it was raining copiously. The streets were ankle-deep with slush, and the wind was driving fiercely. A certain colonel entered one of the hotels and walked into the reading-room. He met there a friend standing by the window, looking out upon the dreary scene, to whom he remarked:

"Isn't this a terrible day?"

"Indeed it is," responded the gentlemen; "and I wish you had been here a few minutes ago. A poor crippled old man was making the best of his way through the storm across the street, when a big, lusty fellow came along, kicked his crutch from under his arm, and left him lying in the slush and wet."

"The scoundrel!" exclaimed the colonel; "I wish I had been here! I would have wrung his neck for him."

"Well, colonel, you are the big, lusty fellow I had in mind," said the man, to the amusement of a number of weather-bound listeners. "You are big, and strong, and hearty, and you go about the country kicking the crutch of Christianity from under the arms of poor crippled sinners who have no other support, and then leave them wallowing in the mud and mire of unbelief and despair. You are all pull down, and no build up."—Right Life.

THE REAL TROUBLE.

"I have a legal mind," said a young man to his mother, who had earned the money to educate him, "and therefore cannot believe in Christianity." So? Sir Matthew Hale and Lord Bacon and Sir William Blackstone found no difficulty. Several of the greatest lawyers in this and neighboring States are the most devout believers. Hon. Luther Day, LL.D., ex-Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Ohio, died at his residence at Ravenna, Ohio. His last words were: "I am not afraid to die; yes, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil." This was the passage in which Daniel Webster sought for comfort when the splendor of his career passed under the shadow of the grave. Young man, have you a legal mind? If you have, and cannot believe the Gospel, the trouble is not with your mind, but with your heart.—Dr. S. M. Buckley in Christian Thought.

THE BOYHOOD OF DANIEL WEBSTER.

Webster's father lived near the headwaters of the Merrimac River, and the only school within reach was a poor affair kept open for a few months every winter. There Webster learned all that the ignorant master could teach him, which was very little; but he acquired a taste which did more for him than the reading, writing and arithmetic of the school. He learned to like books and to want knowledge; and when a boy gets really hungry and thirsty for knowledge it is not easy to keep him ignorant. When some of the neighbors joined in setting up a little circulating library, young Webster read every book in it two or three times, and even committed to memory a large part of the best of them. It was this eagerness for education on his part that led his father to send him to Exeter to school, and later to put him in Dartmouth College. There are not many boys in our time who have not declaimed parts of Webster's great speeches; and it will interest them to know that the boy who afterward made those speeches could never declaim at all while he was at school. He learned his pieces well, and practiced them in his room, but he could not speak them before people to save his life.

Webster was always fond of shooting and fishing, and however hard he studied the people around him called him lazy and idle, because he would spend whole days in these sports. Once, while he was studying under Dr. Woods to prepare for college, that gentleman spoke to him on the subject, and hurt his feelings a little. The boy went to his room determined to have revenge, and this is the way he took to get it. The usual Latin lesson was one hundred lines of Virgil, but Webster spent the whole night over the book. The next morning before breakfast he went to Dr. Woods and read the whole lesson correctly. Then he said:

"Will you hear a few more lines, Doctor?"

The teacher consenting, Webster read on and on and on, while the breakfast grew cold. Still there was no sign of the boy's stopping, and the hungry doctor at last asked how much farther he was prepared to read.

"To the end of the twelfth book of the Æneid," answered the "idle" boy, in triumph.

After that Webster did not give up his hunting and fishing, but he worked so hard at his lessons, and got on so fast, that there was no further complaint of his "idleness." He not only learned his lessons given to him, but more, every day, and besides this he read every good book he could lay his hands on, for he was not at all satisfied to know only what could be found in the school-books.

Webster's father was poor and in debt, but finding how eager his boy was for education, and seeing, too, that he possessed unusual ability, he determined, ill as he could afford the expense, to send him to college. Accordingly, young Daniel went to Dartmouth. But after he had been there two years, and had gone home for his vacation, he startled his father one morning by declaring that he would not go back to college unless his brother Ezekiel could be educated too. This seemed out of the question. The father could barely afford to educate one son, and he could not spare the other from the farm-work that provided the means for this. But young Dan was generous and resolute. If Zeke could not be educated, he would not. He would not let them sacrifice Zeke for him, and there was an end to the matter. The good old mother solved the difficulty. She was getting old, she said, and her children were dear to her; she was willing to give up everything for their good, and if they would promise to take care of her during her old age, the property should be sold, the debts paid, and what remained should be spent in educating the boys. After much debate the matter was settled in this way, and it is pleasant to know that the dear old mother never knew want as a consequence of her devotion to the welfare of her children.

After finishing his college course, Webster began studying law, but having no money, and being unwilling to tax his father for further support, he went into Northern Maine, and taught school there for a time. While teaching he devoted his evenings to the work of copying deeds and other legal documents, and by close economy he managed to live upon the money thus earned so that he saved the whole of his salary as a teacher. With this money to live on, he went to Boston, studied law, and soon distinguished himself. The story of his life as a public man, in the Senate, in the Cabinet and at the bar, is well known, and it does not belong to this sketch of his boyhood.—George Cary Eggleston in Harper's Young People.

TEMPERANCE.

THE DEACON'S TREAT.

An old man in Massachusetts, eighty-seven years of age, recently told a temperance worker the story of his boyhood days. He was apprenticed to a good man, a deacon in a Baptist church. There were eight apprentices who worked for this one master. When they had been industrious, and the work had gone well through the week, the good deacon used to give them a treat on Saturday night. They must go and wash and dress themselves, and then go down to the kitchen and seat themselves on the "settle" around the room. Then the deacon would say to his wife,

"Well, mother, they have been pretty good boys this week, and now they may all have some whisky punch."

So she would prepare the punch, putting in sugar, and milk, and spices, and making it as palatable as possible, and then he would give it to the boys to drink. The deacon doubtless thought he was doing the boys a kindness, but, "Of those eight boys," said the old man, "seven are in drunkards' graves."

"How did you escape?" inquired the friend to whom he was telling the story.

"By using my common sense. When the weather was cold in the winter, the deacon's wife was accustomed to come and bring us down a pail of punch to the shop, and give us some to drink. I noticed that a little while after I had taken that punch I began to feel tired; the hammer was heavy, and the work went harder. When I found how it was, I said to her one day, calling her 'mother,' as we all did:

"Say, mother, would you just as soon give me coffee to drink instead of punch?"

"No," said she, "I would not. I do not want to go and make coffee just for one person."

"Well, will you do it, if I will give you ten cents a week extra?"

"She consented to on these terms, and so I let alone the punch and took the coffee, and I found that on drinking that, I did not feel so exhausted as I did after drinking the punch."

Thus there was opened a way of escape; and while seven of the eight apprentices had gone down to drunkards' graves, this man still lives, at the age of eighty-seven, hale and healthy.

We who live at the present time can hardly imagine the change in public sentiment since the time when masters and mistresses, good Christian people, thought to do their apprentices a kindness by giving them intoxicating drink. Let us be thankful that so much has been done in the way of correcting public sentiment; but let us also remember that much remains to be done to save both young and old from the seduction of that fatal poison which biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder. And let us also remember that there are yet multitudes who have never been taught the evils of strong drink, and let us teach them the ways of life, and health and peace.—Safeguard.

LIBERTY AND LICENCE.

The letter of the law of Moses concerning food, dress, etc., may not be binding among Christians. Nevertheless, they are not to allow liberty to degenerate into license. They are to be temperate in all things. "Put a knife to thy throat, if thou be a man given to appetite," says the wise man. We are to avoid the gluttony of those who are spots in the feasts of charity, "feeding themselves without fear," and we are to see to it that our "table" does not "become a snare" to us. We are to remember that "nature is content with little, grace with less, and lust with nothing," and that there is no such thing as satisfying unholly appetites and desires.

If Christians would learn sobriety, simplicity and self denial; if they would mortify their desires, and refuse to yield to the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life; they would escape the bodily disease, financial embarrassment, mental distress and physical injury which come through extravagance and indulgence; and there would be no lack of funds to spread the Gospel of Christ, and to scatter Christian literature, and to help forward after a godly sort those men and women who for Christ's name go forth to heathen lands, bearing the reproach of Christ, and carrying the glad tidings of great joy to all people.

The cost of the ornaments worn by women, the tobacco used by men, and the needless and unwholesome articles of food and drink consumed by those who profess that their bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost, would fully supply the present wants of the church of God, and the work of Christ, and would lay the foundation for new and more effective efforts for the advancement of the cause of Christ, upon a scale commensurate with the grandeur of the work, and the solemn responsibilities that rests upon the church.—Safeguard.

NO DANGER OF WAR.

The Whisky Champion attempts to justify the assassination of Rev. Haddock by the saloon-keepers of Sioux City, Iowa, and denounces him as a "Prohibition fiend who had exhausted all the malignity of a demon against men simply carrying on their business under a license of the United States government," and ends by saying, "Unless Congress interferes and puts a stop to this State Prohibition of a trade authorized and licensed by Federal laws under our Federal constitution, the blind craze to enforce State prohibitory laws will result in a bloody civil war."

Oh, no! there is no danger of "a bloody civil war." The courageous rummies may get a mob together and skulk up behind an unarmed preacher in the dark and shoot him down, in cold blood, or perhaps a whisky mob may imbibe forty rod until they screw their courage (?) to the sticking point and a dozen or so of them assault a temperance lecturer, or if they are afraid to do that they may occasionally throw rotten eggs into a temperance meeting made up of respectable ladies and gentlemen and spoil the dresses of the women, but there is not the least possibility of "a civil war." The idea of men going to war who are cowardly and mean enough to make a living by robbing women and children of food and clothing is laughable indeed! As long as they can buy votes, corrupt courts, bribe legislatures, intimidate partisan leaders and control political parties they will continue their devilish traffic, but they will never "go to war." They might get hurt.—Er.

Carry God whilst thou livest, in the chariot of thy zealous soul and thou shalt not want the chariot and horses of fire to attend to thee when thou diest.

without hands shall become a great mountain and fill the whole earth.

Will you not pray, my dear brethren, that Jesus may send the Holy Ghost upon me, and gird me with his strength, as I go forth in his name to free the church from the corrupting power of the lodge. The battle is joined. If we unitedly come up to the help of Christ, the victory is sure.

C. F. HAWLEY.

I. R. B. ARNOLD'S WORK.

WHEATON, Ill., Jan. 28, 1887.

On Wednesday of this week, accepting an invitation to attend the pictorial entertainment at Warrenville with some fourteen others, we reached our destination after an hour's ride. Soon the people began to come in, singly, in pairs, and by the sleigh load, until the ordinary seats of the M. E. church were filled, and others were brought in to accommodate the interested sight-seers, this being the third night of Mr. Arnold's work in this place. His three eldest daughters, with himself made up a fine brass band, which opened the exercises as well as closed them with some fine music, which would have done credit to an older and well-trained band.

The entertainment proper consisted of views of the olden temples, gods, ceremonies, rites, etc., with a vivid description of the old Baal or sun-worships of Egypt, Syria, India, Scandinavia, and Mexico, and showing most clearly from absolute likeness, and the open admissions of the acknowledged authors of the fraternity, that modern Freemasonry and its multitudinous spawn, is actually an imitation, or rather a reproduction, of the old heathen mysteries. This was done in a most masterly and convincing, though inoffensive way. No Freemason need take offense at the matter or manner of the lecturer, while engaged in this work. Several Masons were present, from none of whom did we hear any disparaging remarks.

Bro. Arnold, we are told, gave another of his unique entertainments at the same place last night, to a larger audience than before, who obtained a promise from him to return and give them another series next month. His views last night were of Palestine, or Jerusalem. The writer has never attended an evening's entertainment where so much of instruction and amusement could be obtained for so little, or where an evening could be so profitably spent by old or young. Bro. Arnold's entertainments are, therefore, most heartily commended to the readers of the Cynosure, everywhere.

POLICY IN WAR.

AURORA, Ill.

With those who will to do good many have to acknowledge that how to perform they find not. In opposing the many evils of our day victory is often turned into defeat, because prejudice is excited before the judgment is convinced. In the conflict of light against darkness, the National Christian Association has to a very great degree overcome this difficulty by placing in the lecture field Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, who has made the subject of secret societies a life-long study. His lectures are illustrated with about sixty pictures for each evening. His first lectures treat of heathen mythology, and his last of Freemasonry, showing that they all originate from the same source, and end in the same, which is idolatry, or sun worship. One of Aurora's best citizens, who is an accredited Mason, after listening to Bro. Arnold's lectures and seeing his illustrations, said to me that the lecturer had the beginning and end of Masonry; that he considered it a very fair representation of the facts in the case, and that he was satisfied that Masonry was insufficient to save a soul; which is equivalent to saying that Masonry is not what it claims to be.

I would advise all lovers of truth to secure the services of Bro. Arnold, who always handles the subject in such a gentlemanly and Christian way as to convince all of his candor and fairness, which awakens investigation rather than greater opposition.

J. W. CARTER, pastor.

AN IMPORTANT SOCIETY FORGOTTEN.

"John, I would like to invite my friend, Mrs. Smalley, this evening. Will you be able to be in?"

"No, my dear, I must attend the meeting of the Ancient Order of Forresters, to-night."

"Well, to-morrow evening?"

"I have the Royal Arcanum, and you know—"

"What about Wednesday evening?"

"Oh, the Odd-fellows meet that night; on Thursday I have a meeting of the Knights of Labor to attend; on Friday the Royal Templars of Temperance; on Saturday there's a special meeting of the Masonic lodge, and I couldn't miss that; and then Sunday night—let me see—what is there on Sunday night, my dear?"

"The Grand and Ancient Order of Christian Fellowship."

"Why, I had forgotten. Am I a member of that—let me see—"

"You have forgotten another society, John, of which you were once a member."

"What's that?"

"Your wife's!"—Conservator.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Mr. Moody continues his work on the West Side in this city this week by meetings in the Western Avenue M. E. church. Thousands attend his meetings daily and many have found Christ.

—There are now over 700 college and seminary men pledged to foreign work in the various denominations. There are now thirty-five in the McCormick (Presbyterian) Seminary in this city alone. It must be put before the churches whether they will take the responsibility of keeping these home, because the funds are lacking.

—Mrs. J. K. Barney, of Rhode Island, national superintendent of W. C. T. U. prison and jail work, spoke to 1,200 inmates of the Joliet Penitentiary on a late Sunday morning on the subject "God's Love for the World." In the afternoon she attended the prison prayer-meeting and the temperance pledge was signed by all present save three.

—Wm. A. Carr and F. E. Wright, two of the sons of the Adelphi mission in this city, will start for the South in a few weeks to work for the Master. These brethren have given themselves fully to be used to the glory of God in the salvation of souls. Dear brethren and sisters, pray earnestly for the prosperity of these brethren. Any one wishing to aid them, will please address Wm. A. Carr, 68 and 70 Canal St., care of Rev. A. H. Kirkland.

—Rev. George F. Pentecost asks through the Independent that the Week of Prayer shall be abolished, because, he says, it keeps people from beginning work till it comes, and makes them feel there is nothing more to do after it is over. This is his objection in brief. Many people will agree with him, for there is no denying that there is a deep feeling that it has become a form, without vitality, and an impediment rather than a benefit. One suggestion growing out of his article, and a good one, is that it should be transferred till the early autumn, and be freed from its cumbersome list of "subjects."

—Phillips Brooks is preaching in Faneuil Hall, Boston, the first of a series of sermons designed to reach the non-church-going classes. Two thousand tickets were issued for the first service and more called for. The hall was crowded, and the closest attention paid to a sermon forty minutes long, from the text "Like as a father pitieth his children," etc.

—The visitation conducted under the auspices of the Philadelphia Union evangelistic movement has brought out some interesting facts. In one district, including four squares in the neighborhood of Arch and Broad Streets, 360 families were visited. Of these 280 attend church regularly; 80 are Catholics; 80 attend church irregularly or not at all; 40 have some preference; the remainder have no preference and practically never go. The visitors were very courteously received with few exceptions; especially were they courteously received by the Catholics. A saloon-keeper, who had been in the business twenty-four years, said during that time he had not been to church once. Saloon-keeping and religion, he said, were incompatible.

—Bishop William Taylor has planned a device for his new Congo steamer which will do away with the necessity of fire-arms. In case of attack he can put the natives to flight by a hose attached to a powerful steam-pump. "Neither dogs nor men," he remarks, "can stand before such a shot of water." The little steamer is also provided with electric lights.

—The American Sunday School Union is renewing its youth, and is this year doing more for the neglected children than ever before. It has entered 1,618 towns and settlements where the people had neither churches nor Sabbath-schools, and in every one of these places it has established Sunday-schools; besides this it has aided old schools in 4,972 cases, reaching all told, 370,000 children and youth.

—Very interesting and successful, revival meetings are in progress in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, under the charge of Dr. L. W. Munhall. Dr. Talmage wrote, Jan. 22: "It is a great revival because of the numbers gathered into the kingdom of God, and the manner of the work. It is characterized by silence, by solemnity, by wide-reaching results. To-morrow, at our special communion, we receive three hundred and forty. This is the first installment, for the work is deepening and widening. It is the estimate of all the workers that over a thousand souls have testified of their conversion in these meetings. Many of these will join us further on, others will go to other churches, and many to other cities and even other lands where they belong. We receive members only on evidence of repentance for sin and faith in Christ. These 340 of to-morrow make our communicant membership 3,700 exactly. Dr. Munhall is a powerful preacher, and Professor and Mrs. Townner sing like heaven."

—The Daily News of this city lately sent a reporter among the Swedish and Norwegian Lutheran pastors of Chicago to gain their views of secret orders and especially the Knights of Labor. Considerable space is given to the clear and very able replies of pastors Ranssen, Evald, Juul and others, who present with great force the objections of their church to the orders of every name. Concerning the Knights of Labor they express their objections, but carefully leave the final decision to their synodical meeting whether membership in the order is to be a bar to church fellowship. But the pastor of Trinity Lutheran church of Oshkosh, Wis., has been so pressed by this question that he has not waited for the meeting of Synod. Some two weeks ago he notified certain members of his congregation that unless they renounced allegiance to the Knights of Labor steps would be taken to expel them from the church. Two meetings were held for the purpose of discussing the matter and persuading the members of the church who were Knights to abandon the organization and finally about thirty Knights were suspended from the church last week. The question is thus opened in earnest: we do not fear that the Scandinavian pastors will fail in their duty to Christ and his church in its settlement.

LITERATURE.

HOURS WITH THE BIBLE, or the Scriptures in the Light of Modern Discovery and Knowledge. By Cunningham Geikie, D. D. Vol. IV. From Rehoboth to Hezekiah. Price per volume, in cloth, 45c.; half Morocco, 60c. John B. Alden, New York.

After three years' work, says Dr. Geikie in the preface to this volume, this fourth book of the series is completed. The learned author in this preface notices with rebuke the theories of Robertson Smith, whose heresies so long troubled the presbytery of Aberdeen and the General Assembly of Scotland. Smith assumes that the pillar Jacob set up was an idolatrous sun-pillar, and argues that the patriarchs were tainted with idolatry, and this taint was retained in the worship of Jehovah down to the eighth century. If in reading the preceding volumes of this series, it might have been conceived that the history of Moses or of David furnished the most interesting portion of Jewish history, this last volume will cast a doubt upon that judgment. The times of Elijah, of Isaiah and Hezekiah furnish most fruitful studies to the Bible student, and with the aids of modern discovery the historical student will find few more interesting fields of inquiry. This valuable series should find its place in thousands of homes.

The Faith Missionary has a number of especial interest, because of the account of the farewell meetings at Oberlin to Bro. O. S. Palmer and the company who went with him to Berar, India. Bro. Palmer, it will be remembered, studied in Chicago both theology and medicine, and hopes to introduce some knowledge of the industrial arts among the natives of India, and especially among orphan children. The Missionary represents a great movement, yet incipient, for the salvation of our race.

In The Converted Catholic "Father" O'Connor yet maintains a brave fight against the papacy. Much of this number is occupied with the case of Dr. McGlynn, the Romish priest of New York who is under censure of Archbishop Corrigan, ostensibly for his support of Henry George and his theories. All who wish to know what is going on at the metropolis for the conversion of Romanists from the service of the pope to that of Christ, need this magazine.

Roberts' Miscellany, an illustrated magazine for young people is again issued from North Chili, N. X., after several years' suspension. Without the variety, brilliancy or literary merit of the popular periodicals for children, it has yet a prime merit which most of them lack, it has no trashy stories to bewitch and befog the young mind.

Gregory's annual seed catalogue for 1887 is an attractive presentation of one of the long established and most popular and reliable of our great American seed establish-ishments. A tempting display is made of new varieties which seem to endure the test of experience. Marblehead, Mass.

LODGE NOTES.

—South Park Masonic lodge initiated officers the other night. "Rev. Brother" Charles H. Bixley and "Rev. Brother" George C. Lorimer took part, the latter making a Masonic address. The latter who is described by his ministerial brethren as "devoured by a personal ambition," is evidently selling his honor for the pottage of lodgery.

—A Wooster, Ohio, man is making money by supplying the lodges with low buffoonery and horse-play theatricals. He advertises his scheme as a "Burguesque degree, or initiation of a candidate. Exposing the secret work of the order, such as the opening and closing ceremony, the initiation ceremonies, etc., etc. These rituals have already been performed in nearly every State and Territory in the Union, by the F. A. M., I. O. O. F., K. of P., I. O. R. M., A. O. U. W., K. of H., R. A., O. C. F., O. I. H., G. A. R., A. L. of H., N. U., A. O. K. of M., C. I. O. of G. T., K. of Ma., K. of the G. E., P. O. S. of A., Sons of Veterans, etc., etc. Received wherever presented with roars of laughter." Lodges seem to be good patrons of such folly.

—At a meeting of District Assembly No. 1, of the Philadelphia Knights of Labor, it was decided to place a boycott on all beer manufactured at breweries in the city where a strike is in progress.

—J. J. Upchurch, founder of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, died at his home in Steeleville, Mo. He organized the first lodge of the order Oct. 27, 1868, at Meadville, Pa. The order now numbers nearly 200,000 members.

—The Ohio Miners' Amalgamated Association met at Columbus, adopted resolutions refusing to affiliate with the Knights of Labor, and declaring that if District Assembly 135 continues its warfare against the miners' association, the latter will recommend such of its members as belong to the Knights to withdraw from that order.

—The Supreme Lodge of the United States Secret League is a new lodge with a terrifying name which met at Indianapolis lately. Its officers are: P. W. Bartholomew, of Indianapolis, past cardinal; L. C. Walker, of Indianapolis, cardinal; Jonathan Peters, publisher of The New Albany Ledger, vice cardinal; Thomas G. Hall, journalist, of Louisville, Ky., petitioner; Dr. D. M. Purman, of Indianapolis, medical examiner; John Furnas, of Indianapolis, treasurer; A. D. Miller, recorder; C. F. Proudfoot, marshal; Weaver, of Warsaw, guard; H. T. Strouse, watchman. The office of chief organizer was abolished, and hereafter a corps of organizers will be placed in the field for the good of the order. The sick-benefit fund, as conducted by the Supreme Lodge, has been abolished, and this branch of insurance is placed under the control of the various subordinate lodges. A new ritual which changes all the secret work and a new constitution are in the hands of committees, soon to be promulgated, which will eventually place the league as a new candidate before the public for popularity.

—The Catholic Knights of America of Illinois, met in Springfield, about fifty delegates being in attendance. Rev. Mr. Dorney, of Chicago, and Julian J. Beall, of Mattoon, were elected supreme delegates, and Rev. Father Kuhlmann, of Marshall, and Mr. Barrett, of Mattoon, alternates. Archbishop Feehan, of Chicago, was elected supreme spiritual director.

—Two Knights of Labor lodges in this city, Nos. 57 and 24, have resolved: "We believe that the verdict, in the recent trial of the anarchists, condemning seven men to death, and sentencing one to fifteen years' imprisonment, was an outrage upon common justice, an assault upon free speech and the right of the people to peaceably assemble for the discussion of their grievances."

Readers ordering goods advertising in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE will do well to mention the paper when ordering as we have reason to believe that our advertisers treat the readers well.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People!

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform.

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

Price 10 cents, postpaid. Address,

FIFTY YEARS AND BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHEOP.

Introduction by

REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,

(Editor of N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

Price, bound in rich cloth, 400 pages, $1.

Mental Gymnastics;

OR

Memory Culture.

BY ADAM MILLER, M. D.

A practical and easy system by which any person, old or young, can train themselves to memorize anything they choose—

THE CLERGY, Their Sermons;
THE STUDENT, His Lessons;
THE BUSINESS MAN, Items of Business.

The author of this work was put to the severest public test, a few days ago, by reporters of all the leading Chicago daily papers. The commendatory notices which appeared the following day showed how well he stood the test.

The author, an old man, claims to have a memory more to be trusted by training under this system than even while he was young.—CHICAGO INTER-OCEAN.

We cordially commend it to all persons of failing memory as the best book obtainable on that subject.

—INTERIOR.
Most ingenious; enables any one, who familiarizes himself with the system, to carry an immense mass of digested information, ready for production on demand. By experiment we have tested the author's mnemonic resources, and have marvelled by them to wonder.—ADVANTAGE.

This work, with written instructions by the author, will be sent postpaid to any address on receipt of price, $1.00. Address, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan.

By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00.
This deeply interesting narrative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how law men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale by 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield, "E'en his failings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that such theories have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

OF

A Happy Life.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently practical in its teaching. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts only in afterthought reach the heart. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.
"The book is so truly and reverential yet devout in its spirit that it demands criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful; that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.
"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.
"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to final."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.
"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

It is generally believed in Washington that Secretary Manning will resign and become President of the newly organized Western National Bank of New York, of which Treasurer Jordan is to be cashier.

The National Legislative committee of the Knights of Labor have petitioned President Cleveland to veto the interstate commerce bill.

The cowboy son of Senator Fair shot at ex-Congressman Page because the latter gentleman refused to "have a drink" with him.

The Senate on Tuesday, by a vote of 34 to 16, defeated the resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution granting suffrage to women.

COUNTRY.

The Chicago Board of Trade has issued summons to nine members to appear Tuesday for dealing in "puts and calls." The Board lately abolished such trading.

The preliminary report made by Engineer Hering and his associates on the drainage and water supply of Chicago is submitted to Mayor Harrison. Surveys have been completed as far as Joliet. The South fork of the Chicago river is in condition of great filthiness. In quiet slips the sewerage deposits reach a depth of from one to four feet. It is judicious at present to plan works sufficiently extensive to dispose of the sewage of 2,500,000 inhabitants. It is quite feasible to carry all the drainage over the divide into the Mississippi valley by a canal between Chicago and Summit, taking its choice of three routes. The localities suffering most for lack of pure water are the business section and the southern residence quarter.

Lawyer Grinnell, and his assistants in behalf of the State, in preparing its side of the record for the consideration of the Supreme Court in the case of the appeal of the condemned anarchists, has photographed all the plans of the halls where the conspiracy was hatched, and also all the varieties of bombs that were seized by the police.

It is announced that work will soon be commenced on the elevated railroad in this city which is to run south on State street to West Chicago and Kensington.

The Illinois State Labor Association, in session at Springfield, rejected a resolution Wednesday asking for a new trial for the condemned Chicago anarchists. In regard to the International cigar-makers and Knights of Labor labels a heated discussion arose, but the Knights were defeated, the label of the International Union being approved.

The bill repealing the law giving women the right to vote at school elections was killed Thursday in the Wisconsin Assembly.

A bitter feeling is reported to pervade the saloon element at Sioux City, Iowa, and threats of vengeance against temperance people are being made.

Three boilers in Harvey's paper-mill at Wellsburg, W. Va., exploded Wednesday, destroying a portion of the mill, killing two men and wounding three others, one of whom may not recover. A piece of a boiler struck a dwelling seventy-five yards from the mill and partly wrecked it.

An ice-gorge at Port Deposit, Md., has caused a flood, the main street of the town being five or six feet under water. There has been great destruction of property, and reports from up the river are that the waters are still rising. An unsuccessful attempt was made to break the gorge with dynamite.

The Montana miners on a strike have a novel way for compelling settlement for arrears of pay. They seized the person of young Sellman, the son of the New York banker who owns the mines, and held him as a hostage until their two months' back wages were paid.

The worst blizzard known for years was raging in Dakota and Montana Saturday night, with the mercury 20 to 80 degrees below zero. The storm struck northern Illinois Sunday.

A final dividend of 5 per cent in favor of creditors of the World's Exposition at New Orleans has been made by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury from the Congressional appropriation of $355,000.

The United Labor party of Philadelphia Monday put up a ticket for city officers, a shoemaker, a cigar-maker, a car-driver, and an attorney being nominated for the principal positions.

Bills prohibiting the appointment of "Pinkerton men" as special policemen, and declaring that they shall not exercise the powers of deputy sheriffs, policemen, or constables, under heavy penalties, were introduced Monday night in the New Jersey House.

Three comets have been discovered within five days. One discovered by the director of the observatory at Cordova, South America, is going to be very brilliant.

R. F. Simpson, who lived at St. Elmo, Ill., was bitten on the thumb by his little boy recently, and died last week of blood-poisoning.

Four steel boilers exploded in the works of a steel and iron establishment near Allegheny City, Pa., destroying the works and killing two men.

David Meredith, of Rich Valley, Wabash county, Indiana, who recently made the discovery that he has Cherokee blood in his veins, has received a patent from the government to a rich section of land in the Indian Territory. In the seventeenth century one of his ancestors married the daughter of a Cherokee chief.

Two hundred cases of gun-power exploded on a Missouri Pacific train near Fort Scott, Kan., early Tuesday morning, shivering fifteen cars and tearing up the road-bed and rails. Citizens of Fort Scott, where $10,000 worth of glass was broken, started panic-stricken from their beds and rushed into the street. Houses all over the country were shaken, and glass was broken in windows twenty-five miles distant.

There is a bill now before the Illinois Legislature providing for the printing of all school-books by convict labor. The legislators should be compelled to write the books and their children study them.

There is an epidemic of malarial fever and measles at Tarentum, Pa. There are over 100 serious cases and seven deaths have occurred within a few days. It is believed the poor drainage and impure water have caused the epidemic.

FOREIGN.

M. Florens, French Minister of Foreign Affairs, has sent a dispatch to M. Herbet, French ambassador at Berlin, in which he urges the latter to use no opportunity for impressing upon Germany France's earnest desire for peace, in which desire the whole Cabinet concurs.

It is stated by Henri Rochefort's paper in Paris that seven nihilists were recently hanged in the prison at Odessa, ten others are being tried at Wilna for killing a colonel, and 200 more were lately sent to Siberia.

The French Cabinet says that the war rumors in circulation are as incorrect from a military as from a diplomatic point of view. General Boulanger, minister of war, publishes a denial that he is buying horses abroad for the use of the army.

The British Parliament opened Friday. The government party is much crippled by the defeat of Mr. Goschen, a member of the cabinet, by a Gladstonian candidate. The address of the Queen was unusually vague, developing little of what is believed to be the line of action of the government.

Terrible rioting has been renewed in Belfast. Thirty persons are reported killed and over 100 injured. The trouble, it is said, was caused by soldiers insulting a number of Catholic civilians.

At a court reception to-day Emperor William informed the assembled officers that 72,000 men of the reserves would be called out immediately, and be drilled in the use of the new repeating rifle. This announcement, taken in conjunction with the reported words of the Crown Prince Frederick William at the same reception, that the situation was still serious, renews the public alarm.

REVISED ODD-FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Emancipation and Robe and Ties, degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate, with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from the authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. The ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper covers, 50 cents per dozen.

GRATEFUL---COMFORTING.

EPPS' SCOCOA. BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which will supply to many families a healthful and economical diet. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Chill Berrill's Gazette.

Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in half-pound tins, by grocers, labelled thus: JAMES EPPS & CO., Homoeopathic Chemists, London, England.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Paper covers, 30c. Cloth, 40c. The aim of this book is to show the great difference between true and false religion. It is heart searching. God is blessing this book to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

Self Deception, Its Nature, Evils and Remedy. By Rev. Jacob Heffenstein. Paper covers, 10c. This book goes to the very bottom of the subject, and searches out the sandy foundation of the deceiver. The future of the soul depends on what many are hiding, and the false hopes of thousands are here set forth in plain and powerful words. It will meet a felt want among Christian workers, and is eminently suitable for circulation among all church members.

How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 10c. This little book points out that there are certain practical means within the reach of every child of God, in the use of which he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Striving and encouraging.

Spies, the anarchist, committed murder by proxy, was the other day married by proxy, and probably wants to be hung by proxy. Saturday evening a week ago the demented Van Zant girl dragged her equally foolish parents several miles to a justice of the peace, who is an anarchist sympathizer, and was married to Spies's brother who stood as his proxy. Sheriff Matson immediately shut out the poor foolish woman from the jail, and it is to be hoped that she will now sink out of public view until she recovers her reason.

Knoxville, Tennessee, of which the Cynosure readers have heard so much of late to cheer, is not always in sunshine. The saloon business is not prominent there, but it gave the world a sad story last week. Dr. Alexander, one of the leading physicians and highly connected throughout the city, after a protracted drunken spree took morphine and killed himself, leaving to his distracted wife and sons this bitter message: "I go to hell. Tell my son to go to heaven!"

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will help Anthony Comstock, our American "Great Heart" against the giant vices of the time, in a new effort. He is preparing a memorial to Congress, backed by a petition praying that some restraint be placed upon the publication of such details of divorce and other criminal cases as tend to the prejudice of public morals. Every decent man or woman who reads a daily paper ought to pray for the success of this measure.

Prohibition is marching on. This week we add the upper house of Pennsylvania to the list of legislative bodies which have voted for a constitutional amendment. The representatives concurring the old Keystone State will have her opportunity for a century. In the Missouri legislature the same question is a lively one. The House failed to reach the two-thirds vote which would carry the measure, but another trial will be given on the 15th. The Tennessee legislature has adopted the amendment. The Alabama Senate passed a resolution Friday to submit prohibition to a general vote 26 to 1 on a joint resolution. In West Virginia the lower house passed a like resolution two weeks ago. It came up in the Senate Friday and got a vote of 17 to 7. One more vote is needed and may yet be gained from absent members. Nothing is more certain in politics than the triumph of this prohibition issue.

The liquor dealers of Pennsylvania have organized a State League and applied for its incorporation under law. Singularly, the headquarters are not at Pittsburg or Philadelphia, the great cities of the State, but at Reading, in the coal region where liquor floats everything. And more strange still, one object of the League is to "elevate" persons engaged in the liquor traffic. One could almost imagine it a branch of the W. C. T. U. The organization has verily a great work to do. Hercules never engaged at any task so discouraging. It is superhuman. Elevate the liquor dealers! Wash a hog in a mud-hole! Read the story of the Molly Maguires to know the degradation of Pennsylvania liquor selling. The first step would be to smash their business, but the League is to help them succeed in it and sell more. These phrases of inverted virtue which this League and the national convention of liquor makers and dealers paste in their street windows deceive nobody, not even themselves.

The appalling disaster at Woodstock, Vermont, Saturday morning so nearly resembles that memorable night at Ashtabula thirteen years ago, that every one will recall that valley of fire and death. The Ohio holocaust came about by the neglect of the railway managers to provide a suitable bridge over the chasm. The Vermont disaster possibly might have been avoided by some simple device to prevent the train leaving the ties. At least the Vermont Central do not look upon their record in the matter with such regret as the Baltimore and Ohio company for their Republic, Ohio, collision. The corner's inquest found the latter resulting from the drunkenness of employers. The company now requires its men to take the pledge. Railroad managers, as a class, are held to be the ablest business men in the country, but any ten-year-old boy would have known enough to lock the stable door before the horse was stolen.

The Knights of Labor employed on the coal docks of New York began a strike some two weeks ago, which, on the lodge principle of co-operation, soon extended to all the docks, and threatened to extend in every direction. The Boston "Longshoremen's Union decided to unload no vessels whose cargoes had been handled by non-unionists. The steamer lines and the railway business were greatly delayed. The engineers on the elevated roads and of stationery engines threatened not to fire with coal polluted by non-union touch; and over in Pennsylvania the miners, always ready for an explosion, threatened to join the issue; and thus make it a fight for life by Powderly's army. So desperate a case he no doubt foresaw would make him a scepterless king, and it has been prevented; but the strike holds on in New York though weakening. A committee from the New York legislature is trying to find out what is the matter.

The great coal strike in New York is so manifestly injurious to the working classes, and causes such suffering among the poor, that Henry Ward Beecher has been roused by it to assail the Knights of Labor in a speech Friday night at the Amherst Alumni banquet. He said: "This abomination, the Knights of Labor, is the result of this infernal idea of pater- nity of government. Because a few men in New Jersey think their employers have wronged them, all this Nation is called upon to suffer on the order of this paternal government of the Knights of Labor. This is from want of intelligence. God knows I am a friend of the workingmen. I am a working-man. I come from workingmen stock. My grandfather and his father were blacksmiths, and my mother's people worked in leather. The working people are being taken care of by the Knights of Labor instead of taking care of themselves, and people all over the land are being punished and business is stagnant because of it, just because a few men in Jersey have done wrong. The destruction of the poor is their ignorance."

The true child of God enters into rest just so fast and so far as he feels assured that he is "led by the Spirit of God." With this assurance all of the time, nothing could disturb our peace and joy of soul. For we should know that everything as fast as it happened was working for our good: loss of property, sickness, hunger, poverty, loss of character by slander, yea, "life or death, things present or things to come," and we could not be vexed with seeming troubles, any more than a man would mourn the loss of a shilling when he knew that every shilling in the world, the lost one included, was to be used for his particular good.

ENGLISH PROSPECTS FOR THE NEW YEAR.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

The year 1887 has come upon England, and indeed we may say Europe, inauspiciously. The nations of the Continent are armed to the teeth, and saying very provoking things of and to each other, as if resolved to provoke an appeal to arms. So far as England is concerned, the year 1886 began with high expectations of great reforms to be accomplished by the new Parliament, but the close of the year saw most of these hopes unrealized. The election, which was caused by an appeal to the country on the subject of Irish Home Rule, while it weakened the Liberals did not so far strengthen the Tories as to enable them to attempt the government of the country on independent principles. The outlook is not pleasant. It is probable that in a very short time another appeal will be necessary, as the Irish question still blocks the way, and seems destined to provoke a state of constant disquiet.

Notwithstanding these difficulties we think there is a hopeful side to the subject, and we prefer looking on that side whenever possible. Hope, however, is not an inspiration when it is not based on sound reason. While we know that faith is the victory that overcometh the world, we also know that a faith whose foundations are not laid in reason is valueless. Goodness is mightier than evil, and when the two forces grapple together in stern conflict righteousness must prevail. God is at the very heart of the world, stirring its energies, guiding its impulses, and controlling its life. It has oftentimes been a wonder to us how good men who are strong in faith can ever be deficient in hope. An astronomical truth ensures the promise of spring, while a physiological truth guarantees the germination of the seeds of the last harvest which are now buried in unsightly soil. In the same way there are germs of great moral principles which have been sown broadcast over the land, and which are destined to enrich the race of man.

One of our strongest hopes is that which arises from the attitude of the church towards the moral problems which are disturbing the age. Christ is the foundation of everything that is eternal, and the church is his representative, to carry into vital action the truths which he taught. The way in which the church is taking up the great political and social problems of the day is an augury of good.

Never to our thinking was there a time when the church made itself felt so beneficially in the arena of politics and science as it is doing now. There have been times when there has been intensity of spiritual force, but it has not been so wide-spread as now. The church has in great measure brought over the world to her side, or in other words to her way of thinking and to the adoption of her principles of action. The morality of the age is far in advance of the past, while the consciences of our leading public men are more susceptible to moral impressions. There are exceptions to all good rules, but an advance has been made and this is to be attributed to the teachings and influence of the church. Whatever may be said of the influence of the press its conscience has also been made sensitive by the influence of the church.

The growing prevalence of democracy is another source of hope. We do not understand by democracy, mobocracy or the rule of demagogues, but such a free interplay of all the interests, characteristics, tendencies, and aspirations of all classes of the people that the resultant is a policy which secures not sectional but the general good.

In the first Locksley Hall, Tennyson hailed the dawn of democracy as a rising sun, the introduction of a golden age which has been limned by Virgil, Isaiah, and other poet-seers without number, in which the most brilliantly colored imaginings were conditioned by strict scientific thinkings. Tennyson giving expression to the true and enlightened Radicalism of that time called upon the masses to better themselves, not by seizing upon the property of others, but by strenuousness in toil. The virtue of true democracy is that no class rules as a class, but as a people containing within themselves a vast variety of interests. No one can mingle much with the working men of this country without recognizing their strong convictions that every private interest and trade interest needs to be curbed and limited by the equal rights of all others. In a number of cases we find working men whose imaginations have been warped by professional talkers of a socialistic stamp. The common sense of the people is dominated by a strong under-current of Christian truth, and in this lies our safety and hope of the future.

TIMES OF WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION.

THE BALEFUL INFLUENCE OF SECRET LODGES—"KNIGHTS OF THE GOLDEN CIRCLE" AND "BLUE LODGES OF MISSOURI."

I have referred to the slave power as controlling the country for a whole generation before the late war, and as the cause of the war. But the lodge was the hand-maid of this power. Its ability to control was effected and secured by means of secret organized circles, or lodges; one of the first of which was the "Knights of the Golden Circle."

Some years ago, George W. Childs of Philadelphia, described this organization in his great organ, The Ledger, and in the first volume of a work entitled, "Civil War in America." In this he says:

This secret society was formed primarily for the destruction of the nationality of this Republic. It planned the seizure of the richest provinces of Mexico, the Island of Cuba, and those adjacent thereto, and the establishment of an empire, with slavery as its chief corner-stone. That empire, as they represented it, was to include a "Golden Circle," its center at Savannah, with a radius of sixteen degrees of latitude, and sixteen degrees of longitude, reaching northward to Pennsylvania, and southward to the Isthmus of Darien. It included the West India Islands, and those of the Caribbean Sea, with parts of Mexico and Central America. These Knights of the Golden Circle were the soul of all filibustering movements from 1850 to 1857, and when they failed, its energies were concentrated upon one of its prime objects—the destruction of the American Union.

As soon as the Nebraska bill was introduced into Congress, and its passage was assured, two emissaries, or adventurers, (Mr. Geo. W. Binkley and his nephew) were sent out and empowered to form lodges, in all parts of Missouri, as they had in the South. They affiliated with or formed what we knew as the "Blue Lodges of Missouri," with, for a time, headquarters at Platte City, in Western Missouri. D. R. Atchison, the then late presiding officer of the U. S. Senate, had been initiated in Washington and welcomed them to his home in this country. In these lodges was concocted the invasion of Kansas. The propagation of slavery was one of its objects, and to secure Kansas to slavery by whatever means, now seemed its mission.

I had no sooner landed at what is now so well known as Kansas City, than there appeared the evidences of its existence and power. Being a recognized agent of what was known as the "New England Emigrant Aid Company," a corporation organized in Boston to aid in the settlement of the Territory, I came particularly under their notice, and was sure to have my full share of their hatred and abuse.

I remember one cold night in December, 1855, when I had been captured by armed ruffians, and taken into their camp upon the Wakarusa, the captain announced, in a loud harangue before some fifteen hundred men, who had been marched up there to destroy the town of Lawrence, and to subdue the Yankees, crying out: "We have caught Beelzebub, the prince of devils! Come and see him!"

Another such pandemonium—if I escape hell and the burning chambers of the hereafter—I shall never again witness! Such swearing and blaspheming, such yells, mingled with the perfumes of whiskey and tobacco, I had never before witnessed, or conceived of. They put me in a tent for that night upon the bare ground, to which I was frozen long before morning; and then for seven days and nights I was held there, and heard more of the Blue Lodges of Missouri, and the purpose to "wade in blood," if need be, to subdue Kansas and aid slavery than I care to hear again.

Martial law having been declared, their mock military trial for treason, to which I was subjected, had more of the damning disgrace of this organization than I ever before imagined. Men, during all that imprisonment, were constantly coming to me with grips and passwords, that I knew nothing of, and asking me finally, "Are you a Mason?" "Do you belong to the Knights?" and other questions that had no meaning to me. To all of this questioning, I said simply, "No; I have no association with them." To the question, "Are you for a Free State, and opposed to slavery?" I never failed to reply "Yes." "Do you belong to that Yankee Aid Society?" "Yes, I am their agent in this Territory." And so the ordeal passed on, until they agreed to hang me—when I was rescued.

The next day Gov. Robinson and General Lane arranged terms of peace with Gov. Shannon, and this "militia" disbanded for their homes upon the Missouri border.

I next met these "Knights of the Golden Circle" when General Price was invading Missouri, and on the march with his troops for Kansas. I was for a time a staff-officer with General Curtis, and was with him upon the Sabbath when, at Westport, Price's army was repulsed. General Pleasanton came by forced marches to our rescue, and with General Blunt and Col. Ford, turned the forces of Price southward into Arkansas. I now quote from "Civil War in America," page 275, volume III:

General Rosecrans, Jan. 23, in command at St. Louis, discovered that the State was menaced by armed foes on one side and by hidden and malignant ones on the other. The form of secret association known as "Knights of the Golden Circle," "American Knights," "Sons of Liberty," etc. He employed competent and trustworthy spies who reported that these secret organizations were numerous and powerful. They were preparing to join General Price when he should invade Missouri, in numbers not less than twenty thousand strong! Each man of whom was sworn to perform his part in the drama. They also reported, that General Sterling Price was the "Grand Commander" of these secret leagues for the South, and that C. L. Vallandigham was the "Grand Commander" for the Northern members. They, too, discovered that arms were sent to the State and secretly distributed among these men. One of Rosecrans's men visited their secret lodges and learned that measures were being taken for commencing a revolution in St. Louis, by murdering the Provost Marshall and seizing the Department Headquarters, etc., etc. Hugh Erwing made a bold stand against Price. His "Sons of Liberty" and "Knights" did not respond as expected; and as soon as their "State Commander" had been arrested, they were satisfied that their plot was discovered, and turned toward Kansas.

It was when this army of Price had reached the Blue River, near Westport, that I again saw some of the old leaders, who had been driven out of Kansas in 1856, now again on the march in October, 1864, for slavery and treason. But for these secret orders and secret lodges, and their encouragement given to Price, there would never have been this second invasion, in which Kansas came near losing all she had gained by the preceding eight years of prosperity and peace.

General Curtis had some prisoners at Westport who cursed bitterly all these secret leagues; because, as one said, "they promised to come out of their hiding places in the brush, and fight boldly with us." One of them, who had been guard over me in the "Wakarusa War" in Kansas, said, "D— these secret fiends! Pomeroy, I always respect an open enemy. I never will again enter a secret lodge." I left him, congratulating him on his good resolution, and assuring him that for one "I never entered a secret lodge." I could but think that this poor man's sorrow and repentance came too late, and recited the familiar lines of Goldsmith:

"O happy, who in happy hour
To God their praise bestow;
And own his all-consuming power,
Before they feel the blow!"

But this man could not greatly excite my sympathy, as he had organized these "circles" and took all the initiation fees for his personal use. I find that one J. P. Newcomb, of the Almo Express, on page 6 of his work entitled, "Secession Times in Texas," says that the lodge of "Knights" "was founded by John C. Calhoun, in Charleston in 1835. Hon. Mr. Clingman of Texas said in the Senate (see his speeches, page 79) that 'men were hanging by the necks from trees in Texas, because of their Union sentiments,' and were 'tried and convicted in secret!'"

Mr. Childs continues in his book:

"These lodges included many members of legislatures, and active politicians in all parts of the South. Sixty of them called a State convention in January, 1861, to meet at Austin on the 28th day. Also they called an extra meeting of the Legislature to meet the same day. Only one member of the Legislature signed the call (Gov. Houston was not called). Yet the Legislature did meet with the convention, and together they called a State convention which did take that great State out of the Union."

At last Gov. Houston called another meeting of the Legislature, and he then "protested," but to no purpose. These secret emissaries had done the work; and in the end he, too, fell into their line.

The chief manager, then, of these lodges was John H. Regan, "High Chief" of the Knights, and after that Jeff. Davis's Postmaster General; one McQueen assisted him in Texas as "Commissioner of the Independent State of South Carolina." They held sway in Texas during the convention, and in three days passed the ordinance of secession by almost a unanimous vote. Does any one doubt that these secret lodges planned and executed this work? I do not.

Early as the 6th day of Nov., 1860, on the very night when, in Washington, the election of Lincoln was assured, Wm. L. Yancey called one of these secret meetings, held at the house of James H. Hammond, a son of a Yankee who went South to teach school. At his house was the first consultation of secession of which I can learn. Most, if not all, of this lodge then assembled were under oath of allegiance to the United States. About that table in his private parlor sat Wm. H. Gist, the governor of South Carolina, ex-Governor J. H. Adams, J. S. Orr, and his entire Congressional Delegation, save Wm. P. Miles who was sick. There were there John McQueen, L. M. Reitt, M. S. Benham, J. D. Ashmore, William H. Boyce, also Hammond and Chestnut, their two Senators. This was the meeting that resolved to take South Carolina out of the Union.

These secret lodges were the vile mothers of secession. They kept dark lest their plots should be disclosed. Errors ever so dangerous, are comparatively harmless if they come to the light. But they have all the characteristics of an assassin when plotted in secret. Without these secret societies there could have been no secession, no war, no Andersonville, with its hell of horrors.

Their next "secret circle" meeting held in Washington, was at the house of Howell Cobb, Secretary of the Treasury. John B. Floyd, Secretary of War, was there, with Jacob Thompson, Secretary of the Interior, and Wm. H. Prescott, of South Carolina. What a spectacle! Four of Buchanan's Cabinet, under sworn allegiance to this government, secretly plotting its overthrow! Howell Cobb had them all take an oath of secrecy before they left his house. That man Thompson concocted more infamy than any other man. He held secret meetings, plotted frauds, both here and while hiding in Canada, besides being charged with conspiracy to murder President Lincoln. Floyd died with the straps of a brigadier general of the Southern Confederacy on his shoulders. The others fought their battles in the dark. How all this looks with the light of a quarter of a century poured in upon it! History is a wonderful agency in shedding light upon scenes of darkness, and making plain such crooked places.

I was always glad Mr. Lincoln commended his Proclamation to the verdict of posterity, as well as to the "gracious favor of Almighty God." Posterity calls him blessed, and what he sowed in weakness and doubt has been raised in strength and glory.

The National Intelligencer, of Jan. 9th, 1861, contains an account of the fact that a secret lodge meeting was held in Washington the night before, called the "Golden Circle;" and says the following named persons attended; all of whom were under oath of allegiance to the United States. These men were the Hon. Mr. Benjamin, Fitzpatrick, C. C. Clay, R. M. Johnson, John Slidell, Sebastian, Robert Toombs, Jefferson Davis, A. G. Brower, Hemphill and Wigfall, Yulee and Mallory. All went for secession while in the service of the United States! For a further list of the names, all members of the lodge, see McPherson's "History of the Great Rebellion," page 11. That such associations are dangerous to the life of any government, hardly admits of questioning. The National Democratic Convention was to meet in 1864 in Chicago, to assure the country "that the war was a failure." Its secret history is not in this connection out of place. This National Convention assembled on the 29th day of August, 1864—pretty late for a nominating convention! And why it was postponed from July 4th to the last of August was somewhat mysterious then, but clearer now.

On the first of July the "Knights of the Golden Circle" called a meeting at the Clifton House in Canada. This call was issued by Geo. N. Sanders, Jacob Thompson, Clement C. Clay, J. P. Holcomb and Beverly Tucker. The lodge was there. The call for this meeting bore same date with the notice to postpone the convention. The man Sanders who headed the call had joined the lodge in Washington the December previous, and was the same man who went to Jeff. Davis, before the fall of Sumter, and assured him that the whole Democracy of the North and West would sustain him. We see that on the 14th of April, the Sunday following the surrender of Sumter, he telegraphed to Mayor Wood, Richmond, and Belmont of New York city, as follows:

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 14, 1861.

To Mayor Wood, Richmond and Belmont:—The entire South is under arms. Peace must come quickly or be conquered. Northern Democrats standing by the South will not be held responsible for Lincoln's acts, unless endorsing them. State sovereignty must be maintained. Hoist your flag!

This dispatch closed thus:

"Davis's answer is rough and curt; Sumter is ours, and nobody hurt."

For three years this Sanders, with others, had kept up this fire in the rear of our army. His associate, C. L. Vallandigham, had been arrested by order of Mr. Lincoln, and allowed to leave the States for Canada. And now his committee had got the convention postponed, and a "grand meeting," as they called it, at the Clifton House. While there they got out of funds; got up a raid upon St. Alban's bank in Vermont, stole $50,000 and got back.

At this lodge meeting, just opposite Niagara Falls, they arranged (I quote from "Civil War in America," vol. III., page 445,) "to make raids upon Northern cities; to rescue Confederate prisoners near the border of Canada; and to spread contagious diseases in the Union military camps; and, as circumstantial evidence seems to show, to secure the assassination of the President and his Cabinet." "When this Democratic National Convention assembled in Chicago, the city swarmed with these conspirators." "Their method determined upon was a general uprising in the Northwest." Thank God! a good officer was in command in Chicago. Disabled in the field, Col. B. T. Sweet had the sagacity to detect this conspiracy. All letters written by rebel prisoners had to be open when passing headquarters, then sealed and forwarded. Col. Sweet discovered letters written upon large sheets of paper and containing only a few commonplace words. He suspected something wrong, and had them taken and subjected to heat, when lo and behold! the whole conspiracy came to light. These letters could now be read, and they were telling that at the time of the convention friends from Canada were to appear; arms were ready for them; and "Chicago would be laid in ruins, by fire and sword."

Hon. Mr. Colfax, in his address delivered at Peru, Indiana, at this date, says: "Vallandigham had come to this Democratic Convention from Canada. Mr. Lincoln did not have him arrested as would have been natural. For Mr. Lincoln knew the fact there was a secret organization there, wanting only a pretext for lighting the torch of civil war all over the Northwest. Anxious to preserve your own firesides, he passed over the return of Vallandigham!" Being forewarned, this great calamity was averted. The secret enemies of the Republic failed, as did those fighting openly. But for these secret lodges, the Great Rebellion could not have been inaugurated, nor the dissolution of the Union attempted. They were the most dangerous elements then operating, and the most wicked and cruel. For their continuance let us pray, "Good Lord, deliver us."

THE CONGRESS OF CHRISTIANS.

BY REV. CHARLES R. HUNT.

Every one who hopes to see the day dawn from the night of lodge oppression, must feel a profound gratitude at the call for the forth-coming convention. That it should be called by men of such celebrity as those whose names appear, bespeaks much. From the first suggestion of such convention, the idea of being able to gather together such representative men in such a body as the proposed congress, has seemed a veritable God-send, an "Open Sesame" into a new era of conquests.

That the congress may be followed by all of which it seems the fit precursor, we should all endeavor to make it a very Waterloo to this arbitrary power which "no law of the land can effect and no anathema of the church can destroy."

That the convention may be the mighty engine of war desired, it seems important that the session be of not less than three days' duration. Also for the purpose of bringing into full view the numerous monstrosities of the would-be hidden system, permit the suggestion, that there be such a well-arranged programme that each prominent feature may come under the dissecting knife of inspection. Further, that those persons willing to be convinced by truth may receive the unimpeachable evidences which are at hand, to prove that the system of lodgery is hypocritical and perfidious, it would seem desirable that the opening addresses should be delivered by experienced and able lecturers upon this subject.

If after the arraignment of Freemasonry as an enemy of the church of Christ, because hypocritical, malicious and sacrilegious; an enemy of the government because grasping, arbitrary and unscrupulous, the minds of any are not so convinced by the overwhelming evidence as to use their influence against the pretences of the lodge, they will surely be shown not to be

"Men whom the lust of office does not kill—Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy."

But in the list of those who call the convention there are many men of great strength of conviction and of independent thought, and it may be that some of them have never had opportunity to thoroughly investigate the influence of Freemasonry upon Christianity. That they may have opportunity, the suggestion to have a thoroughly arranged programme is made.

Another important work in the arrangement for the convention is, it would seem, to have it announced in the columns of every religious journal in the United States. Also in the secular sheets which visit every business room, manufactory, mart of trade, or farm house. I trust that these suggestions may not seem officious, but rather that the interest of every free man in this convention may be greatly increased. I expect to attend, God willing, this convention where Baalism, sun-worship, and devil worship will be tried much as the trial which old Mt. Carmel witnessed by the single prophet of the true God and the ancient worshippers of Baal.

AN URGENT WORK.

BY REV. J. F. AVERY.

It is the duty of every Christian to be both in purse and person fully consecrated to Christ's service. Who amongst us can say, My contribution is fully equal to my ability? Do we sing—

"Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were an offering far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all!"

The question practically is, are we doing our best? To withhold from God involves fearful responsibilities. Who would be a miser? It has been said, "A small thing, next to nothing, is the marrow of a gnat's bone, but an infinitely smaller thing than that, is a miser's conscience." From small-souleness let us pray "Good Lord deliver us." Unless our religious feeling goes pocket deep, our professions of love and zeal for God are as sounding brass.

Arnold Thomas put the question thus: "Shall I come to his table and take the sacramental bread and say, 'It is his body, broken for me,' and then proceed to say, 'But as for him, the crumbs which fall from my table—the odd shillings or sovereigns that can be spared, the things that are left after my own needs, present or future, have been met—these, these, shall be payment for Gethsemane, and requital for the cross.' The question is not, What will be easy? but it is, What are we bound to do, by honor, and duty, and love?"

The calls for men and means were never more urgent, and the possibilities for gracious and glorious results never greater. The field is the world, go work. Surely there is scope and opportunity large enough for the most ambitious. Steam power and the telegraph systems of the world are preparing the gospel way, so that he who would go, can go quickly. The day of service is wonderfully lengthened thereby. Woe be unto us if we preach not the gospel. If we work not to-day in the great harvest field of life, we shall suffer loss.

THE FREEDMAN'S THRIFT.

The proofs of progress in the social condition of the colored race are not so often seen as the regrets that the degradation in which slavery left them is not sooner shaken off. The following from an article in the Forum for August, 1886, by Eugene M. Camp, entitled "Our African Contingent," is a picture of prosperity:

"In one city, where the Emancipation Proclamation of twenty-three years ago found less than a dozen free blacks, there are to-day 103 colored men who are worth above $25,000 each, fifty-two who are worth $10,000 each, and nearly a thousand who pay taxes on above $5,000 each. The author of the standard history of the African race in America is worth $40,000. The Hon. Frederick Douglass has $300,000, and a mansion and farm, the former owner of which in his life-time declared that no negro should ever, for any price or upon any consideration, come into possession of any article that ever belonged to him. Boston has a colored merchant tailor who clothes the Beacon Hill aristocracy, and does a business of $1,600,000 a year. He was once a slave, and followed Sherman and his troops on their march to the sea. When he reached Charleston his total worldly possessions were a suit of very ragged clothes and twenty-eight cents. An ex-tax collector of the District of Columbia, a colored man, himself pays taxes on $250,000. New York had a colored druggist who did not long ago leaving $1,000,000, and a son-in-law worth $150,000. The Hon. John M. Langston, late United States Minister to Hayti, has $75,000. One of the largest coal dealers in Philadelphia is a colored man—a man, too, who, in mental culture, practical talent, and good works, would do credit to any race and to any community. Cincinnati has a colored furniture dealer whose check is good any day for $100,000. Twenty-three years ago he was a Kentucky slave. The late Robert Gordon owned thirty-four-story residences at the time of his death. One day he entered a Cincinnati bank and asked for government bonds. The cashier did not know him, and when he handed out his check for $150,000 the cashier appealed in astonishment to the president of the bank. 'Get him the bonds,' said the latter. 'He can draw his check for three times that sum.' San Francisco has fifteen colored men who are assessed for above $75,000 each. Detroit has several rich colored druggists. Buffalo has nine, Philadelphia sixty-eight, New Orleans thirteen, Chicago twenty-two, Louisville twelve, Charleston eight, Atlanta four, and Pittsburgh eleven colored men who pay taxes on more than $10,000 each, and never think of attending the sittings of the Board of Tax Appeals. Up to the failure of the Freedmen's Savings Bank the colored people of the South had deposited therein $53,000,000. This sum is in addition to the amounts deposited by them in other banking institutions. In South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi, the colored people are buying for themselves small farms, and what is better, they are paying for them. These monetary figures, of course, represent only a very small part of the colored people. Unfortunately the great mass of the race has not yet come to learn the value of a dollar, or the advantage of saving it up for a rainy day."

DR. STOVALL ON SECRET ORGANIZATIONS.

I once thought from what I heard and saw that Masonry was a grand institution for the protection of myself and children. When I joined I did not stop at Blue Lodge Masonry but went up to the very top. But after a while I moved to this country and found one man who had been a friend to me, with whom I said I would put my family if I died. While I was riding along on my horse, considering this question, a fresh thought struck me like this: "Is it possible that you are going to take the care of your family from God the creator of all things to put it into the hand of Masonry?" Is not God just as able to take care of your family when you are dead, as he has been able to take care of you and your family both up to this time?" This reason startled me and caused me to both think and act differently. I found that by putting my family into the hands of Masonry, for care and protection, I disparaged the parental care and protection of the Almighty. This was, in fact, setting aside the counsel, providence, and purposes of God through his Son Jesus Christ. This sacrifice I was not willing to make, neither was I willing to say to the Lord by that act perpetually, that I had no faith in his special Providence. From that time I resolved to wipe my hands of the iniquity between me and my Creator, and from that time I have been perfectly satisfied that when I went into Masonry I made one of the greatest mistakes of my life. I have since that time left all this matter with the Lord. I have had more pleasure in one year since I made that resolution than I had all the time that I was in Masonry.

The voluntary information given above, coming as it did and from the source from which it did, impresses us as being true, and worthy of careful and prayerful consideration by every honest and earnest Christian.—Living Way, Memphis.

"We who have believed do enter into rest." Of what use would the richest field, or the largest treasure be, to an infant who did not know how to use it? Much more would a universe of worlds, and all which they contain, be of no value to the heir of God, if he had none to look after it but himself. But he is a joint heir with Christ, who will see that his title is not disputed, and that his boundless inheritance is ordered in all things for his good.

Bound on an eternal journey, let us take no coin with us but gold.

A PARTY OF SLAVERY.

We have made no attack upon the Labor party, because it is on trial. We have, however, protested against the use of the machinery of secret organizations to drive men into political affiliations. We have warned the managers of the new party that no scheme of this kind will bear fruit, and yet we concede their right to try the experiment. The claim that the secret organization binding men to action proposed by a committee is analogous to the caucus of the older parties cannot be sustained. A caucus in any party is limited to the political action of the moment, and it is simply for the purpose of securing unity of action. A man who declines to go into a caucus may be just as good a party man as though he were a member of the caucus. The fact that he does not go into the caucus may subject him to criticism, but it does not affect his standing as a citizen. In other words, no machinery of a mere party contemplates the driving of a man into the doing of the bidding of any other man. He is under no oath. He is subject to no pressure in his business life or in his associations because of his independent action. On the other hand, the use of secret machinery by any political party to compel men to vote this way or that is clearly illegal. It was tried in the case of the old Know Nothings and failed because it was so out of harmony with American independence of character. Men sworn to obey blindly the direction of a committee or to vote as a committee orders are little better than slaves. If this is to be a feature of the new Labor party it will be opposed by a good many men who are classed as laborers.—Inter Ocean.

POWDERLY'S DESPERATION.

Mr. Powderly tells the Knights of Labor that the order has reached the most critical period in its history. This is not news to the public. It has been evident ever since last spring that the course then entered upon could not be followed long, certainly could not be continued into the winter, without bringing the order to the verge of financial ruin. Such enormous destructions of income as the Southwestern railroad strike, the New York car-drivers' strike, the Atlanta cotton operatives' strike, the Chicago meat-packers' strike, the Salem and Peabody tanners' strike, and the Cohoes and Amsterdam knit goods strike, amount in the aggregate to the dimensions of a public debt, and the tax on the district assemblies that have kept out of trouble themselves and gone on earning their wages has become a severe burden. It is not surprising, therefore, that the Executive Board has been compelled to resort to the extraordinary expedient of assessing directly upon the individual members of the order a special tax of 25 cents each. Mr. Powderly says that these expenses have been incurred in protecting the manhood of members of the order. This is certainly an extreme statement. They have been incurred in too many cases through hasty action in raising issues that had better not have been raised. But be this as it may, the Knights are in a fair way to learn that manhood is often more successfully protected by making a dignified protest against the grievance complained of and leaving the matter there to the action of public opinion and moral appeal than by rushing into a fight. That is what the founders of the order thought. Their wise, far-seeing judgment has been too far disregarded.—Work and Wages.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. George Clark and his wife, of Oberlin, were lately reminded of their fiftieth wedding anniversary by an unexpected visit from their friends, in which the whole Oberlin community participated personally or in sympathy.

—The late Charles Francis Adams, the eloquent eulogist of Seward, will be remembered in a memorial address by ex-Governor Long, one of the ablest speakers in Massachusetts or the country.

—Rev. John Boyes, our esteemed English contributor, writes again for our readers. We are thankful to a kind Providence which is restoring his health in some degree.

—Bro. J. F. Galloway, of Florida, writes of his double bereavement, the death of his excellent wife, and later of his father. He is left to struggle along with indifferent health alone with his children. He would like to sell his place and come North to live, and educate his children. It was the dying wish of his wife that he should do so.

—The only word the Cynosure has had from Bro. M. R. Britten since his journey to Southern California is that he attended the wedding of some young friends. We congratulate Bro. Britten, and hope this word indicates the continued round of happy events which have occupied the winter season.

—Laura S. Haviland, a member of Friends' Chicago Meeting, has lately been visiting families in the limits of Adrian Quarterly Meeting, Mich. She also spent two days at the Industrial School for girls at Adrian; attended two evening meetings there, and conducted their morning service.

—Rev. C. C. Foote signifies his purpose to be present with Mrs. Foote, at the approaching conference on the lodge system in this city. He wishes about fifteen minutes on the programme on the subject, "The Deadly Sin of Moral Cowardice." All who know Bro. Foote will want to hear that speech. It will be as full of electricity as a Leyden jar, not only sparkling, but possibly shocking some who may get too near.

—ENOCH HONEYWELL.—A grandson of father Enoch Honeywell, the great volunteer tract agent of our reform, writes that the good old man died on the 13th of January, in the 99th year of his age. His mind was active to the last, and he left an address to be read at his funeral, which is promised to the Cynosure, and which many who well remember his appeals to the Young Men of America, will read with sad interest, as the last work of one of Christ's humble and useful servants. After nearly filling up a century of earnest, whole-souled activity for the Master he has been called home. This long and eventful life was full of zealous labor against slavery and secretism. May his mantle fall upon another who will carry on the good work to which he was so devoted.

—The London Metropolitan Tabernacle congregation, under the pastorate of Mr. Spurgeon, now uses unfermented wine at the Lord's Supper, as do over 3,000 other churches in Great Britain.

REFORM NEWS.

NOTES FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

A brief stop at Rochester, N. Y., gave me time to drop in a moment to see our old friend De Jough, near the depot. He is in deep affliction by reason of the mental condition of his daughter, which, since the death of his companion, is specially trying. The old man is still active and on the outlook for items. One which he recently picked up was a newspaper report of a lodge of Knights of Pythias, at which Rev. J. P. Sankey, of Rochester United Presbyterian church, offered prayer. This should interest every United Presbyterian.

"THE WORLD WILL LOVE ITS OWN."

A lumber dealer in Maryville, Tennessee, in commending Odd-fellowship to his friend, said, "If I had joined a month sooner it would have been worth fifty dollars to me." When asked in what way, he said, "A firm in Knoxville that owed me fifty dollars was about to fail, and every Odd-fellow having a claim was notified in time to secure his money, but I hadn't joined them, and so I lost my debt." The fellow regretted that he had not sold out his manhood sooner and got the fifty dollars, which was probably more than what he had of honesty and self-respect was worth.

After I spoke in Berea, Ky., a gentleman meeting Bro. Fee, said, "I know that what Mr. Stoddard said about the influence of Masonry in the courts is true. We can't punish a Mason for any crime in the community where I live. A man said to me the other day, 'I am a Freemason and can do what I please, and you can't touch me.'" The "mystic brother" doubtless spoke by the blue book of the lodge, though without the legitimate craft of his order.

SOWING BESIDE ALL WATERS.

When passing through a Southern town I left upon the hotel table a copy of the Christian Cynosure and a Weed tract. Returning I learned that they had been eagerly read by the landlord, who is a Mason, and by his wife, and also by the Presbyterian pastor and his wife, and all most heartily endorsed the sentiments. The pastor and his wife called at my room, and our gratification was mutual to find that they were personal friends of Deacon Moses Pettingill, who had greatly aided them while engaged in Christian work in Peoria, Ill., and that they once attended an anti-secrecy convention in that city. They gladly accepted all the literature I could furnish, for distribution at the four different points where they are laboring in the mission work.

Tedious delays are greatly relieved by such incidents, and evidences that our "labor is not in vain in the Lord."

DUES.

Conversing with a clergyman, I learned that he held membership in an Odd-fellow's lodge and a Presbyterian church in Pittsburgh. I asked if he kept up his lodge dues, and was assured that he did. I then asked if he thought Christ required members who had means to support the church with which they were connected, in its work.

"Most assuredly," said he.

"Do you send monthly or quarterly dues to the church of which you are a member?" I inquired.

"I have been negligent in that matter, I must confess," he replied.

"Which, then, am I to understand occupies most thought and has your greatest confidence, the secret lodge or the church of Christ?" He thought the church. I simply remarked, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and passed to other topics.

J. P. STODDARD.

THE SITUATION IN THE OLD NORTH STATE.

HILLSBORO, N. C., Jan. 26, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am enjoying the hospitality of Rev. G. W. Walker and his excellent wife. The former graduated at Harvard and the latter at Atlanta University. I spoke last night to a full house in the Congregational church. A good many lodge people were present who did not relish what was said, but others thanked me heartily for my faithful words. This old town, which dates back to revolutionary times, attained many years ago the maximum of its growth and is now thoroughly ruled by the lodge, but not without the protest of some Christian people. I am expected to speak again to-night, and hope that we may be able to make a breach in the ranks of the lodges.

I have spent some time to-day in the State House and listened to the grave legislators that are now framing enactments for the people. The State House is a respectable, but not imposing structure, not nearly so fine as that of Tennessee. It was built of stone in 1833, and has four fronts. On the south side is a bronze statue of Washington of life size. This is the only work of art I saw about the building. The legislature is a respectable looking body of men, and much more evenly divided as to parties than I had supposed. There was quite as much decorum as in the National Congress and much less difficulty in hearing what was said. Three members of the State Senate are colored and twelve or thirteen members of the House. These, with but one exception, are conspicuously black—literally "black Republicans"—but looked like men of capacity and culture. The questions under consideration were of no general interest and seemed to be rapidly disposed of.

At 6:30 p. m. I went to the chapel of the Shaw University where I met some 250 fine looking students, mostly young men. I was introduced by Pres. Tupper and spoke for an hour on the lodge system and had the most respectful attention. Pres. Tupper said that he had been so much absorbed with the subject of prohibition that he had not spoken much on this matter. He believed that all secret societies tended to make men selfish and untruthful and to undermine Christian character. He said that in the army, Freemasonry was used to secure promotions without regard to merit or ability, and he believed that thousands of Union soldiers were in their graves who, but for Freemasonry, might be alive and useful. He warned them to beware of all secret societies.

RALEIGH, N. C., Jan. 29.—After two lectures to full and attentive congregations in the Congregational church of Hillsboro, I spoke on the night of the 27th in the court house to a fair congregation of both white and colored. The latter were respectful and attentive as were most of the former, but some Masons were badly hurt and tried to make a little disturbance. A number, both of the white and colored, thanked me for my faithful words and expressed their hearty sympathy in the reform. Yesterday afternoon I reached this city. Almost every shop in the vicinity of the depot has painted on its front "Bar room," "Best Whiskeys," etc., but on inquiry I found that no liquors of any sort were kept in them, and that the prohibition of the traffic is fairly enforced. Liquor lovers have to go but three miles to get all they want, and drinking and drunkenness, though sensibly abated, have not altogether ceased. It is a great gain that there is no open traffic. What is needed is State prohibition.

Raleigh seems a pleasant, quiet little city with broad streets and some fine buildings. Among other institutions of beneficence is Shaw University. It is one of a dozen similar institutions founded over the South by the American Baptist Home Missionary Society for the education of the negroes. It has an industrial, normal, academic, theological, and medical department, to which a law department will be added. Four hundred and fifty students, of both sexes, and six large buildings, on a campus of twelve acres, attest its success. Of these departments there were last year 330 in the normal, 18 in the scientific, 43 in the classical, 26 in the medical, 55 in the theological. From its beginning in an old hotel in 1865, it has been under the care of Pres. H. M. Tupper, and has grown and prospered, as a result of his untiring efforts. I found him in hearty sympathy with our reform. He says he has always opposed secret societies, and has endeavored to keep them out of the church and the school. He was very glad to have me address his students and appointed me the earliest practicable time for a meeting.

Raleigh, like all State capitals, is under the heel of the lodge, and almost every minister, both white and colored, bows the knee. The Congregational minister, Rev. Geo. Smith, does not, and says he will give me a hearing; but he evidently dreads the opposition that he will encounter.

JAN. 31.—Yesterday morning I attended an admirable Bible reading at the Congregational church, conducted by the pastor, who seems earnestly to desire that his people shall be Bible Christians. I attended Sabbath school there, and at the University, and at 3:30 P. M. addressed the students of the University on Africa and its missions. Two of their graduates are already laboring in Liberia, and other students have the mission work in view. Nowhere in the South have I seen a finer appearing body of young men than the students of Shaw.

At 7:30 I met a full congregation at the Congregational church and preached from Isa. 52:1, dwelling at length on the evil and danger of the secret orders. The truth seemed to be kindly received and was endorsed by the pastor in some earnest remarks.

It is now just twenty days since I left home, and I find that I have given just twenty lectures and sermons, ten of which have been before schools for higher education. I have met in several instances, young men who heard me speak at Selma, Ala., Atlanta, Ga., and at Washington, D. C., and in nearly every instance they are confirmed in their opposition to secret societies. While I greatly wish that this work had been committed to abler hands, I do rejoice in what God has given me to do.

H. H. HINMAN.

OHIO WORK WEATHER-PROOF.

LONDONDERRY, O., Feb. 3, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am now five miles from the railroad in the red mud regions of Guernsey county. "And still it rains," is an expression I have heard several times. I am fortunately, however, in a community friendly to our cause, and am assured that I can stay till spring if I wish. There is only one Mason in town. He is the blacksmith. A colony from Londonderry, Ireland, were among the first settlers, hence the name. The United Presbyterian and Covenant churches have the controlling power, and, I scarcely need add, the saloon and lodge find no foothold. I have visited the following places during the week: Lore City, Cambridge, North Salem, and Antrim. In each of these places I have found friends and readers of our paper.

Rev. J. W. Martin of North Salem, regretted that he could not arrange for lectures among his people. The scarlet fever, was so prevalent that no one would wish to expose themselves by attending. He assured me of his hearty sympathy, and added that he would be pleased to arrange meetings at some future time. He commended the work formerly done by Warren Taylor. It seems some of the former members of this church left and joined the lodge. They then organized as a Presbyterian church and called Father Taylor to be their pastor, evidently not knowing his position on the secrecy question; but every one who does, knows that he would be the last man to please such a church.

Coming to Antrim I stopped over night with James P. Aikin. Mr. A. has been a reader of the Cynosure for about eighteen years and intends to continue to the end. He is pleased with its improvement of late. At Antrim, among others I made the acquaintance of Rev. A. H. Caldwell, pastor of the United Presbyterian church. Rev. C. invited me to occupy his pulpit Sabbath day. I did so, preaching in the morning and presenting the anti-Christian character of the lodge in the evening. Notwithstanding the bad roads there was a good attendance at both services. The Masons were quite angry, as would be expected, and there was a great deal of talk about the stores the following day. I trust good seed was sown.

Some time since the fraternity were called upon to bury one of their most zealous devotees, a man who had spent a great deal of time and money in taking degrees. A number were so ashamed of the performance that they refused to go through the ritual forms. Some rolled up their bibs, others took them off and put them in their pockets. Quite a number broke ranks and would not march to the grave and go through "the foolishness." A great deal of the ritual was omitted and it was a question in the minds of many whether the man ever got safely through to the grand lodge above. He certainly did not get a first class ticket to start.

Leaving a number of new friends and Cynosure readers at Antrim, I came to this place and spoke according to appointment to some 100 people who met in the United Presbyterian church. The people certainly deserve credit for coming out through rain and mud.

I am now with Rev. J. W. Taylor and shall hope to reach Smyrna, three miles from here, to-night. Shall expect a letter there from Rev. W. G. Waddle in reference to meetings at New Athens and vicinity. Any in this part of the State desiring lectures should address me at 214 West Second Ave., Columbus. Letters will be forwarded.

W. B. STODDARD.

THE SEPARATION CRY IN IOWA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The last place at which I lectured in Van Buren county, was Pittsburgh, two miles from the county seat. The Methodist brethren have a church here, and the lecture was announced by some of its leading members, and one of them kindly entertained me. I showed that Masonry was a religious organization, claiming to teach a religion which, if faithfully practiced, will fit men for heaven "by virtue of the purity of its morals, the regenerating character of its ceremonies, and the purifying power of its obligations," when strictly observed.

From Pittsburgh I went to Mt. Sterling; made some calls, but did not lecture there. The next morning I left for Cincinnati in Appanoose county, and called on the one Cynosure subscriber of the town, Mr. Mitchell. An appointment was made for me to lecture that night in the Congregational church. Both the Congregational and M. E. pastors and a good audience were present. The singers sang, and the pastor prayed, after I had read a Scriptural lesson. My description of the Masonic process of regeneration, according to the plan of salvation taught in the religious philosophy of Ancient Craft Masonry, produced a sensation. It was some moments before they recovered their composure so that I could proceed.

The next morning I left Cincinnati, after receiving the benediction of Mrs. Mitchell's father, an aged veteran in the N. C. A. reform, who is now in the border land of the heavenly country, where only the brotherhood in Christ will be gathered. I came on to Allerton in Wayne county. A few more weeks of labor, and then, if the Lord will, I go to Chicago to confer with the Christian reformers who will gather there.

C. F. HAWLEY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A THOROUGH RENUNCIATION.

RIDGEVILLE, Henry Co., O., Feb. 2, 1887.

This may certify that I have been a member of Lodge No. 474, F. A. M., of Williams Co., Ohio. That I left the same for the cause of Christ. And it may further certify that, as a Master Mason, I say the exposition of J. Doesburg is in the most correct to the third degree, and further I cannot say.

Further, I deny the utility of the lodge to build up the cause of Christ. I will further state that as a Master Mason I do not believe the lodges or fraternity intend to live in accordance with their "Ritual of Masonry;" that Masonic law is trampled beneath their feet.

Hence you may add my name to seceder's list and publish this if you wish.

R. V. POTTER.

THE HOLLOW MOCKERY OF LODGE CHARITY.

NEWARK, Ill.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—We wish, through the columns of your valuable paper, to present to your many readers the Christian spirit of the three great virtues of Odd-fellowship, namely, "Friendship, Love and Truth," as exhibited by our lodge here in Newark. We will say nothing about the order, but simply confine our remarks to this one lodge, which is under our immediate observation, whereby we have an opportunity to witness the friendship it has for self; the love it has for money, and the truth it manifests in a court of justice, when solicited to aid a sick and infirm member. This member, to whom we have reference, helped to nurse this lodge in its infancy, and carry it through the ups and downs of its existence during the past thirty years until, like many others, beset by misfortunes and disease, he finds himself at the advanced age of eighty, driven to the painful necessity of applying for assistance from this institution which he has helped to maintain and support, and in which he has deposited a large share of his earnings during the greater half of his life.

But the lodge, turning a deaf ear to his appeals, he finally demands of it the sick benefits as provided in its by-laws, to which a member in his condition is entitled. Not only have these requests been refused, but treated with derision and contempt: and the members of this lodge, in their united and untiring efforts to defeat this claim, find it necessary to pass a law (and the majority must rule) in which they declare that all grievances must be settled within the lodge, if possible, otherwise by appeal to the Grand Lodge; and that all business connected with the affair must be transacted between the two lodges and not with any one member of the subordinate lodge. Thus they effectually lay a foundation for the next step—to blockade every avenue of justice, by removing all means by which the Grand Lodge may become acquainted with the case, or even gain a knowledge of its existence. This appears to be one of the great secrets by which odd-fellows may pass into oblivion unknown to any of the superior lodges. Thus the son may die in poverty and want, without disturbing the peace and quiet of a loving and affectionate father!

Every chance for appeal, and all remedy placed beyond his reach, this complainant as a last resort seeks redress in a court of law, against the trustees of the lodge. What is the result? Why, the defendants, now intrenched behind their breastworks—the law they have made to suit their own fancy, in defiance of civil law—at once raise the question of jurisdiction; and ascertaining that the views of the justice of the peace before whom the suit was instituted are against them in regard to this question, they took a change of venue, and when the case came to trial, made a motion to dismiss on the grounds that the court had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as the claimant had not exhausted his remedy in the lodge; that is, in the activity and strength of his youthful age of eighty years, and resting upon the verge of the grave, he had not been able yet to scale the high walls of defense between him and the Grand Lodge! The motion was sustained by the court, and this, too, right in the face of overwhelming evidence substantiating the above facts: that this complainant had repeatedly applied to the lodge for assistance; that he had made frequent demands that some action be taken by which he might obtain his rights, or at least a hearing; that these persistent efforts had continued over a period of fifteen months only to result in taunts and jeers. What a mockery to the objects they profess—"to visit the sick, relieve the distressed, bury the dead and educate the orphan!" What a libel upon the Christian doctrine they profess—"to improve and elevate the character of man, imbue him with proper conceptions of his capabilities for good, enlighten his mind, enlarge the sphere of his affections, and lead him to a cultivation of the true fraternal relation designed by the great Author of his being!" What a pollution of the motto, "Friendship, Love and Truth!"

Under the mask of friendship, and with words of respect on their lips, they have aimed the most deadly thrusts at the vitals of our Christian doctrines of equality and justice.

A CITIZEN.

CHRIST MUST BE CONFESSED.

CINCINNATI, O., Jan., 28, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—During the past century the church has gained three millions of converts in the foreign field. She has made wonderful progress in the work of missions. But during that time the heathen world has increased three hundred millions. Buddhism or Brahminism have had more converts than Christianity. Dr. Duff said, "The church has only been playing at missions." The fact that enough is spent upon bric-a-brac in the parlors of our Christian homes to place the Bible in the hands of every human being in the world in his own tongue, indicates the justice of the declaration. More brains, more muscle, and more money must be consecrated. The church must arise and put on her strength. But there is a great work to be done at home, which is vital to success in the foreign field. The National Reform Association proposes to have this Christian nation hold up before the world a distinctively Christian government—Christian in its constitution and administration—and the moral influence will be such that the heathen nations will be won to allegiance to the King of kings. "A nation shall be born in a day."

On last Sabbath morning I preached in the Central Presbyterian church, Rev. J. J. Francis, pastor, on the Kingship of Christ. I was struck with the presence of so many young people in the audience. The pastor announced a prayer meeting for them on Thursday evening. He had sent out invitations to all over twelve and under twenty-one, and he had written 207 letters. Bro. Francis expressed deep sympathy with our views on the kingly authority of Christ. He believes in having Christ honored and acknowledged in individual hearts, in the family, in the municipality, in the State, and in the nation. His members were in accord with me.

That evening I preached in the Wesley chapel of the M. E. church, Rev. Thomas H. Pearne, D. D., pastor. This congregation has 650 members, and as many scholars in their Sabbath-school. We had a fine time. Dr. Pearne said, "I would like to exhort for half an hour. I am all on fire. How I would like to flame out on this subject to-night. But our brother has said so much and said it so well, that I must not talk. We are not a nation of drunkards, nor a nation of Brahmins, but a nation of Christians, and the Christian majority has a right to say that God shall rule this nation and his law shall be supreme. It will wrong no one. It is the nation's duty. It is our only safety. Without it our nation will go down." After service a lady in the choir said to me, "I wish to thank you for that sermon. I am sorry that there were not one thousand people here to hear it." A gentleman said, "You opened up a new field to us to-night. I am satisfied it is just what is needed." A working man said, "You spoke encouraging words for laboring men. We are not in sympathy with anarchists. We are not opposed to capitalists. All we ask is wages that are just and right."

On Monday evening I lectured in Peebles. This village is just newly built. It has only been incorporated this winter. The little hall was filled. The United Presbyterians and Methodists will put up churches the coming summer. Mr. Frank B. Davis made arrangements for this meeting.

On Tuesday evening I lectured in the Sinking Springs M. E. church, Rev. Geo. P. Bethel, pastor. This brother has 150 members here. He has three other similar charges to look after. The lecture was well received. Bro. Bethel said he was astonished at the array of facts and their fitness for the hour. The brethren insisted that I return and give them another talk. Mr. J. A. Wickersham, formerly a Covenanter, but now a member of this congregation, opened the way here. He has not forgotten his reformation principles. The home of Deacon Isaac East received me. He came from Virginia forty years ago. His relatives are still in the South. They were mixed up with the Confederacy. His nephew visited him not long since and said, "The South thought that their hard times were caused by the Republican administration; and if they could only get a Democratic President they would get relief. But now they have their wish and times are no better. The South will not be solid for the Democratic party again. Many will vote the Republican ticket hereafter."

On my way I passed near by Serpent Mound. This was built by the Indians. It is in the shape of a snake, its mouth wide open, its fangs discernable, and an egg in front which it is in the act of swallowing. Sinking Springs takes its name from the springs which boil up and then subside, much like the geyser of Yellowstone Park. This is a quiet little village overlooking Fort Hill, an old Indian stronghold. Returning I passed the birthplace of Rev. H. H. George, D. D., president of Geneva College, Beaver Falls, Pa. On Wednesday evening I lectured in the Tranquility United Presbyterian church, Rev. J. A. Renwick, pastor. They have 225 members here, and a large and comfortable house of worship. The roads are very muddy; all had to walk. They came one, two and three miles. We had a real good turn out. On the way over we passed the house formerly occupied by Rev. David Steel, D. D., author of the "Key to the Apocalypse," also the church in which he preached many years ago. We were near the spot on which the church stood in which Rev. Robert Hutchison preached half a century ago to the Covenanters. Not far away the boyhood of Rev. J. O. Bayliss was spent; mine host, Mr. Steel McWright, was his companion at school. On Thursday evening I lectured in the Union Chapel of Youngsville. A great company came out. The people feel that moral reformation is the need of the hour.

Francis Murphy is having great success in the Ninth Street Baptist church in this city. He and the young pastor make a strong team. He wields the heavy sword of Richard which would cut in twain a bar of steel. Bro. Myers wields the scimitar of Saladin, which would clip in under the web of down, whose feathery films floated in the air. The sword of truth ought to be handled by a master hand. The Word "is quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

J. M. FOSTER.

THE SALVATION ARMY AHEAD!

MARYVILLE, Mo., Jan. 31, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—If the Salvation Army is taking the lead in saving a fallen world, is it not our Christian duty to admit it? By listening for the past eight years to false reports concerning them, I have simply let them alone, adhering to the order given in Acts 5: 39. Since last June I have, in their case as well as in other matters, been proving all things, holding fast to that which is good. I will now and here say, so far as I have investigated their cause, I find them at the front in rescuing the perishing of all classes. The Commissioner of the United States forces, having fully learned from me my anxiety to know all about the Army, has invited me to come to New York city to their headquarters, and look them all over, inside and out, through and through. God willing, I will do so as soon as possible, which I expect will be in a few months. Then will give a true and full report in this paper. Those who have known me for forty years in the United States and Canada know full well that I allow no man or class of men to get one inch the start of me in any good work, only in proportion as his legs are longer. As I am a little over six feet high, I will be expected, from the stand I have taken, to be found in the army that is ahead. If the Salvation Army is ahead, we that can keep up will be expected to, and those who cannot must try and get religion enough to admit facts and behave themselves, in keeping with the rule given in 1 Tim. 3: 15. Yours till the general roll is called. Amen. R. SMITH.

WHO WILL BE GOD'S AGENT IN THIS CASE?

NEW IBERIA, La., Jan. 27, 1887.

DEAR EDITOR:—Since my last, published in your issue of the 13th inst., the owner of the property here that the colored people are endeavoring to buy as the site for a high school, has reduced the price from $5,500 to $5,000 on condition that they give $1,250 as first payment instead of $1,000, and he has given them the refusal of it until the 30th of next March.

They have in the treasury a few hundred dollars, but not half the amount required. Still they are going on with courage to raise it by entertainments and subscriptions, though with the small sums that the people are able to give it is slow work. The highest amount paid yet by any one individual is $10; and one woman who gave $10, and who earns it by washing, said she should give another $10 if necessary rather than give it up; and a young woman who helps her widowed mother earn the living for quite a family by washing, wanted to give a dollar towards the school, but found that she could not unless she should do some extra work to get it, and so she went into the cotton field, a thing she had never done before, and picked enough cotton to earn a dollar and gave it to the school. A man who was born in slavery and had no educational advantages, and who is living in a rented house and working by the month for a farmer, bought a piece of land on which he intends to build a house, and so make a home for himself and family, and is paying for it in yearly installments. He has already given $10 towards the school, and says he has decided to pay interest on this year's payment and give the payment, which is $60, to help buy the property for the school.

Surely such efforts as the two first circumstances mentioned, and such a sacrifice as the last one, for such a purpose, are rarely met with, and they will give an idea of the struggle it is taking to accomplish the end they so much desire. But the courage shown and expressions of faith that God will help them, would excite the admiration of any intelligent Christian person.

The old people who were slaves say that they prayed to God to give them their freedom and he did, and they believe he will help them in this good cause. If any who read these lines feel disposed to send money to aid in this noble undertaking, regard it, dear friends, as a suggestion from the Holy Spirit, in answer to the prayers of these needy people, who are laboring so hard to blot out the degrading effects of slavery, and are taking the right method to do so.

S. A. FARLEY.

PITH AND POINT.

THE HARUGARI.

I have to do with a good, earnest, pious Christian who is a member of the Harugari lodge, who, when I spoke to him about the unchristian principles of the secret societies, maintained that this lodge materially differed from the other lodges so far that no religious doctrines of any kind were held and propagated in that lodge, that anything which had to do with religion was absolutely excluded by them; that they had merely business transactions; that they had no religious ceremonies or rites of any kind, no chaplains, no prayers, no teaching of a deistic natural religion; in short, that it was perfectly true of this order, which is so commonly falsely stated by members of secret societies, viz., that their order has nothing to do with religion.

Now since I know that man as a true and sincere Christian I desire closely to investigate into this matter and to examine the writings and publications of this peculiar order of Harugari, in order to find out clearly its tendencies and principles.—G. F., Mendota, Ill.

NOTE.—This German order is classed among the beneficiary societies, that is, it provides a kind of life insurance and perhaps payment of a sick benefit. Of its history or practices we have very little information. If it is devoid of any religious character whatever so as not even to ask the blessing of God upon its meeting, Christian men should beware lest they be unequally yoked together with unbelievers in it. It is at least, we understand, a secret society and, as such is condemned by the example of Christ, and by the whole tenor of the Bible which condemns the sworn concealment of a good, and says that God will bring all hidden evil to light.

WHY NOT EVERY READER BE AN AGENT TO GET ANOTHER?

I do especially commend all seceding Masons in the highest terms possible who had the moral courage and pure-hearted principle to expose the murderous system of Freemasonry, and to endure the persecutions as they must, for the good of mankind. I am exceedingly well pleased with the Cynosure. I hope and pray that every reader of it will labor to increase the subscription list to the full extent of its opportunity. It is calculated to do more general good than any paper in my knowledge. There ought to be some systematic arrangement to scatter tracts and books all over every land, to give the uninformed a knowledge of the evil of secret lodges. If the masses had full information of what Masonry is it would soon die out for the want of accessions. Let every reader of the Cynosure send for tracts, and circulate them as widely as possible and secure as many workers as he can to do the same.—SAMUEL MATTHEW, Canby, Oreg.

THE BLESSING OF THE JUST.

I am sorry we could not send a delegate to the Knoxville convention. Infirmitudes beyond fourscore keep me shut up; but my interest in the war against the lying deism of Masonry increases. There is no paper in this nation that cannot be better spared than the Cynosure. It has done noble work for orthodoxy and has become a spiritual power and is more and more welcomed by warm hearted "living spirits of Christ." It improves every year. The Lord bless you all in your good work. Love to Bro. Stoddard.—GEO. CLARK, Urbana, Ohio.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON VIII.—February 20.—Abraham Pleading for Sodom.—Gen. 18: 23-33.

GOLDEN TEXT.—In wrath remember mercy.—Hab. 3: 2.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

From Peloubet's Notes.

The Angel of the Lord. The special form in which God manifested himself to man, and hence Christ's visible form before the incarnation.—Smith-Peloubet Bib. Dic. There are many passages in which the expression "the angel of God," "the angel of Jehovah," is certainly used for the manifestation of God himself. This may be seen at once by a comparison of Gen. 22: 11 with 12, and of Ex. 3: 2 with 6, where he who is called the "angel of God" in one verse, is called God, and even Jehovah in those that follow, and accepts the worship due to God alone. (Compare Acts 7: 30-35 with the corresponding Old Testament history, and Gen. 18: 1, 13, 14, 33, and 19: 1.)

It is to be observed that side by side with these expressions, we read of God's being manifested in the form of man; e. g., to Abraham at Mamre (Gen. 18: 2, 22; comp. 19: 1); to Jacob at Peniel (Gen. 32: 24, 30); to Joshua at Gilgal (Jos. 5: 13, 15). It is hardly to be doubted that both sets of passages refer to the same kind of manifestation of divine presence. The inevitable inference is that by the "angel of the Lord," in such passages is meant "He who is from the beginning," "the Word," i. e., the Manifestor or Revealer of God. These appearances are evidently foreshadowings of the incarnation.—McIntock and Strong's Cye.

Be given to Hospitality. Twice the Apostle Paul uses the phrase (Rom. 12: 10; 1 Tim. 3: 2); and the Epistle to the Hebrews (13: 2) enforces the duty by this example of Abraham, "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares" (Heb. 13: 2).

"And Abraham drew near," to the Lord, in human form, who was standing near (v. 22). He must in some way have recognized him as God, perhaps by his way of speaking. Abraham had this privilege because of his life and character (v. 19). It was one of the rewards and fruits of his choice of God, his obedience and faith. It is only the prayer of "the righteous man that availeth much in its working" (Jas. 5:16).—P.

Other Scripture Examples. Moses (Ex. 32:7-14, 30-35) Samuel (1 Sam. 7:3-10); Solomon (2 Chron. 6:1-42); Elijah (James 5:17-20).

"Will thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked?" It cannot be questioned that in those judgments which befall communities in the ordinary course of God's providence, the good and the bad are often alike involved. The calamities of war, pestilence, earthquakes, etc., fall upon the righteous as well as the wicked.—Bush. And yet more certain than the sun in its course is the justice and righteousness of God in all he does.

God cares for each individual, and even in a general destruction will let nothing happen to any one unjustly, or not for his good (Rom. 8:28.)

Often the righteous are partakers of the guilt. They have become contaminated. They have not done their duty in seeking to make their city or their country better and hence are in a measure to blame for the terrible condition of affairs.

"We are to look forward to another world for a complete vindication of the ways of Providence. There the sufferings of the righteous in this world will be abundantly compensated," and all things will be seen to have worked together for their good.

"Shall not the Judge of all the earth," he will rule the earth, decides questions of right and wrong, and metes out rewards and punishments, "do right?" The very question itself is a tribute to the righteousness of God. In many things God has transcended the reason of his creatures, in nearly all things he has baffled their speculations; but in all instances he has been careful not to excite controversy against himself in the human conscience.—Jos. Parker.

"If I find in Sodom fifty righteous, I will spare all the place for their sakes." Thus the wicked unconsciously are ever receiving benefit from the righteous. Who can tell how many guilty nations have been suffered to live for the sake of a few godly souls among them?—Murphy. Here we see a great principle in the government of God. We are sparing others or are being spared for their sakes. It may be your little child that is keeping the cloud of wrath from bursting upon your wicked house. The righteous man has to suffer many disadvantages on account of the presence of the wicked, whereas the wicked man receives nothing but advantages from the presence of the man who is good. And in proportion as any man is good, he is willing to suffer disadvantage and loss rather than judgment should come upon the wicked. God himself suffers most.—Jos. Parker.

PRACTICAL.

Angels are God's ministering spirits sent to minister to those who are heirs of salvation.

God gives to each age premonitions and foregleams of the better things to come. God came in the form of man, for brief visits, before the great incarnation in Jesus Christ.

The privilege and duty of kind treatment of strangers. The seeming men proved to be angels with hands full of blessings.

God cannot let sin go unpunished. Moral cancers and gangrene will destroy the whole body unless they are removed.

If the sinner can be cured, if anything will induce him to forsake his sin, then he will be spared.

It is a great and high privilege to intercede for others, even for our enemies.

Only the "prayers of the righteous avail much in its working."

We all need an intercessor, even Jesus Christ the righteous.

The righteous are the salt of the earth; the heaven of good through which God may purify and save the world from wickedness.

When this salt retains its savor, and the heaven its active power, then God can spare the wicked for their sakes, because there is then hope.

If the salt has lost its savor, and the heaven is inactive; if the righteous are partakers of the sin by contamination or by not doing all they can to make the world good, then they must suffer in a measure with the overthrow of the wicked.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. LUCY CHAPEL DUDLEY was born on the 22d of January, 1803, in Bennington, Vt. She was left motherless at the age of two years, but was reared by a relative. In 1826 she was married to James Dudley in Eldridge, N. Y. In 1830 she made a profession of religion and was baptized by Elder John Tolman, Sr., and united with the Baptist church in Cato, Cayuga county, to which she had previously removed. In 1843 she came with her husband to Delavan, Wisconsin, and settled on a new farm near this village. Here she found a home in the church, then under the pastoral care of Elder J. H. Dudley of blessed memory.

Mrs. Dudley was a woman of marked convictions, and those convictions were generally right on all moral questions. She was a pioneer in the cause of temperance, moral reform, anti-slavery and anti-(sworn) secrecy. In fact she possessed a ready sympathy for the oppressed and friendless, and that sympathy did not end with "Be ye warm, be ye clothed." It was carried into practical demonstration. So that it was a common remark, "If any outcast wants a friend or home, let him go to Aunt Lucy,"—as she was familiarly called. As an investigator, few surpassed her in penetration and research, often surprising the members of the Bible-class, even at the age of four-score, by the vigor of her pen in illuminating passages of Scripture and doctrinal truth. She was literally ripe for the harvest, being a few hours over 84 years old. By her request, the funeral exercises were conducted by the writer preaching from the language of Job 7:16: "I would not live away." H.

RELATION OF MASONRY TO THE REBELLION.

"For there is nothing hid which shall not be manifested; neither was anything kept secret but that it should come abroad."—Mark 4: 22.

We call our readers special and profound attention to ex-Senator Pomeroy's articles in this and ensuing numbers of the Cynosure. A State Historical Society has applied for these articles in book form, and individuals are asking for them in back numbers. Those who have Greeley's "Great Rebellion" will do well to turn to page 345, Vol. I., and read extracts from the speeches of Parker, Inglis, Rhett, and Keitts on secession in the South Carolina Secession Convention, Dec. 17, 1860. Mr. Parker said, "It is no spasmodic effort that has come suddenly upon us. It has been gradually culminating for a long period of thirty years."

Mr. Inglis said, "Most of us have had this matter under consideration for the last twenty years."

Keitts: "I have been engaged in this movement ever since I entered public life."

Rhett: "It has been gathering head for thirty years."

But the Knights of the Golden Circle, Blue lodges of Missouri, Kuklux, and other side secret orders were then just sprung, or springing up, and Gen. Howard informed the writer that the most cruel and savage of them all kept their robes and masks in the Masonic lodge rooms. All the new named secret leagues sprung up as the rebellion opened. But thirty years before, Gen. Jackson and his Cabinet were made honorary members of Federal Lodge, No. 1, at the very time when Parker and Rhett say secession was "under consideration." And the gentleman who was secretary of that lodge at the time, and aided in initiating "Pike's Indians," told the writer that the ten lodges in the District "all went secessh," and that it was for that reason he left them. Here, then, in the lodge rooms of the South is the place where the rebellion was hatched and nurtured for thirty years. And as ex-Senator Pomeroy says, "If there had been no lodges there had been no rebellion."

But the most ghastly and horrible showing of the Masonic lodge is, that their head man, the rebel general Pike, took ($250,000) two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, appropriated by Congress to the Indians, brought some fifty of their leading men to Washington, swore them to obedience in Federal lodge, fought them at Pea Ridge, Arkansas, against the country which fed, and the flag that sheltered them; and having robbed five tribes of civilized Indians of their school fund, and money for bread, clothing, and interest on money due for their lands, he now sees those poor, demoralized Indians pleading in the Court of Claims for the very money which he, Albert Pike, took by fraud and kept for his own uses, or spent in the rebellion. The record of Benedict Arnold is white compared with this compound of treason, cruelty, and fraud; which every Mason in the United States sanctions and endorses by adhering to the lodge.

Let ex-Senator Pomeroy's book be circulated broad-cast. Let it be placed in the library of every school district in the United States; and when the Christian voters of the United States see clearly that their temporal and eternal interests are hourly liable to be wrecked by the lodge, they will arise and shake it off.

THE SUN RISES IN THE SOUTH.

A friend writes, "There ought to be ten thousand dollars raised and expended in the South." Prof. Woodsmall, traveling teacher of theology for 800,000 colored Baptists in the Southern States, under the appointment and direction of the National Baptist Board at New York, has warmly urged the same thing for one or two years. A Presbyterian missionary in Arkansas wishes to give up his connection with his Board, who expect him to work without excluding lodge worshippers from their churches. He sees such labor will prove nugatory, as the proslavery gospel run down Southern society to the bowie-knife and pistol—mere violence. It would seem that the National Congress of Churches and Christians has been delayed for a year or two, "by act of God," to come in at such an hour and for such a purpose as this. The careful reader of our letters from the South, especially Mr. Hinman's, sees that the schools of the different denominations are open and opening to the discussion of secret societies; and if the book which the National Congress produces shall develop and unify the opposition to the lodges which actually exists, all the denominations which hold to Christ, and all their mission boards will become one vast "National Christian Association;" and anti-Christ must fall, as Burgoyne and Cornwallis fell, whose batteries were briskly assailed after, like the lodges, they were silent and returned no fire.

A brilliant young clergyman, graduate of Fisk University and Oberlin Seminary, deceived by the silent neutrality of leading men in the churches, supposed the denouncers and seceders were "cranks," and so was hoodwinked and stripped and sworn into a Southern lodge, and swindled out of his money. When he found the "cranks" had told him nought but sober truth, his indignation knew no bounds. He denounced the Grand Master of colored Masons as a swindler and thief—selling secrets which are not secrets, and taking money by hundreds for knowledge which can be had for pence. He demanded his initiation money, and when the Masons growled, bristled up and showed fight, he took a shot-gun, an argument which they could understand, and he got his money back! Secretists are cowards and sneak-thieves. They murdered Lincoln and attempted to murder the Swards, father and son. They shot and wounded Countee, and they may kill this brilliant and talented young clergyman, who threatened to answer shot by shot.

Mr. Leonard Swett may save the necks of the men who killed seven and wounded sixty Chicago policemen, and for a time weaken government. If those men are not hung, every Chicago policeman will feel weak and insecure. But the race of Cromwell's Iron-sides are not all dead, and by and by Powderly's Knights will get back to them; and the scenes of the barricades in Paris, when Napoleon commanded the troops, will be re-enacted, aggravated ten thousand-fold. But men who blow up and burn cities with dynamite will lie as cold the following winter as those whom their crimes have made homeless; and crime owns no ambulances or forts of its own. Every great and good cause must have its martyrs. But the blood and bones of the dead on the field of Waterloo made the wheat grow greener for succeeding generations.

But our weapons are not carnal. Christ is the one martyr who has died for us all. And Truth is now "mightily through God to the pulling down of these strongholds of Satan," (all) of them. Let the approaching "Congress" come together "filled" with God's "Spirit" and covered with God's armor. "The whole armor of God." Let them send men all through the South who count not their lives dear, and we shall not need to wait, like worldling Jews, for a Messiah to come. The first we shall know he will be in our midst.

WHO IS AN INFIDEL?

"The public at large," says the Saratoga Eagle, "including many of his most intimate friends, are immensely ignorant of Lincoln's piety; and Gerrit Smith, although an orthodox Christian in his early days, was a Liberal in his later life. These great men, however, cannot intelligibly be called infidels until just what is meant by infidelity is clearly defined. What one person would consider the loftiest Christianity another would denounce as the rankest infidelity. The great men in question were undoubtedly unorthodox, but we believe they all cherished a belief in the immortality of the soul and its progressive future."

The religious belief of the writer of the above seems emaciated to what he commends—"the immortality of the soul and its progressive future," but is evidently not yet forsaken of God and goodness, like the common herd of free lovers and scoffers whose Bible is a medium and their religion destitute of any authoritative standard of law or morals: who are reformers without a Decalogue, and Christians without Christ.

Washington communed in the church, and on the eve of a battle was found praying in the brush. Lincoln asked his pious neighbors to pray for him as he left his home for Washington, and he prayed to God from his knees, as did Paul and Christ, when his country's life was threatened. Gerrit Smith built a church in which he preached Christ, and we have often joined with him in his devout prayers. We are sorry if our "intimate friends" are ignorant of the piety of these great men. True, "blindness in part" had happened to God's Israel as in Paul's day, and bitterly has the country answered it. But while Thomwell and Palmer were the high priests of the slavery rebellion; while Garrison taught and practiced the doctrine that it was sin to vote; while weak Christians, ensnared by "the compromises of the Constitution," misled by worldly and corrupt leaders; and repelled by the no-government, no-Sabbath and no-Bible theories of Garrison, Parker, Henry C. and Elizur Wright, Allen, Ichabod Coddington, Burleigh, Oliver Johnson, and other miscalled "great men,"—while they perhaps staggered off the platform of righteousness and hugged slavery in their communions for a time; in their darkest hours the American churches had more light and truth and goodness in them than the best groups of "come-outers" who denounced slaveholders, railed at the churches, and declared the American Constitution to be "a league with hell." At this day all the literature of infidel and semi-infidel Abolitionists, boiled down and systematized, would not make one respectable volume fit for family reading. While those reformers who, "concerning the faith made shipwreck," have bred those maggots of piety, free lovers, communists, and worshippers of familiar spirits, who, in summer time, hold great grove meetings, and in winter gather in town halls, "gape and rub the elbow" at mediumistic lectures and revelations; prey on the garbage of weak and worldly churches; and fill New England with the buzzing of their new found beings.

"An infidel" is tersely defined by Paul, 2 Cor. 6: 14-16. He is one who manufactures his own gods, who worships idols, who sets aside Christ and the Bible on which the United States officers swear witnesses, and get piece-meal revelations from those

"Millions of spiritual creatures (who) walk the earth Unseen, both when we wake and when we sleep," and who are forbidden to be consulted, worshipped, or dealt with. "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only," is the mandate of Christ. "Is it not because there is no God in Israel that ye will inquire of gods that come newly up: whom your fathers feared not." There is one God and one Medium or Mediator, the man Christ Jesus, who declared himself one with God, and was God. He was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, believed on in the world and received up into glory: whence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead. He exercised divine power on earth, and not only spake, but was the truth. And the belief "in the immortality of the soul and its progressive future," which is as good for Judas Iscariot as for the Apostle Paul, is indeed a "liberal belief," corresponding with the road which Christ said was "broad."

—Thousands will see the notice of the national conference in this city March 30th and 31st with a throb of joy. Friends are writing from far East and West, expecting to attend, and eager for the final word of appointment.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold writes of a great success at his Tonic meetings. The Congregational church was crowded night after night last week, at times uncomfortably, and some were present who are never known to go to that church because it excludes the lodge.

—The Sandy Lake News, will please receive our cordial thanks for its able and efficient help in every good work. One hundred such prints in the United States would lay a platform on which the friends of Christian and foes of heathen civilization could stand and overturn lodgery, as the Republican party stood on the anti-slavery organizations to snatch popular government from the gulf which yawned for it.

—Bro. Hinmon seldom writes a letter which does not surprise us to note how many hopeful openings for the reform he everywhere finds in the South. In one North Carolina city he found a colored Presbyterian minister who heard him lecture in Howard University, Washington, five years ago, and was made an Anti-mason. He holds fast to that good faith yet.

—Rev. J. A. Booker of Helena, Arkansas, missionary among the churches of that State, asks for the Cynosure to be sent to some of the leading preachers of the State. He believes that his efforts as a missionary will be thus "greatly aided," as "saloons and lodges are making havoc of the churches." Would that the Presbyterian Board for Freedmen's Missions might look at this question in the same reasonable manner in the case of Bro. Lewis Johnson.

—The Associate Presbyterian magazine, organ of the church of the same name, takes a lively interest in the national Christian conference, publishing the notice heretofore appearing, and saying: "It is to be hoped that good work will be done at the conference, and that it will be the beginning of a new era of vigorous aggression against oath-bound secrecy. The anti-republican, anti-Christian principles of the lodge should receive such an airing that honest, respectable, Christian citizens would be ashamed to have fellowship with the works of darkness. Some one or more of our brethren nearest Chicago—for instance Rev. W. Ballantine, or Prof. G. Fisher, or Rev. R. E. Stewart—might find it convenient to attend the conference. Here is an opportunity for co-operation in work that calls for the influence and energy of all the churches." These brethren will be most welcome.

—The Genevan, the college paper of President George's students, remarks on the activity of their faculty for Christ and his kingdom, thus: "It seems that Geneva's holidays are hard on secrecy, Anti-National Reform, Anti-Temperance, Anti-Christianity, in fact, every anti that opposes reform. For then our president advances on Tennessee, Martin on Ohio, Burnett on Pennsylvania, so that things become interesting all around."

—A faithful brother writes that at the last meeting of a Congregational Association in New York there was proof that it was grievously falling away from its early opposition to Masonry and other sins, so that now not a sin was rebuked during the whole proceedings. On the contrary a 33-degree Mason was the principal in administering the sacrament. Another Mason led a prayer and conference meeting; and to close there was delivered what we fear the old prophet would call a "dumb-dog's" discourse on the Bride of Christ to a body that had departed from her purity and shorn her of her beauty and strength.

—Bro. Hawley's report is somewhat brief this week, but that proves nothing against its goodness. Of this quality the Birmingham Free Press says: "Rev. C. F. Hawley, completed his work in this county last Wednesday, for the present, by a lecture at Pittsburg, where he had a crowded house, as he had also at Kilbourne a few evenings before. There has not, within the recollection of the oldest Antimason, been as thorough work done in this county for anti-secrecy as has been done for the past month by Bro. Hawley. The ground had been prepared, but outside of Birmingham no vigorous work had been done. But this work only opens out new and larger fields. This part of the State has done its share, for its contribution approaches nearly two hundred dollars for the year. This money has been raised only by great self-denial. Let us begin to prepare for the annual meeting now, and let this State press forward in the good work."

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS OF CHURCHES AND CHRISTIANS.

FINAL ACTION.

In view of the history of secret societies in this and other lands, and the present state of our country, brought about and managed by secret orders, and the further fact that over twelve hundred clergymen and other influential Christian men, representatives of a public sentiment on this subject, have signed a request to Joseph Cook, asking that the secret lodge system be discussed in the Boston Lecture Course, and in harmony with the action of the National Christian Association, the United Brethren, the Wesleyans and Free Methodists, the Reformed and United Presbyterians, Lutheran Synods and Councils, and other ecclesiastical bodies, and in compliance with the expressed wish of Dr. McCosh, Dr. Talmage, Dr. Storrs, and others whose names are omitted for brevity, it was voted to hold a National Christian Congress, and the following gentlemen were chosen a committee, with power to increase their number, issue an official call, and make all necessary arrangements for a Congress of Churches and Christians.

COMMITTEE.

CALVIN W. PRITCHARD, Editor Christian Worker and Friends' Review.

REV. JOSEPH E. ROY, Western Secretary of the American Missionary Association.

REV. B. T. ROBERTS, Editor Earnest Christian and the Free Methodist.

REV. M. C. RANSEN, Pastor of Gethsemane Swedish Lutheran Church.

REV. L. N. STRATTON, President of Wesleyan Theological Seminary.

J. M. HITCHCOCK, Superintendent Chicago Avenue Sabbath-school.

OFFICIAL CALL.

Pursuant to instructions, and in humble reliance upon Almighty God for wisdom, and upon the Christian patriotism of our fellow citizens for co-operation and support, we have secured Hershey Music Hall Chicago, Ill., and hereby announce that a Congress of Churches and Christians will assemble at 9:30, A. M., on the 30th day of March, 1887, and continue its sessions two days and evenings, to consider the nature and principles of the secret lodge system and its influence on the Christian religion and civil liberty, and to take what steps may seem proper, after prayer and due consideration.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The committee have learned with satisfaction of the action of several sympathizing bodies in appointing representatives, and are in receipt of the names of over fifty delegates already chosen.

Every Conference, Presbytery, Association, Council, Church, Educational Institution, or other body favoring this Congress, is respectfully urged to at once provide for a representation in its meeting. Let the names of delegates appointed, or who shall be chosen, and the names of all persons intending to be present be forwarded at once to Rev. L. N. Stratton, West Division postoffice, Chicago, Ill., so that entertainment may be provided for those who desire, and a roll of members begun.

L. N. STRATTON, Secretary.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

So many unfounded reports of Cabinet changes have found their way to Washington from a distance during the present Administration that people have not been disposed to credit any rumor on this subject. Everyone, therefore, seems to have been surprised when it was announced that there was really to be a change in the Cabinet soon. But now it is generally believed that Secretary Manning intends to leave the Treasury Department after the adjournment of Congress, to accept the presidency of the new National Bank of New York, at a salary of $20,000, more than twice what he gets as a member of the Cabinet. There has been much speculation during the past few days as to his probable successor, and as to whether his resignation has anything to do with unpleasantness between him and the President.

Mrs. Cleveland is perhaps as popular a lady in her way as Mrs. Hayes, but she has not the "power behind the throne" wielded so firmly by her whom the W. C. T. U. women delighted to honor. The intemperate reaction in the White House during the Arthur rule from the high social principles of Mrs. Hayes were the grief of good women. They are rejoicing therefore to note the effort of the young American queen to put away the alcohol poison however glowing its color or tempting its taste. Mrs. Cleveland gave an elegant lunch the other day to sixty young ladies of Washington without wine, and has resolved to rule out the brandy and other forms of alcohol from the kitchen of the White House.

It was a rattling and spirited Woman's Suffrage convention at this favorite rallying point, this, their nineteenth annual meeting here. Miss Anthony says it was one of the most successful they have ever had. The meetings were largely attended and the speaking was the best that the ladies could do. They were much pleased at the good attendance, and compared the overflowing audiences of this winter with the empty benches which they addressed in years gone by, saying it was now almost the fashionable thing to do to go to the Woman's Rights convention. They have planned a great celebration for next winter, in honor of the fortieth anniversary of the beginning of their movement in this country. Forty years ago Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, at a meeting in Seneca Falls, N. Y., introduced the first resolution favoring the franchise of woman. She is billed for a speech on the same subject at the anniversary celebration, although her husband is quoted as saying not long since that she was done with the suffrage agitation. Mr. Stanton said that his wife was convinced that her sex does not want to vote. They do not suffer any inconvenience from the lack of the ballot; they do not desire it to any appreciable extent; and the suffrage agitators are banging away at something that offers no response whatever. He thought if one woman in every ten, yes, in every hundred, would petition Congress for the ballot they would get it at once.

The issue between the President and the Senate in regard to the Recorder of Deeds is very simple, and cannot, in its present phase, be distorted into a question involving the right of a colored Democrat to hold office, as has been attempted. The people of the District asked for one of their own men for the office. The President served them with a stranger, and the Senate refused to confirm the appointment. The President re-appointed him, and the Senate again rejected him. That is all there is of it: and until the name of a colored citizen of the District is sent in for the office by the President and rejected by the Senate, it cannot honestly be claimed that the color line issue is a factor in the case. *

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

FATHER ROCHE'S HOME FOR WORKING BOYS.

It is indisputably true that when certain people do manage to do a good thing they inevitably spoil it. Although Father Roche's Home for Working Boys is pre-eminently a religious institution, or, at least, is under the supervision of the Romish church, much of the funds for the erection of the new building on Bennett street were raised by worldly methods, i. e., balls, etc., a sort of compromise twist religion and antagonistic secularism, but in perfect accord, nevertheless, with the Jesuitical doctrine, of the end justifying the means. Just here, however, Catholics are more consistent than their Protestant imitators, who profess differently, yet do the same thing. Passing down the narrow street on the western boundary of the South Cove, where this institution is located, on a Sabbath evening, one's attention is at once attracted to the clamorous sounds wafted from the interior of this pet charitable domicile, dear to every loyal Romanist's heart, as the fond admiration with which they survey it as they pass indicates.

Just above the main entrance, in bold relief, stands a gorgeously colored figure of the Madonna and child. The features of this truly pure, but sadly misrepresented mother of our Lord's humanity (by Rome), are well defined, as are also those of the child, and although idolatrous symbols, the peaceful expression of each are in perfect harmony with the character of the day; but what a contrast with the childhood represented below—down below the sidewalk, where a scene of veritable pandemonium runs riot—and on Sunday night, under the surveillance of a Christian management. On any other day one could enter heartily into the seemingly unrestrained and exuberant expression of juvenile levity and grotesque antics, but the toleration of such downright desecration of the Sabbath is a disgrace to even the denomination which it may represent, no matter how philanthropic its purpose be. To provide shelter for homeless boys is a noble work, but the very apparent laxity of their would-be benefactors in leaving them supremely to their own inclinations in regard to the observance of the day is open to censure. Father Roche is, doubtless, a sincere man, and devoted to this special work, in which he has been long and persistently engaged, and every Protestant can hardly do otherwise (unless a bigot) than to endorse what seems to be the revered gentleman's life work; but to secure and retain the good wishes of both Protestant and Catholic, the unrestrained hilarity witnessed in the basement of his Home, which can be termed as nothing less than desecration of God's holy day, must be checked.

SAM SMALL IN BOSTON.

Sam Small is an interesting and earnest speaker, fluent in utterance, surprising, or rather perplexing his audiences at intervals with multifarious polysyllables of such indefinite magnitude that the expediency of taking along an unabridged dictionary, and universal encyclopaedia, as well as a Teacher's Bible and the "Great Awakening Songster," is inevitably suggested.

Samuel Small, judging from first impressions made by his apparent makeup, would easily be mistaken for the conventional "Hub" preacher. His flowery passages, and rhetorical climaxes, show careful and systematic cutting, and thorough kiln-drying. Perhaps we do not speak at random in saying that most of the Bostonians were disappointed in Bro. Small, having expected to behold Bro. Jones's counterpart. In Sam Small we have only a newly-published edition, or photo-electrotyped version of the popular, well-informed, level-headed minister of the day—nothing more nor less. Boston is well supplied with fac-simile type. In Sam Jones, on the contrary, we have a tangent from the great homotoneous ecclesiastical circle. Sam Jones is simply the inimitable and naturally copyrighted Sam Jones, and Athens will listen to his so-called vulgarisms, in spite of its aesthetic proclivities, until a greater or later attraction appears in the Areopagus. Admitting that Sam Small is the more highly polished gem of the two, we also deny that he is the rarest and most valuable. Sam Jones is a diamond in the rough. Nature's lapidary has made crude cuttings in him from which brilliant and dazzling rays of logic, common sense, and inspiration flash incessantly.

While the so-called illiterate Sam Jones attacks sin in the midst of reputed culture at the South End, the cultured Rev. Phillips Brooks, D. D., etc., will lay siege to the sin of the illiterate North End. Whilst Jones will aim to bring 'em down, Brooks will endeavor to lift 'em up. The right men in the right places. A change is beneficial sometimes.

D. P. MATHEWS.

THE HOME.

A MOTHER'S LOVE.

Some day,
When others braid your thick brown hair,
And drape your form with modest grace,
When others call you "dear" and "fair,"
And hold your hand and kiss your face,
You'll not forget that far above
All others is a mother's love.

Some day,
When you must feel love's heavy loss,
You will remember other years,
When I, too, bent beneath the cross,
And mixed my memory with thy tears,
In such dark hours be not afraid;
Within their shadows I have prayed.

Some day,
A flower, a song, a word may be
A link between us, strong and sweet;
And then, dear child, remember me!
And let your heart to mother's beat.
My love is with you everywhere,
You cannot get beyond my prayer.

Some day,
At longest it cannot be long—
I shall with glad impatience wait,
Amid the glory and the song,
For you before the golden gate,
After earth's parting and earth's pain
Never to part! never again!

THE MOTHER AT HOME.

The mother is the heart of the home. She it is who determines its characteristics and diffuses through it that subtle atmosphere which every sensitive person can feel when introduced into the home circle, and from which can quickly be inferred the ruling spirit of the home.

There can be no doubt that the most effective training for children is the training of example, and this truth the mother needs constantly to bear in mind. How can the impatient, querulous, fault-finding mother teach patience and kindness and good temper? How can the vain mother teach humility? How can the mother greatly absorbed in keeping up with the pomps and vanities of life, eager for place and show, teach her children the true principles of a happy life? How can the selfish mother teach generosity or kindness, or the discontented mother teach contentment?

Children, with all their beautiful and loving ways, are for the first few years of their lives mainly little animals, and attending to their material needs fills up the mother's time and exhausts her vitality. Keeping them out of mischief absorbs so much of her time that she seems to have little for moral and religious instruction. If the mother allows herself to become discouraged at this period in her home work; to look with longing toward the pursuits and opportunities of the women who have no home cares; if she under-estimate the honor and value of her work, circumscribed though it appear, she is in danger of undermining her own comfort and happiness, and consequently the comfort and happiness of the home.

She should strengthen her heart by remembering that these confining home duties and cares occupy only a passing period in her life. What if she have not the uninterrupted time she wishes for accomplishing her own plans, for study, or reading, or practice, or society? She is studying the volume of universal human experience. She is learning the joys and sorrows of the mothers of the human race; she is practicing an art—incomparably the highest of all arts—the moulding of human character, and she must give herself to these duties with an eye single to their right performance, and with a love for and devotion to the work which will make her happy in it. And if the mother thus loves and honors her work, she will make the atmosphere of the home a happy one under all ordinary circumstances.

Children who from their earliest recollection remember their mother as kind and patient and devoted to their best interests—happy in spending and being spent for them—will inevitably feel the influence. The many beautiful instances related of great men who have risen from the humblest homes, and of their steadfast devotion to and affection for their faithful, though often unlettered mothers, are rich with instruction and encouragement for all mothers. In every case such mothers will be found to have held their children's love by their unselfish devotion to and great love for their children, and the respect they compelled by their elevated moral and religious character. How beautiful to hear grown children, who have perhaps gotten far along the road of life themselves, say that, as in early childhood, so in mature years, their mothers are their best, most faithful friends, and their most consoling and helpful counsellors?

Poverty and privation strengthen rather than weaken such bonds between mother and children. "We were poorer than poverty," said a now wealthy business man, talking of his early life, "but it never seemed to us children that we were poor, because our mother always seemed happy with us. She was constantly planning some little pleasure for us that was all our own, and we thought we had the nicest time at home of any children we knew. It was making us little rabbits or birds out of bread dough, or some molasses candy, or turnover pies in fruit season, or some little thing to give us pleasure and show how she thought of us continually. Then she was always encouraging us to hope for better days, and always hopeful herself for the great things her children were going to do for her when they grew up to be good and useful men. We went to school barefoot and carried with us our dinners, often only corn bread and molasses, but it was always wrapped up in a clean white bit of cloth, so that it might look attractive; and one of the most touching recollections of my childhood is of seeing my dear mother patiently washing and ironing those bits of white cloth for our school lunches." And when the mother in after years was suddenly stricken with a fatal sickness, a special train, chartered with instantaneous haste, took two of those stalwart sons, with all the dispatch that money and influence could buy, to that mother's bedside in time to receive her parting words of love and blessing and witness her dying smile.

Such a place, such a kingdom in the hearts of her children, it is worth any mother's toil and care and weariness to win.—Mrs. Helen E. Starrett in the Interior.

MOTHER AND CHILDREN.

With children you must mix gentleness with firmness. "A man who is learning to play on a trumpet, and a petted child, are two very disagreeable companions." If a mother never has headaches through rebuking her little children, she shall have plenty of heartaches when they grow up.

At the same time a mother should not hamper her child with unnecessary, foolish restrictions. It is a great mistake to fancy that your boy is made of glass, and to be always telling him not to do this, and not to do that, for fear of his breaking himself. On the principle never to give pain unless it is to prevent a greater pain, you should grant every request which is at all reasonable, and let him see that your denial of a thing is for his own good, and not simply to save trouble; but once having duly settled a thing, hold to it. Unless a child learns from the first that his mother's yea is yea, and her nay nay, it will get into the habit of whining and endeavoring to coax her out of her refusal, and her authority will soon be gone.

Happiness is the natural condition of every normal child; and if the small boy or girl has a peculiar facility for any one thing it is for self-entertainment—with certain granted conditions, of course. One of these is physical freedom, and a few rude and simple playthings. Agreeable occupation is as great a necessity for children as for adults, and beyond this almost nothing can be contributed to the real happiness of a child.

"I try so hard to make my children happy!" said a mother, with a sigh, one day, in despair at her efforts. "Stop trying," exclaimed a practical friend at her elbow, "and do as a neighbor of mine does." "And how is that?" she asked, dolefully. "Why, she simply lets her children grow and develop naturally, only directing their growth properly. She has always thrown them, as far as practical, upon their own resources, taught them to wait upon themselves, no matter how many servants she had, and to construct their own playthings. When she returns home from an absence, they await but one thing—their mother's kiss. Nothing exciting is allowed to them at night, and they go to bed and to sleep in a wholesome mental state that insures restful slumber. They are taught to love nature, that there is nothing so mean as a lie, nor anything so miserable as disobedience, that good health, good teeth, and good temper come from plain food, plenty of sleep, and being good.—The Quiver for January.

AN APPEAL TO WIVES AND MOTHERS.

The instances recorded in the Bible of wives rejoicing at the prospect of approaching motherhood are strikingly numerous, in fact if there is on record in this book one instance to the contrary, we have failed to discover it. Do the wives of the present day as a rule welcome such prospects? Some think they have no cause for rejoicing at the prospect of increased burdens when already their strength of endurance is taxed to its utmost capacity. No doubt the latter is true of many, but, may I be permitted to quote a very old-fashioned saying, "Things are never so bad but they might be worse," and the surest way to make this thing worse is repining and rebelling against it, while, on the other hand, let surrounding circumstances be ever so gloomy, and reactions ever so sore and numerous, nothing will so surely lighten the burdens of maternity for the present and bring joy in the future as the maintenance of self-control, cheerfulness and resignation. The expectant mother, in practicing these and other noble qualities of mind and heart bestows upon her unborn offspring the blessed heritage of their possession. Her very distresses, just think of it, her very distresses are turned into blessings unspeakable, not only to her but to her children, inasmuch as they afford her an opportunity of exercising those traits of character which every mother desires her offspring to possess, and, inasmuch as in exercising these virtues she transmits them. But the same is true of undesirable traits of character. The mother who surrenders her self-control, nurses her grief and regards no will but her own, not only lays up for herself a fearful harvest of burdens and sorrows, but stamps her precious charge with these unlovely characteristics which will all through life prove to him a "thorn in the flesh." Oh, wearying, grieving mothers and disappointed wives, awaken to the glorious possibilities within reach of you all. Do not abuse your sorrows but use them as all things should be used, to the glory of God. It will cost you nothing and it may prove a great gain.—People's Tabernacle.

A MOTHER'S CARES.

I do not think that I could bear
My daily weight of woman's care,
If it were not for this—
That Jesus seemeth always near,
Unseen, but whispering in my ear
Some tender words of love or cheer,
To fill my heart with bliss!

There are so many trivial cares
That no one knows and no one shares,
Too small for me to tell;
Things e'en my husband can not see,
Nor his dear love uplift from me—
Each hour's unnamed perplexity,
That mothers know so well!

The failure of some household scheme,
The ending of some pleasant dream,
Deep hidden in my breast;
The weariness of childhood's noise,
The yearning for that subtle poise
That turneth duty into joys,
And giveth inner rest.

These secret things, however small,
Are known to Jesus, each and all,
And this thought brings me peace.
I do not need to say one word;
He knows what thought my heart hath stirred,
And, by divine caress, my Lord
Makes all its throbbings cease.

And then, upon his loving breast,
My weary head is laid to rest
In speechless ecstasy!
Until it seemeth all in vain
That care, fatigue or mortal pain,
Should hope to drive me forth again
From such felicity.

HOW THEY MADE OUT.

"I don't know," said the wife, Margaret, "how we shall make out, but we can't let the child starve." Margaret was the house-mother in a German home, where money was scarce and plain food was not plenty.

A stranger had come along the street, stopped at the door, and asked if he might have some supper with the family. He was watching the yellow-haired little girl who followed Margaret around, which made her speak the sentence with which this story commences.

"Then she isn't your own child?" asked the stranger.

"No," Margaret explained that she was the child of a poor neighbor who died a few weeks before, leaving nothing for the little girl, and no friends for her to go to. So they had to take her in.

"And can't you manage to keep her?" the stranger asked. "You have none of your own, I suppose."

"Oh, dear, yes!" and she laughed over his queer mistake. None of their own! Why, there were ten in all.

When supper was ready they all trooped in.

What a little army of them! and how clean their faces were, their light hair neatly combed, and their patched and worn clothes looking as though each of them had been as careful of them as possible. At the supper-table each of them looked out for Gretchen; she had the largest potato carefully peeled by Margaret, the mother's name-child; and Melchior, the father's name-sake, put a bit of butter on it, though he ate none on his own. The stranger saw all this and a great deal more, though he seemed to be talking with the father and mother.

The next day a soldier in military dress rode up to the house and asked for the house-mother, and gave her a solemn-looking letter which made her tremble as she broke the seal. Oh, what do you think that letter said? Why, that the man who had taken supper with them the night before was so pleased with all the ten children, and with Gretchen besides, that he had decided to make each a present of $100, which would be paid to them each year while they lived. Eleven hundred dollars a year, because a strange man who took supper with them was pleased with their kindness to him, and their unselfish care of the orphan Gretchen! That sounds like a "make-up" story, doesn't it? And yet it is true. The letter was signed Joseph, Emperor of Austria. And he was the stranger who had eaten potatoes with them the night before.

Ah! I wonder if you know what this makes me think of? Do you remember who laid aside his crown and his royal dress and left his throne and came to us—not simply to amuse himself and give us pleasure, but to save our souls?

Some day we shall see him with the royal dress blazing with jewels, the crown of gold on his head. Will he remember us then as those who received him here? He is watching our actions, whether they are unselfish and loving, or hard and hateful. Is he getting a reward ready for us? The reward is not $100 a year; it is a home in the palace; a seat on the throne. It is to be introduced to his Father as brothers and sisters; it is to reign with him forever and ever.—The Pansy.

JAMES BRAINARD TAYLOR.

He was a graduate of Princeton, and only twenty-eight when he died, yet he did work that any man might envy. He got hold of the idea that there was something in this doctrine of the endowment of the Spirit. Studying this subject, he became perfectly sure that the Holy Ghost might come upon him as upon the original disciples. So he prayed, and his prayers were answered. Whenever he went out, he stirred all with whom he came in contact. Sinners used to fall before his preaching as grass before the scythe. It was spontaneous. He could not help speaking to men, and his words were mighty.

There is one very beautiful incident in his life. One day he was out driving, and he drew his horses up to a watering-trough. It so happened that another young man was doing the same thing. While the horses' heads met in the trough, he turned to the young man, and said, "I hope you love the Lord. If you don't, I want to commend him to you as your best friend. Seek him with all your heart."

That was all; they turned and went their ways. But what was the result? The young man thus spoken to was converted, was educated for the ministry, and went as a missionary to Africa. Said this missionary afterwards: "Over and over again I wished I knew who that man was who spoke to me at the watering-trough. But I never knew till some one sent to me in Africa a box of books. I opened them; saw a little black-covered book, opened it, turned to the title-page, and there I saw a portrait—a beautiful face. 'Ah,' said I, 'that is the man. That is the man who preached the Gospel to me at the watering-trough. To him I owe my salvation.'"

And that of how many more on the Dark Continent! What we want to-day is to be filled with the Spirit. We are filled with so many other things—pride, selfishness, ambition, and vain glory. May the Lord enable us to empty our hearts, and have them filled as by a mighty, rushing wind.—Dr. A. J. Gordon.

COMPANIONS.

A boy is known by the company he keeps. You are judged by your associates, for the very good reason that people usually select for their friends those who are in sympathy with themselves.

If suspicion in a school trouble of any sort falls upon a lad or a set of lads, you may be certain that they have been companions in mischief. Wrongdoing is much like a snow-ball rolling down hill: it gathers size and momentum as it goes. If a bad boy could always keep good company, few persons would credit them with badness. But a bad boy would be ill at ease among the good, and so you seldom find him in their society.

May your Aunt Marjorie explain that she is not one of those tiresome people who never have patience with fun, and who consider high spirits and merriment out of place? Indeed, no. When there is a frolic going on, count me in, if you please. Under the head of badness, I include the meanness which makes a boy tell a lie rather than own that he has been wrong; the malice which prompts him to play a practical joke, and the lack of principle which borrows and does not return.

There are diseases which are contagious, that is, communicated by the touch. We are very careful not to put ourselves in their way. The worst disease in the world which affects only the body is, however, to be preferred to a wrong condition of the soul, and the best way to keep out of that is to choose good companions and to avoid bad ones.—Harper's Young People.

A CHILD'S LOGIC.

"Come, Johnny," said a father

To his little boy of three,

"If you want a pretty plaything,
Just come along with me."

He led him to the kitchen,

Where, in a fuzzy heap,

Within a box half filled with straw,

Three kittens lay asleep.

"Now, Johnny, dear," the parent said,

With quiet mien and grave,

"Two of these kitties must be drowned,— Choose which you wish to save."

With searching and impartial eye

The child surveyed their charms,

Then clapped the biggest of the three

Within his chubby arms.

A few days later, Johnny

Was sitting at his play,

When in his father hastened,

His face both glad and gay.

"Come, Johnny, boy, I'll show you

A plaything better far

Than any you have seen before;

But hush! don't wake mamma."

They softly gained the nursery,

Where in a basket gay

With dainty ribbons blue and white,

Two sleeping infants lay.

The father stood there proudly,

And gazed upon the three,

While waiting all expectant

To witness Johnny's glee.

But lo! in solemn silence,

With tightly-folded hands,

And eyes that scan each tiny face,

The child reflecting stands.

Then in the fattest baby's cheek,

Just where the dimples are,

He thrusts a little finger plump;

"Save this one, please, papa!"

—E. C., in Bazaar Journal.

TEMPERANCE.

THE SWISS PLAN.

The attempt of Switzerland to check the evil of dram-drinking will be regarded with interest by the friends of temperance everywhere. As before stated, inebriety has become so alarmingly prevalent of late years in the republic, that it shares with Belgium the disgraceful notoriety of being the most drunken nation in Europe. For this addiction various causes are assigned—the unrestricted importation of French brandies and the distillation of a cheap imitation from potatoes, the failure of the vintage for successive years, and the lack of sufficient control over the liquor traffic. Up to 1874 the power of regulating the trade was vested in the cantons, and by wise restriction in the number and locality of saloons, hours of sale, etc., the traffic was held well in check. Unfortunately, however, in the latter year the Federal Council deprived the cantons of restrictive power, and the traffic in intoxicants became as free as that in bread and meat. The result was the multiplication of drinking resorts, the increased importation and manufacture of cheap brandies, and a veritable epidemic of inebriety, which has affected the entire population. Various remedies have been tried, but thus far without avail, the difficulty being to harmonize Federal and cantonal authority sufficiently to form a check. Happily a scheme has at last been set in motion, and as nine-tenths of the liquor consumed is imported or made from imported materials, the first blow has been struck from the revenue side. Hereafter foreign alcohol will be excluded by a duty so high as to be practically prohibitive, while all native liquors will be held as the monopoly of government. That is to say, Swiss distillers are to become Federal agents, manufacturing under strict supervision, and employing no deleterious substances in the composition of liquors. The potato, especially, is peremptorily forbidden, potato brandy being of all spirits the most pernicious, while its extraordinary cheapness has made it an almost national beverage. In return for their expenditure distillers are to have the residual products, the Confederation taking all the alcohol, and dispensing it to the liquor trade at the regular market quotations. At the rates generally current this will leave a handsome balance.—Interior.

BOTTLED DEVIL.

Strange how much devilishness a single whisky jug will hold. The following is an illustration. In a recent temperance meeting in Philadelphia, Judge Pierce, one of the speakers, told the following story, the facts of which were brought out in a trial in one of the courts of that city:

"Let me tell you," said he, "what resulted from a single gallon of whisky, which to most eyes seemed innocent and harmless enough. There came out of it two murderers, two widows, eight orphans, and two cells in the State prison filled with wretched convicts for a term of years. The whisky, moreover, was used in connection with the administration of one of the ordinances of religion. It was drunk at the christening of a child, and the men who drank it fought, and two lost their lives, and the further results were what I have said. Did not Shakespeare say well: 'O, thou invisible spirit of wine, if we have no other name by which we may call thee, let us call thee devil!'" —Selected.

WHAT WE PAY FOR VICES.

From the annual report of the Internal Revenue Bureau, it seems that the consumption of beer and tobacco in every form except snuff is largely increasing. This last is especially true of the worst form of tobacco-smoking, viz., cigarettes. The number of gallons of whisky used was 70,763,010, or 1.19 gallons per capita, a decrease from 1883 or 1884, when it was respectively 1.41 and 1.42 gallons per head. The consumption of beer reached the enormous total of 642,000,000 gallons, which gives 10.83 gallons to every inhabitant of the country against 7 gallons in 1878-9. Considering a large part of the population used no beer at all, this makes an enormous consumption for those who do. This increase in the beer accounts somewhat for the decrease in spirits, and then doubtless the prohibition movement, especially in the South, has something to do with it. The amount of smoking and chewing tobacco used has increased 11,010,574 pounds in the present year, making in all 191,023,663 pounds, which is considerably in excess of the consumption of any previous year, and which is about double what it used to be before 1870. There were 59.2 cigars smoked last year for every inhabitant, nearly six times as many as were used twenty years ago. But greatest of all is the increase in cigarette smoking, amounting to nearly 2,500,000,000 last year alone, and of which there is no official record before 1866. It remains to add that, supposing cigars to average only five cents each, and cigarettes twenty cents a package, tobacco a dollar per pound in retail forms, beer five cents a glass, and spirits five cents for half a gill, prices which are certainly not as high as those paid by most consumers, the cost of these articles to the people of this country is over $1,189,000,000, or $19.82 for every inhabitant. From all this it appears that our countrymen will soon be able to out-smoke if not out-drink any people on the earth.—Demorests' Monthly.

The Nashville Advocate puts it in a nutshell when it says: Punish the liquor dealer who sells whisky to the drunkard, but give free rein to him when he sells it to your son or your neighbor's son who is just starting hellward by that shortest and surest route.

The Chicago Daily News (which is putting in some magnificent work for the Prohibition cause, though it is not a new-party paper) states that the brewers of Cincinnati, Milwaukee and other cities are contributing to a fund to be used in clearing brewer Arendorf, of Sioux City, who has been indicted for shooting Haddock. This is perfectly proper, if the money is used in legitimate expenses. But brewer Arendorf is wealthy, and if the ordinary expenses of legal defense were all that are contemplated, there would be no need for this move. But it takes extraordinary sums to bribe jurors and witnesses sometimes.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—George C. Needham, the evangelist and manager of the late Prophetic Conference in this city, began revival meetings in Cleveland last week.

—The doors of Western Avenue M. E. church had to be locked at the revival services last Friday night, so great was the crush to hear Mr. Moody. In response to an earnest appeal hundreds flocked into the inquiry room. The evangelist announced that he will preach in that church every evening this week, except Saturday.

—A union Gospel temperance meeting was held in Chicago Avenue church, this city, Saturday evening and was addressed by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.

—The Christian Conservator reports powerful revivals and large additions to the United Brethren churches, under the labors of Rev. W. W. Knipple, in Illinois, H. Siemiller in Iowa, A. G. Hempleman and others.

—Rev. Halleck Floyd, of Dublin, Indiana, who is traveling widely in the interest of the United Brethren church to save it from the lodge, expects to hold eight conventions in the conferences in Illinois, Iowa and States farther west during April and May. Rev. William Dillon, editor of the Conservator, Dayton, will hold corresponding meetings during the same time in Michigan, Ohio and Virginia.

—Prayer is requested by an aged sister for the churches and pastors of Mallet Creek, Ohio. The town is being visited with a mercurial outpouring of the Holy Spirit. A number of men well along in years have been converted, others are inquiring and serious, and new cases of awakening are noted at almost every meeting. May the gracious work go on till not one unconverted heart is left in the place.

—The Swedish government, as head of the State church, has formally adopted the Revised Version of the Bible, and the British and American Bible Societies, which circulate only the old version, have withdrawn from the country.

—Mr. Boggs, Baptist missionary at Cumbum, India, built a chapel there without cost to the mission funds, from the profits of a grading contract on the new railroad which he took to give employment to his poor Christian people.

—The Presbyterian foreign mission society had an income last year of $745,000, and a net loss in members on all their mission fields of 757! There must be a reason for this, and one which undoubtedly the liberal contributors of that large income should look into.—Missionary Visitor.

—A large number of prominent ministers and gentlemen interested in the religious welfare of Chicago, met at Farwell Hall last Thursday in conference with Mr. Moody and E. W. Bliss, and it was decided to invite Francis Murphy and his son to come to Chicago. The evangelist, Mr. Bliss, and the two Murphys will commence a series of three meetings daily, morning, afternoon, and evening, at Farwell Hall.

—A number of churches on the North Side have extended an invitation to Mr. Moody to hold meetings in their vicinity this week. It is expected that he will hold afternoon meetings in the Lincoln Park Congregational church, commencing on Tuesday.

—The report of the Y. M. C. A. of Chicago shows that during 1886, 704,936 young men called at the rooms in the Farwell Hall building during the year, or 1,900 daily, this includes meetings and business of all kinds connected with the association. The Employment Bureau under the efficient superintendent J. M. Hitchcock secured places for 4,464 men. The membership of the Y. M. C. A. here is 4,809.

—Bro. W. Van Driessen of Wisconsin has been evangelizing among the Wesleyan churches of that State. The Lord has greatly blessed his labors in the conversion of many souls, among the number a member of the G. A. R., who renounced the order and united with a Wesleyan church.

—Bro. J. E. Wolfe writes from Stephenville, in northern Texas, of a great revival prevailing in that place, such an awakening as has never been known in that part of the country. The brother is sowing the good seed of the kingdom among the people, endeavoring to help them to know the wiles of the devil and be out and out for Christ.

—Rev. John A. Wilson was installed pastor of Wooster, O., United Presbyterian congregation on the 19th of January. The sermon at the opening of the current term of Wooster University was preached by Mr. Wilson. He succeeds the late Dr. David A. Wallace.

—A well authenticated case of faith cure is reported in Adrian, Michigan. Mrs. Walter S. Mead, aged 29, has suffered two years with an abscess in her side, and for the past few weeks has been confined to her bed. Dr. Reynolds, attending physician, called in consultation Dr. Daniel Todd, mayor of the city, and doubts were entertained whether the woman would live. But Tuesday, the physician found his patient dressed, sitting up, and eating with fair relish. She said the Lord, in response to her prayers the night before, had healed her and restored her strength. She was cured, an examination of her side showing apparently a healing wound, with suppuration. The case excites great interest, and medical men pronounce themselves puzzled.

—Rev. N. R. Johnston of Oakland, Cal., the missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian church for the Chinese, makes an interesting report of his work in the Reformed Presbyterian in which he says: "You will be glad to learn that our mission schools are now full. If the number continues to increase we will be obliged to have more teachers, and good ones are very hard to obtain. Last month we made out a new roll of scholars in the night school. It numbers over seventy. About one half of them are idolaters. Probably a majority of the other half are no longer idol-worshippers, but they worship nothing; they manifest no concern about anything pertaining to religion. To convince and persuade them we seem powerless, but their hearts are in the hands of a power greater than ours. And yet many of them attend our Sabbath missionary meetings, both day and evening, and show no hostility to the doctrines of Christianity; and they are willing to read the Bible. But their instruction is an 'up-hill' work. In the night school I have a large class reading the New Testament, in the Acts."

—The Inter Ocean remarks that this appears to be a great revival season among Chicago churches. Ever since the week of prayer there have been religious revivals in every part of the city. The most prominent of these meetings are those conducted by D. L. Moody. While his work has not created so much talk as that of Jones and Small last winter, it is none the less extensive and important. At the Second Baptist and Centenary Methodist churches, in the very heart of the great West Side, immense crowds have flocked to hear him, and hundreds of conversions are reported. Fourteen neighboring churches have joined in the union services now being held at the Western Avenue Methodist church by Mr. Moody, the territory embraced extending from Kinzie street on the north to Twelfth street on the south, and from Ashland avenue to the western limits of the city. A strong revival is also in progress at the Halsted Street Methodist church, the Rev. Joseph Odgers, pastor. This church stands alone in a population of 50,000 souls, mostly foreigners. On the South Side special services have been held at the First Baptist, Sixth Presbyterian, Immanuel Baptist, Langley Avenue Methodist, and others. At the First Baptist church Dr. P. S. Henson, the pastor, is making special efforts to extend the influence and usefulness of the church. Dr. Henson believes the church is now at the critical point of its history, when it must either retrograde, or go forward and become one of the largest churches in the whole country. The field, he thinks, is not excelled by any in the world, and the church certainly has a great future before it. The services at Langley Avenue Methodist, the Rev. J. M. Caldwell, pastor, are increasing in interest, and have already resulted in many additions to the church. One of the most noteworthy revivals at the present time is that in the Baptist church at Englewood, of which the Rev. W. P. S. Elsdon is pastor. Dr. H. G. De Witte, the evangelist, is meeting with remarkable success there. Last Sunday fully one hundred pupils of the Sunday-school arose for prayer, and a larger number in the evening congregation. The revival is deepening in interest, and baptisms are occurring almost every evening.

—The missionaries in Calcutta have adopted the plan suggested by the agent of the Methodist Publishing House, of distributing illustrated Christian leaflets weekly among the 20,000 students in the non-Christian colleges and schools.

—Bibles are distributed among the arriving immigrants at Castle Garden, printed in English, Welsh, French, Danish, Swedish, Finnish, Italian, Spanish, German, Dutch, Russian, Bulgarian, Hungarian, Bohemian, Polish, Slavic, Arabic, Greek, Armenian, Hebrew and Portuguese.

—The Board of Missions of the Episcopal church has received during the past year the sum of $200,000 from the estate of the late Wm. H. Vanderbilt for permanent investment, the interest of which (about $10,000 annually) is to be equally divided between home and foreign missions.

—In answer to inquiries sent to all classes of people in Wales, in reference to the working of the Sunday Closing act in respect of order, thrift, temperance, and the general well-being, 180 of 208 testified that it had been generally successful in the principality.

LITERATURE.

HISTORY OF ANCIENT EGYPT. By George Rawlinson, M. A. In two volumes, cloth, gilt. Price $1.53. John B. Alden.

The most celebrated of our oriental scholars and historians conceived the plan of this work some eleven years ago and completed it in 1880. It was hardly possible that the author of "The Seven Great Monarchies," should not, from the abundant materials that have been accumulating for twenty years, produce one of his best and greatest works. We believe a discriminating public will accord him that honor, and with almost equal gratitude will they turn to a publisher who can venture to produce two such handsome and valuable volumes at such a price; Canon Rawlinson exhausts the story of Egypt in his account of her geography, climate, origin of her people, their language, literature, science, religion and manner of life, with their methods of agriculture, architecture and sculpture. The second volume is given entirely to the political history of Egypt and both are illustrated with hundreds of engravings. A useful index closes the work.

HELPS TO BIBLE STUDY, with Practical Notes on the Books of Scripture. By Rev. A. Sims. Pp. 164. Price, 50c. Sold by the author, Uxbridge, Ontario, and at this office.

The author and compiler of this useful book has for some years been known to us by his contributions to the Cynosure, and every page of this volume shows his characteristic industry and faithfulness to truth. It is divided naturally into an explanation of the different methods of Bible study, the rules of interpretation, the interpretation of symbols and types, an analysis of the different books, and miscellaneous helps. Since the Bible is the best and most important of all books, those next in order must be books about the Bible such as this. Money expended in securing such helps, if they be genuine helps, is never wasted. This little volume will be of constant use in every Christian family.

The Christian Instructor publishers issue in a pamphlet the proceedings of the convention held in Alleghany, Pa., last November, to discuss the subject of "Purity of Worship" in the United Presbyterian churches with special reference to the effort to introduce instrumental music. The able addresses of Dr. S. F. Morrow and Dr. W. H. French of Cincinnati are included.

A fine portrait of Dr. James McCosh, president of Princeton College, with whose sentiments of opposition to secret societies we are becoming familiar, opens the February Century. It is a number wonderfully strong in portraits, fine engravings of Presidents Tyler, Polk and Van Buren, of David Davis, Joshua R. Giddings, being among the number. Portraits and sketches of two remarkable and celebrated preachers also appear—Peter Cartwright of Illinois and "Father" Taylor, the Bethel preacher of Boston, the former in the Lincoln history. The life of Lincoln, by Hay and Nicolay, is occupied with Lincoln's first term in Congress and his life as a lawyer, this installment concluding the first portion of the biography and carrying its subject to his fortieth year. His campaign for Congress, his opposition to the principle of the Mexican war, his maiden speech in the House, his bill to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, his attitude toward appointments to office, and his characteristics as a lawyer are part of the subject matter. "The Bailing of Jefferson Davis," as recounted by one of the chief actors in the affair, Hon. George Shea, of New York, is the subject of a paper by George P. Lathrop. Mr. Shea's interviews with Horace Greeley, Garrison, Henry Wilson, F. P. Blair, Chief Justice Chase, and President Johnson, in bringing about the release of Davis form an interesting connected narrative which has not before been given to the public. Mr. Atkinson's second paper on "The Strength and Weakness of Nations" presents graphically an array of facts which will long be referred to by writers. His tables show (comparatively): 1, the national debts per capita; 2, the relative burden of national taxation; 3, acres per head of population and debt per acre; 4, standing armies and navies of the United States; 5, relative proportion of product per capita absorbed by national taxation. Mr. Atkinson's facts, estimates, and deductions are intimately related to current questions of labor and trade.

The publishing house of Iverson, Blakeman, Taylor & Co., of New York, has rendered the cause of public education a good service, at the same time perfecting their geographical publications by sending a surveying expedition to the sources of the Mississippi. A Captain Glazier attempted a while since to gain undeserved notoriety, by contradicting the government surveys, and making a lake which he pretended to have discovered the source of the river instead of Lake Itasca. The report of the new exploration proves the Glazier story a fraud, and issued in a pamphlet with maps makes a valuable addition to our geographical knowledge of this interesting district.

The Missionary Review for February in its monthly form seems to have nearly doubled in size without abating a jot in interest. F. Vinton, librarian of the College of New Jersey at Princeton, contributes a paper on John Coleridge Patteson, the martyr missionary to Mi-croneia, who was murdered by savages in 1871. The British contributions to missions in 1885 is an instructive table. The charge of Rev. E. Webb, for many years a missionary to India, to his son who was also departing to the mission work, and an editorial, "Difference between Secular and Spiritual Enterprises," with various missionary reports fill the number.

The American Publication Society of Hebrew announces that after February 1st, 1887, its journals, The Old Testament Student and Hebraica, will be published from New Haven, Conn. All remittances and correspondence should be sent to William R. Harper, P. O. Drawer 15, New Haven, Conn. The publication of its books will be assumed by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

The Citizens' Law and Order League of the U. S. has issued in pamphlet form an address by its secretary, L. Edwin Dudley, at Hamilton, Canada, last August, on the enforcement of the laws for the regulation or suppression of the liquor traffic.

The Complete Poultry Manual by F. D. Craig, N. Evanston, Ill., will be found a very useful adviser about the poultry yard beginning with the selection of eggs for hatching, the rearing of the chicks, and the care of fowls and treatment of their diseases.

Mrs. Housh's Woman's Magazine for February contains among other valuable contributions, articles from Miss F. E. Willard, Lucia E. F. Kimball and Mrs. Jennie F. Willing.

Hjalmar H. Boyesen opens the February 8th. Nicholas with a stirring and seasonable tale of Icelandic adventure, entitled "Between Sea and Sky." There is a brilliantly illustrated descriptive article, "Among the Gas-wells," and Washington Gladden has a number of valuable thoughts for the rising generation under the suggestive title, "If I were a boy."

The Chautauqua Drawing-board and Writing Desk lately advertised in this paper is one of the happiest combinations for children. The copies for drawing lessons are a delight to the eyes of them all, and especially when the boys see the fine engine and train they ask for no more. But it is a shame that those who compiled these copies should descend to the low business of selecting lodge symbols for one set. A careful parent may, however, turn an evil into a good by making these drawings a text for lessons on the follies and evils of the lodge.

BUSINESS.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from Jan. 31 to Feb. 5 inclusive:

A Few Books of Special Worth IN BIBLE STUDY.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. By Rev. James Stalker, M.A. Arranged for study, 16mo, cloth, 60 cts.

This work is in truth "Mulum la Parvo," containing within small compass a vast amount of most helpful teaching, so admirably arranged that the reader gathers with remarkable definiteness the whole revealed record of the life-work of our Lord in a nutshell of space and with a minimum of study.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES. As seen in the Tabernacle and its Services, by Rev. George Rogers, New Edition, enlarged. Cloth, 5 cts.; paper, 30 cts.

The writer of this delightfully interesting work has opened up a rich vein of truth, and in a remarkably suggestive style has presented the typical teachings of the hierarchy of Israel. The book is really fascinating.

NOTES AND SUGGESTIONS FOR BIBLE READINGS. By Ellice and Elliott. Contains over twenty short chapters by various authors on different plans and methods for Bible readings, followed by over six hundred outlines of Bible readings, by a great variety of authors. 203 pages, 12mo, cloth, 75 cts.; paper, 30 cts.

C. H. MRS. NOTES ON THE PENTATEUCH. By C. H. Macintosh, 6 vols. in a set. 1st. 1st. $1.50; separate vols., 25 cts. each.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MOR-GAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canadian jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT TO IT.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, not to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago National Christian Association.) Single copy, 6 cents.

FARM NOTES.

SMALL FRUITS ON THE FARM.

To stock a small garden with the best varieties requires only a few dollars outlay, and the skill necessary to keep them in good condition is within the reach of any one who is interested in the matter. We generally see a few scrubby and neglected currant bushes in the grass along the garden fence, but not in one garden in a dozen do we see much more in the line of small fruits. That men are fond of these fruits is proved by the avidity with which they dispose of them when placed before them in the shape of pie, shortcake, or eaten with sugar or cream. They seem to forget, or overlook the fact, that the season of enjoying these luxuries need not be confined to summer. Canned fruits are nearly as good during the winter, if properly put up, as when fresh, and the expense and trouble of putting them up is not great. More money is usually spent for prunes and other dried fruit during the winter in families where fruit is not put up, than it would cost to purchase jars and sugar to prepare a supply at home. The women will take care of the fruit if they only have it to take care of, and will be glad to have the chance of doing so. Should more fruit be produced than the family can consume, it will meet with a ready sale at the nearest village and usually bring the grower better returns than if sent to the overstocked markets of a large city. Sell none but the surplus.—American Agriculturist.

An Ohio farmer says that he makes his apple-trees bear every year by thinning the fruit when the trees are young. By the time the fruit is as large as walnuts, he takes a long pole and knocks off all but a moderate crop. The Rambo is commonly an alternate bearer; but after thinning as described in the abundant year, a full crop was borne the next year following. In this way he states that he has five Rambo trees bearing every year, from which he has gathered a hundred bushels of apples. But these trees are not neglected nor left to themselves. He keeps up the fertility by the run of hogs and turning under clover.

A farmer's scrap book should be kept on every well regulated farm. There are thousands of recipes for the curing of sick animals which may be of great value if referred to at the proper time. Useful hints regarding special crops may be forgotten unless preserved in this manner, convenient for reference. Plans for farm-buildings or their interior management may be preserved until wanted. Gates, fences, ditches, and the numerous other things which make up the business of the farm, require frequent repairs or entire reconstruction, and the hints and helps which may be afforded if the scrap-book has been well kept, are of immense value.

HOW TO MAKE A LAWN IN A FEW WEEKS.—Joseph Harris in his "Walks and Talks on the Farm" in the American Agriculturist, told how he made a lawn by sowing Millet, with the usual lawn grass seed and white clover, and top-dressing it with nitrate of soda. The Joseph Harris Seed Company, Rochester, N. Y., in their new catalogue describe this method more fully. The Millet, or Hungarian grass, grows very rapidly and soon covers the ground and smother the weeds. It is absolutely necessary, however, to use the lawn mow as soon as the Millet begins to grow and keep using it frequently, all through the summer. The first frost kills the Millet and the lawn grass has full possession of the land. Mr. Harris says that in three weeks from the time of sowing the seed he had "quite a respectable looking lawn," but he made the lawn very rich by the use of nitrate of soda.

Impurities and disease germs never penetrate the stones used in the Gate City Stone Water Filters. Chemical analysis of the stones after years of use show them as pure and white as when taken from the mine. Depot 123 Dearborn St., Chicago.

CATARRH.

THOUSANDS ARE DYING

In early life with consumption, who can look back a few years—perhaps only months—when it was catarrh. Neglected when a cure is possible, very soon it will transform the features of health and youth into the dark, pallid appearance; while the hacking cough, the excess of blood gushing from the lungs, or night-sweats, all significantly proclaim it is too late; and thus neglected Catarrh ends in the consumptive's grave.

NASAL CATARRH.

Sometimes the disease only affects the membranes lining the nasal passages, and they may be easily reached and cured by simple means. But when it is located in the "frontal sinus," or in the "posterior nares," or if it has entered the "Eustachian tubes," as all well-read physicians will readily admit, nothing can be relied on to effect a permanent cure but the inhalation of properly medicated vapor. In the same manner that we breathe a common air we can inhale and breathe a medical air; and it is perfectly simple, any one can see, thus to treat a disease of the throat, bronchial tubes and lungs. How much better this method, by which remedies are conveyed directly to the seat of the disease, than to resort to the uncertain and too frequently mischievous action of medicines taken into the stomach.

BRONCHITIS, OR INFLAMMATION OF THE BRONCHIAL TUBES.

This disease is so closely connected with CATARRH that it may be truly described as a branch of that disease, only modified and changed by the nature and organization of the parts affected; CATARRH being confined to the Interior of the Nose while BRONCHITIS affects the small pipes entering the lungs, known as the Bronchial Tubes. Where the disease obtains its worst character, tumors grow up like mushrooms, creating inflammatory adhesion and discharge of offensive matter from the throat, extending through the Eustachian Tube to the ear, which becomes deaf. The absorption of the tuberculous matter is very dangerous, and frequently results in PULMONARY CONSUMPTION and death.

removing the ills of mankind.

THE EXPERIENCE OF OTHERS.

On account of so many patients having been swindled by unprincipled quacks and pretenders, who flood the country with their advertisements, we deem it only fair that every one that wishes to have the opportunity to ascertain whether we are able to accomplish all that we claim; and for this purpose we add a few of the many hundreds of unsolicited certificates that have been sent to us by grateful patients; almost any of whom will doubtless respond to any inquiry by letter, if accompanied by a stamp to pay postage. Having been cured themselves, they will doubtless be willing to let the afflicted know where they may find certain relief. We have hundreds of certificates from all classes—physicians, clergymen, lawyers, judges, merchants, bankers, and business men; but many dislike the notoriety of having their names in print, or, disliking the task of answering letters of inquiry, have requested us not to publish their names; and this injunction is always most sacredly respected. Correspondence of all kinds is strictly confidential.

HE KNOWS IT CURES.

BOSTON, Mass., July 6, 1885.

REV. T. F. CHILDS: DEAR SIR.—It is now about five years since I put myself under your treatment. I was then a great sufferer from Catarrh and its effects upon my system. I had dyspepsia, a constant headache, itor in the posterior nasal passages, affection of the left testicle, ring in the ears—in fact, nasal and bronchial catarrh affecting all the passages of the head and throat. The above was accompanied with a great deal of physical disability, sometimes making me for my regular duties.

Such was my condition when I commenced your treatment. I experienced immediate relief; the terrible pressure in my head relaxed, the bronchial tubes and nasal passages were soothed by the medicines. I continued to use the remedies until the ulcers subsided and healed, the bronchial tubes recovered their wonted vigor, dyspepsia gave place to appetite, and the ringing in the ears ceased.

I could now endure fatigue and exposure better than for many years. The value of your medicines in the family, in the case of colds, etc., is incalculable. I firmly believe that no other treatment would have been so successful in my case; indeed, nothing I tried before did me any good. I humbly thank God that he has blessed your remedy in my case, and so restored my health. I am yours most gratefully.

My Experience.

Nineteen years of terrible headache, disgusting nasal discharges, dryness of the throat, acute bronchitis, coughing, soreness of the lungs, raising bloody mucus, and even night-sweats, incapacitating me from my professional duties, and bringing me to the verge of the grave, all were caused by, and the result of, nasal catarrh. After spending hundreds of dollars and obtaining no relief, I compounded my catarrh Specific and Cold Air Inhaling Balm, and wrought upon myself a wonderful cure. Now I can speak for hours without difficulty, and can breathe freely in any atmosphere. At the calls of numerous friends, I have given my cure to the public, and have now thousands of patients in all parts of the country, and thousands of happy fellow-beings whose sufferings I have relieved. My cure is certain, thorough and perfect, and is endorsed by every physician who has examined it. If I can relieve my fellow-beings as I have been relieved of this loathsome disease, which makes the possessor sit once disgusting to himself and others, I shall be satisfied and feel that I have done my little toward removing the ills of mankind.

THE EXPERIENCE OF OTHERS.

On account of so many patients having been swindled by unprincipled quacks and pretenders, who flood the country with their advertisements, we deem it only fair that every one that wishes to have the opportunity to ascertain whether we are able to accomplish all that we claim; and for this purpose we add a few of the many hundreds of unsolicited certificates that have been sent to us by grateful patients; almost any of whom will doubtless respond to any inquiry by letter, if accompanied by a stamp to pay postage. MR. G. K. SMITH, of the H. C. Staver Implement Co., Chicago, Ill., writes: "I heartily commend you the success of your treatment. It does a sick man good to know that he can be cured." MR. J. (NOTE.—The Cold Air Inhaling Balm is a portion of our treatment for Bronchial Catarrh, but it is very useful to any one, as it will almost immediately break up a fresh cold in the head, and thus prevent seated catarrh.) MR. P. H. STRECKMAN, of Brandon, Iowa, under date of April 7, 1885, writes: "I have used your treatment to quite a number, and they say they will give it a trial. You can refer any one to me, for I am satisfied that your treatment will be found to recommend it to any one suffering with catarrh."

MR. C. F. SOUTHERN, of Mt. Carroll, Ill., writes, March 14, 1885: "Your medicines for catarrh, if used according to directions, with perseverance, are a certain cure for this disgusting disease. I can cheerfully testify to the above."

MR. O. N. YOUNG, of Chico, Cal., writes under date of June 14, 1885: "After having received your medicine, and finding them effectual in producing a cure, I have recommended them and allowed other parties to have the use of them. In one case it cured a man of a long-standing Catarrh, and he is now well."

Rev. F. E. GUNZ, of Florville, Ill., writes: "It seems almost marvellous how rapidly my wife has gained more difficulty in breathing, very little coughing; and her case was one of very long standing. AND THE FARM, FIELD AND STOCKMAN, both one year, and in addition we will present the subscriber with his choice of either 20 WELL FILLED PACKETS OF SEEDS

The Seeds are mostly new and rare novelties, the object being to introduce new and improved varieties. There are over 100 varieties to select from, comprising the rarest flowers and vegetables, and new varieties of thoroughbred grain, either imported from the best special sources of Europe or purchased from the originator in this country, especially for this distribution. Twenty packets of seeds of like quality cannot be bought at retail for less than $1.50.

The Farm, Field and Stockman is doubtless well known to our readers. Since its present publishers, Gen. C. H. Howard and Jas. W. Wilson, took it in hand it has been second to none of its class. It is an ably edited, neatly printed, reliable, 4-column, 16-page, agricultural and family weekly, and a staunch advocate of farmers' rights—a paper every farmer wants. Price $1.50 a year.

Send the money to-day, and we will promptly forward the paper and an illustrated descriptive list of the above seeds, with full directions for planting the latter, from which a selection can be made; or, if you want to make the selection first, a list will be sent you free on application to the Farm, Field and Stockman, Chicago. This is indeed an unparalleled offer.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles.

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Are there's the rub.' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable, able for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind, if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

President Cleveland on Friday signed the inter-state commerce bill. Also the act to fix the date for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the vote for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon.

The Secretary of War, in a communication to Congress, reports the unorganized militia of the United States at 7,655, 592 men. It appears that Arkansas, Oregon, Tennessee, and Mississippi have no organized forces.

Democratic opposition makes the defeat of Mrs. Logan's pension bill quite possible. It is estimated that other widows, more needy, and coming under the same conditions could as justly draw pensions and the amount would reach over $300,000 yearly.

COUNTRY.

On Friday Emma Zimmerman, 6 years of age, and her little 4-year-old sister were suffocated by the smoke of a fire which started in the basement of their father's house on Thirty-third street this city.

The directors of the Board of Trade have begun war upon the traders in privileges. Seven members have been suspended for terms of twenty to ninety days, according to the gravity of the offense.

In the Michigan Legislature the committee on the liquor traffic reported a bill in favor of increasing the bonds of liquor sellers to $6,000 and $10,000.

The bill granting suffrage to women, passed by the Washington Territory Legislature in 1885, was Thursday declared unconstitutional by the Territorial Supreme Court.

Dr. T. D. Bancroft, of Kansas, has been engaged by the anti-saloon Republican league to organize anti-saloon Republican clubs throughout the country, and will probably begin his work in Connecticut.

Bills were introduced Tuesday in the Illinois House to prohibit the sale of whisky of less age than 2 years and 9 months.

The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad is reported to have leased in perpetuity the tracks of the Wabash road between St. Peters and St. Louis, including all the terminal facilities of the Wabash in the latter city.

Ten tubs of butter shipped to Atlanta, Ga., by P. Moran & Co., of Chicago, which had been declared oleomargarine by the Georgia State chemist, have just been decided to be pure butter by United States chemists in Washington.

"Honest" John O'Neill, another of the New York boodle aldermen, was found guilty Tuesday. This practically settles the fate of the entire gang of bribe-givers and bribe-takers, as O'Neill's counsel presented the strongest case yet made out. O'Neill was surprised and terribly disappointed. He is an old man and the verdict may have a greater effect on him than on either Jaehne or McQuade.

Rebecca Buck, aged 35, who had been suffering from melancholy for some time, hanged herself Monday morning at her home near East Hanover, Pa. Her mother, 72 years of age, was rendered insane by the act, and a few hours later hanged herself in the same place where her daughter's body had been found.

Fire Wednesday morning swept away the Huron House at Port Huron, Mich. Four buildings were gutted at Helena, M. T., one man being burned to death and another badly injured. The mercury at the time of the fire registered 40 below zero. The business section of Minooka, Ill., was destroyed by fire Tuesday night, fourteen buildings being reduced to ruins. The loss is about $30,000, well insured. The factory and two warehouses of the Fond du Lac (Wis.) Furniture Company were burned Wednesday morning. The loss is $60,000 with no insurance.

The three Republican Commissioners of Achuleta county, Colorado, were seized by a mob, headed by the sheriff, and driven from the county, with threats that should they return their lives would be forfeit. A hotel owned by one of the victims was burned by the mob. The legislature will investigate the matter.

Chestnut Mound, Tenn., was visited Wednesday night by a water spout which carried death and destruction in its wake and almost ruined that section of the country. Near midnight, a solid body of water was precipitated, and swept down the valley with terrific force. One small branch rose fifteen feet in a few minutes. David Bush's house was knocked to pieces, and floated away. Mr. Bush and his family, being asleep were thrown from their beds into the water and one son perished.

Father F. C. Jean, priest at Lyons, Iowa, was deposed about fifteen years ago by Bishop Hennessey, of Dubuque. He sued for damages and was awarded $200,000 by the District Court of Clinton county. This ridiculous judgment was set aside Friday.

A car-load of beer sent by Keokuk brewers to two saloon-keepers in Des Moines was Saturday seized by the authorities.

The Ohio River reached a stand at Cincinnati, with fifty-six feet three inches on the gauge. Steamboats have great difficulty in getting under the bridges. Factories employing 4,000 men have shut down. The Central Union depot was abandoned Saturday. Across the river hundreds of houses are inundated.

An earthquake shock was felt Sunday morning in southern Illinois and Indiana.

About 2 o'clock Saturday morning the express train from Boston to Montreal on the Vermont Central Road was thrown into White River at Woodstock, Vt. by a broken rail near the bridge. Four coaches filled with people went down fifty feet on the ice and at once took fire. The most appalling scenes followed. Assistance was scarce, and few were rescued without injuries. It is believed that there were 80 persons on the train of whom the dead bodies of 32 were recovered before Monday 18 of whom were identified. The injured number 40. No blame is attached to any of the train men. The engine, baggage and express car went over the break and across the river safely.

FOREIGN.

It is said that Bismark has formed a coalition between Austria, England, and Italy against Russia. Germany will join the coalition if France supports it.

The Viedomosti, of Moscow, says that no compromise is possible between Russia and Austria.

Panics prevailed on the London, Paris, and Berlin stock exchanges, Thursday, owing to war rumors, and general financial distrust.

Saturday dispatches from all the European capitals indicated a more peaceful outlook.

General Boulanger is on a visit to the fortified towns along the French frontier. Both Emperor William and Prince Bismarck have informed the Czar that Germany has no intention of attacking France.

It is reported that the Belgian government has decided to ask of parliament a credit of 50,000,000 francs for war armaments, and for fortifying Antwerp and the country between the Sambre and Meuse Rivers.

The Pope of Rome has ordered the Bavarian Franciscans to brew no more beer in their monasteries. This beer has become quite celebrated, and its manufacture was a very extensive and lucrative business.

Four girls, three of them sisters, were burned to death in a school-house at St. Monique, Quebec, Thursday night.

A dispatch from Suez states that in the battles between the Abyssinians and Italians near Massowah, Jan. 25, the Abyssinians captured all the guns possessed by the Italians. It also says that of 480 Italians engaged in the fight, not more than fifty escaped. The dispatch adds that the Italians evacuated all advanced positions, and the Abyssinians have already attacked and carried the first line of Italian intrenchments around Massowah. The latter successes were achieved by the Abyssinians the day after the destruction of the Italian forces in the field. The latest intelligence indicates that it is doubtful whether the Italians will be able to hold Massowah until the arrival of reinforcements. The news aroused the greatest excitement in Rome and the Italian parliament.

How the tables have turned since Harriet Beecher Stowe wrote "Dred," her last powerful story against slavery! The great Dismal Swamp is no longer used as a shelter by runaway negroes, because the negroes no longer need to run away, but it is calculated that it is the hiding place of no less than 100 white men who have pressing reasons for retiring to extreme privacy for a time. And it is even talked about that a "grand hunt" is to be made for them.

The Letter Carriers' Union is demanding an eight-hour day along with the laborers, workmen and mechanics employed by the Government. The national committee of the Knights of Labor endorse them. Mr. Powderly spoke strongly against the eight-hour demand last year. Perhaps he is in favor of this movement because it is a habit people have fallen into of getting everything possible out of the Government. But why such laborers have a juster title to full pay for less work than ordinary employes he does not explain.

The report that the New York liquor dealers threatened to boycott the brewers of that city, is the happiest use to which that ill-favored kind of revenge can be put. The California wine men also talk of retaliation upon the grain alcohol producers. It is proposed in that State to prohibit the sale of any liquors compounded from grain alcohol. If men who live to make, and live by making unholy war upon the bodies and souls of men and the health and happiness of their families can be made to turn upon each other, it will be a day to be perpetuated by thanksgiving.

A California letter in an exchange grows eloquent with horror at the abominations of the heathen in the Chinese quarters of San Francisco, connected with the celebration of the Chinese New Year a few days ago. The fact is the average Chinaman pays as little attention to his religion as a Molly Maguire, and makes up for his neglect by overdoing the matter on this anniversary. But if our scrupulous friend will take his stand almost any day on Montgomery street near Market, San Francisco, he will see the great Masonic temple illuminated and scores of young men on their way to scenes of religious debauch as base and unholy and unchristian as the heathen of Dupont street. But our Christian correspondent who is horror-struck with one, has only apologies for the other. Shame!

The great New York strike drags on, impoverishing the laborers and vexing the employers affected by it, but furnishing the astute managers of the unions and Knights, and what not, with an opportunity of exhibiting their generalship and inflating their conceit with the display of a little brief authority. The reasons for the strike, as given in another column from the Christian Intelligencer, are adequate, and had they been properly presented would no doubt have secured an immediate arbitration, or at least the public sympathy would have been with the men and compelled a settlement in their favor. Instead of this the lodge leaders, knowing their power, unlawfully sworn to them, have extended the strike in every direction, until through intimidation of the men on the one hand and exasperation of employers on the other no settlement seems possible though attempted by Mr. Durbin, president of the Reading railroad.

A conference of the two houses of Congress on the bill for coast defence and heavy ordnance, has decided that an appropriation of $20,000,000 should be voted immediately to begin work. This sum will be increased year by year so long as our plethoric treasury will allow. Had the national debt been paid off as rapidly as it should, a hundred-million-dollar temptation would have been removed from the money-grabbers about Congress. Just as the nation, in imitation of the folly of Europe, is beginning this costly and experimental business, the Louisville papers tell us of an invention for hardening and tempering steel by which a plate can be made so hard and elastic as to turn a ball from the heaviest gun ever cast. Thus is Providence rebuking, by the inventive genius of men, this folly of war preparation.

If the Christian church could have as decided a revelation of the date of the Saviour's birth as the Mormons, there would be some excuse for observing it, though it might be next to an impossibility to get the world to give up its 25th of December revel. The followers of Jo. Smith, adopting without question his bogus revelation about the ancient Israelites in this country, make the birth of Christ to fall on April 11th, which by a pleasant (and unintentional) coincidence is the date of the founding of the "Church of Latter-day Saints." We do not know whether the Mormons observe the 11th of April Christ-mass, or fall in with the ways of the wicked Gentiles. It is their custom to coincide with the latter in the observance of anniversaries so far as they can, and then boast of it as an evidence of their loyalty to the government. Gentiles may indulge a smile of incredulity at the coincidence of the birth of the Saviour and the beginning of Mormonism, but the Mormons have as great probability for their pretensions as the Gentiles, with their 25th of December follies.

Tremont Temple, Boston, was full last week Monday when Joseph Cook began his lecture-course for 1887. The evangelists Jones and Small occupied seats on the platform and our Chicago singer Excell lifted his thrilling and powerful voice in song. The series of lectures this year will be devoted to a consideration of "Current Religious Perils," which is wide enough to include that which seems to us one of the most alarming—the secret lodge influence. In his prelude he spoke of the "new departure" in theology. Robert Browning, he said, who is unquestionably the subtlest of the ethical teachers whom the poetry of our age has produced, deliberately affirms that our human earthly choice decides eternal destiny. He is not a theological partisan. He speaks as Shakespeare would, as a student of irreversible material laws. Referring to Henry Ward Beecher's belief of the doctrine, he said Mr. Beecher might have lived longer had he died earlier. In answer to the question "Ought the Chicago Anarchists to be pardoned," Mr. Cook said, "May God have mercy upon the souls of the Anarchists, and may the courts not have mercy upon their bodies." The lecture that followed was on the waste of opportunity as the chief peril of the church. This loss relates to philosophy, to theology, morals and politics. He urged that delay now in missions is immensely dangerous. Postpone the triumph of Christianity now, twenty-five years, and you injure the cause of God more than you would have done a hundred years ago by postponing that triumph twice the time.

The country has always accepted Mr. Powderly's statements about his order with the best of grace. He says it is opposed to strikes and very much opposed to the boycott. These are desperate remedies, and only to be used as a last resort. No strike may be ordered except from the central executive committee of the order. He, therefore, reprimanded the leaders of the Stock Yards strike when he ordered the men back to work after it was certain they would lose their case, and had no popular sympathy from the first. But before and since strikes and boycotts have been ordered by the Knights of Labor here and there on the authority of district lodges without reference to Powderly and his committee. Clothing dealers, boot and shoe dealers, the Armour packing company and other firms in Chicago are under the boycott ban. What does Mr. Powderly expect of the public? Shall we forever believe his proclamations, or judge of his order by its persistent and undeviating practice?

TIMES OF WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION.

REMINISCENCES BY HON. S. C. POMEROY.

HOW KANSAS BECAME A FREE STATE.

When, in 1854, Congress passed what is known as the Kansas-Nebraska bill, under the lead of Stephen A. Douglass, D. R. Atchison and others, slavery was already there. The mortifying fact is on record that a Methodist minister, a teacher and preacher to the Shawnee Indians, was the first man to carry slaves into Kansas! This settlement was above the line of "36 deg. 30 min." and therefore was an illegal holding, save that the lawyers of that period held that the master could hold his slaves anywhere, for the time being, even under the shadows of Bunker Hill monument.

To make this question safe, the new dogma was advanced in that bill, that "the squatters," as they were called, should have the sovereign control and make or unmake slavery, as they chose, when they "came to form a State government." This was a new departure after the compromise which had been effected forty years previous, and the discussion it caused was wide-spread and deep-seated. It led to the overthrow of the Democratic supremacy. The discussions in Congress at the time were most earnest and exciting. For the first time, ministers of the Gospel took sides in politics; and the press, religious and secular, was outspoken and earnest. Many, in the free States, who afterwards became honored leaders in the Republican party, now left the Democratic party forever, and a new party, with new leaders, came to the front.

I remember to have helped organize a Free Soil party in Massachusetts, some years before this. As an impulsive young man, I took strong ground against any more slave territory; and during the canvass when that issue was presented, made my best efforts for Henry Clay; until that painful and killing letter of his was published, in which he said: "So far from being opposed to the annexation of Texas, I shall be glad to see it, if it can be done by the common consent of the Union, and upon just and fair terms." That enured me. We were making a campaign upon the plank of no more such territory; and when our leader surrendered, we bolted and marched to the ranks of Hon. James G. Birney, and polled votes enough to defeat the man we would not elect.

In my native town in Massachusetts I was nominated by the new party for the State Legislature. We polled just eleven votes the first year, and were not disheartened.

"Thrice armed is he, who hath his quarrel just."

Again and again for eight years I was the candidate of the same party, for the same office, and on that eighth year was elected over the candidates of both the Whig and Democratic parties. That was a new year for the old Bay State. There was no election by the people for State officers. Hence the Legislature elected Geo. S. Boutwell for governor, and sent Henry Wilson to the United States Senate and N. P. Banks to the House where he was made Speaker. The men of "eminent gravity" who had so long governed Massachusetts, took back seats, and the world still moved on. Two years before we sent Charles Sumner to the Senate; and the two great leaders of the anti-slavery party, Sumner and Wilson, became associated and installed at the seat of the Federal power of the nation.

Mr. Seward was already in the Senate, and in his closing speech upon the Nebraska bill, turning full upon the Southern leaders, and seeing the passage of the bill inevitable, he said: "Come on, then, gentlemen of the Slave States. Since there is no escaping your challenge, I accept on behalf of freedom. We will now engage in competition for the virgin soil of Kansas, and God give the victory to the side that is stronger in numbers, as it is in right." This bill passed May 23d, 1854. Then Congress adjourned to carry the question to the people. No clouds ever met in the summer heavens more heavily charged and surcharged with elements of thunder and storm. And storm and thunder followed. Neither party understood the magnitude of the contest, or comprehended the results of its termination. But the "Blue Lodges of Missouri" and the "Sons of the South" moved first to form "emigrant societies," to make Kansas a slave State. This led the Massachusetts Legislature to pass an act, organizing the "New England Emigrant Aid Company."

Hon. Eli Thayer of Worcester, Mass., was then a member of the Legislature, and lead in its passage. Upon the adjournment, he at once entered upon the work of its organization. He was aided by the men who were soon chosen its officers; such as Amos A. Lawrence, J. M. S. Williams, John Carter Brown, of Rhode Island, and others long since dead. This organization was completed and on the 19th day of July, 1854, the first party of twenty men, with Robinson and Branscomb for leaders, (though one went in advance of the party), moved westward to find a home and make the first settlement in that Territory, which was now to be the theater of the pending conflict. They entered the Territory from Kansas City, camped upon the site of the present State University, and waited for the next party. In the mean time, Mr. Thayer had written to me to come to Boston. I complied, and for the first time was introduced to the officers of the company, Mr. Thomas H. Webb having been chosen the secretary.

On the 23d day of August, 1854, I left my home in Massachusetts,—the old homestead where my father was born also,—and the farm where I had tilled the poor soil, and went to Boston, preparatory to starting for the new Territory. The Boston Emigrant Aid Company had chosen me their financial agent and had a company nearly ready to start. Soon as needed preparations could be made, we all, to the number of one hundred or more, left for Kansas. I was then less than forty years old and committed to the freedom of all the Territories, and opposed to slavery everywhere. This was well understood in Boston, for in a speech before the Legislature I had denounced the returning of Simms to slavery and engaged in a contest to take him from the U. S. Marshall (Hon. Mr. Devins).

After some public meetings were held, and we received all the information attainable, the old Boston and Albany depot witnessed our good-bye and departure. That first evening we halted at the Delevan House, Albany, and were cordially greeted by friends who wished us a God speed. The next day we were halted in the depot at Rochester, N. Y., and officers of the American Bible Society made us an address, which was accompanied by the presentation of a large Bible and spelling-book, as the emblems of our civilization. These were accepted, in a handsome speech by one of our men. Well I remember to have made the pledge, "That they shall be laid, one upon the altar of a free church, the other upon the desk of a free school." And in parenthesis I will add, that the First Congregational church at Lawrence, used that same old Bible for many years.

Arriving at Buffalo, a Mr. Noble (and a noble man he was) arranged for us a lake passage to Detroit, upon a steamer called the Mayflower. At Detroit we had a railroad to Chicago, and for the first time saw "the Prairie Queen of the West." From there we had the Alton & St. Louis road to Alton, and boat twenty miles further to St. Louis. Here we rested for the Sabbath, and met a mixture of both friends and enemies. Here, then, we first listened to the preaching of that good man, the Rev. Dr. Post. The Sabbath rested and recruited our whole party. By this time we had received many additions, all for Kansas. I then engaged a steamer, called the Polar Star, a suitable name, for we had used it as a guide to freedom before. After eight more days, trying the uncertainties of the Missouri River navigation, we were all safely landed at Kansas City, the gateway to the Territory.

Here we halted, unloaded our baggage from the boat, and took our first survey of the surroundings. Dr. Robinson, who had been there before us and had some acquaintances, lead the way. We visited the Territory and stepped upon Kansas soil at Wyandotte. Here the Wyandotte Indian tribe owned all the lands, so we could not settle. Here we met Gov. Walker, the chief of the tribe, and were introduced to him. He seemed friendly to our settlement, and at once told me "he hoped we would make a Free State of Kansas." That was more than I had then heard at Kansas City. But as we were obliged to make that point our chief place of landing, and of purchasing supplies for the Territory, we had to have headquarters there not only for this party but for others to follow. A man by the name of Chapman, though not the owner, kept the "Union Hotel," the only public house in the place, none too friendly. I soon learned that a Mr. Gillis owned the house and wanted to sell it. Mr. Conant, the only Free State man I then knew there, loaned me his horse and saddle. With Dr. Robinson I rode up the bottom to see Gillis at his house, a large stone structure, quite imposing for the place. I asked him if he would sell the Union Hotel, at the same time telling him who we were, and where we came from. He said, "Yes, and I will take 10,000 dollars for the hotel and furniture." We closed the bargain, giving a draft on Mr. Amos H. Lawrence of Boston for payment. Chapman was discharged, and we installed Mr. Morgan, one of our party who had his wife with him, as hotel-keeper, and we had a home, where all Free State emigrants could have protection and shelter. This was the first footing, and made people believe we had come to stay.

After some days' stay here, purchasing some teams and hiring some, the whole party started to go across the Indian reservation to our first place of settlement. The first night we stayed near the Quaker Mission, and had a friendly hand extended to us by Mr. Mendenhall, the proprietor. Then we moved on, crossed the Wakarusa, and stopped at the town site of what is now the city of Lawrence, taking its name from the good man who had championed our cause, with his voice as well as his purse. Forty tents had been provided, and here on an eminence looking down upon the Kansas river, we had our first night's stay (not much sleep) at Lawrence. Here we found the party which had left Boston in July, waiting for us.

The next morning Dr. Robinson (afterwards Governor) and myself walked through the tall, wet grass down to the bank of the Kansas river. There was a rock formation and a dry situation, and before we had returned to the party upon the hill we decided there and then to found the first city in Kansas. And first she has been, in war, in peace, and in the affections of all the old Free State settlers.

A man by the name of Stearns had partly built a log cabin there before we arrived. Wanting no quarrel with him or any one, I paid him $500 in gold to quit-claim his location to me, so he could take a claim elsewhere. This he willingly did. Then the tents on the hill were all moved down near the river, and the city of Lawrence was well founded.

The next night, by the aid of the North Star, that old guide of the fugitive, we had our surveyor, Mr. A. D. Searle, who had been my school-boy in Massachusetts, run by his instruments the first line of surveying ever done in Kansas, and this due north and south. This line we called Massachusetts street, and so it remains to this day. Every fifty feet upon this line made one lot, and when marked and staked off, we were all apportioned one lot each. I remember drawing one lot and afterwards selling it to Judge Miller for over two thousand dollars.

We note, concerning a prominent man, and a worthy one, too, lately deceased in an Eastern town, that he was a Mason, Odd-fellow, and member of the Grand Army, United Workmen, American Legion of Honor, Royal Arcanum, Knights of Honor, at least two clubs, and of a company of light infantry, and it is added several other societies. Think of the time to be taken by a man who should fulfill his obligations in so many organizations! Yet this is the way the mania for orders is using up a great many men in our day. Be moderate, brethren. We cannot all belong to everything that is going. Besides, some of us need to be alone once in a while, and some of us need to be at home with wife and children, and the church has a paramount claim.

WHENCE COMES CIVIL AUTHORITY?

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

Special emphasis ought to be given to the fact that civil authority is from God. There are three lines of proof, the natural, scriptural and historical.

1. That civil authority comes from God is clearly taught in the nature of things. The common doctrine is that power is lodged in the people. This is unsafe. To-day the people shout, "Hosanna," to-morrow they cry, "Crucify Him." Is it not true. Can I employ a man to exercise the functions of civil office on my behalf on the same principle that I engage him to plough or reap? In other words, has every man the same natural right to wield the powers of magistracy at pleasure, that he has to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness? It is evident that he must have this power in himself, else he cannot delegate it to another. If we possess this power it must be in our nature or our relationship.

Are the "due indices" of rightful civil authority found in our natures? Man is a social being, and if they reside in his nature they must be in the principles of sociality. But do the principles of sociality suggest the idea of authority any more than gregariousness in a flock of geese? Suppose they did, who is to rule? Who will define the powers of the ruler? The ideas of sociality and authority are separate and distinct as day from night. The one could never suggest the other. Sociality indicates equality. All are conscious that there is no logical connection, and all intuitively decide that there is no natural connection. Authority is not lodged in, nor does it spring from our nature. (See "Our National Obligation," a prize essay.)

Then are the "due indices" of rightful civil authority found in our relationship? It is not in parentage, for that ceases at maturity. Besides the state is over the family. It is not personal superiority. Froude says, "the strong have a natural right to rule." But do they? "The weak have a natural obligation to submit to the strong?" But have they? Might does not make right. It is not dependence. A physician exercises a supervision over his patient, but that is not civil authority. Children may dictate the diet, the rest and the exercise of an invalid father, but that does not invest them with civil authority. It is not brain power. A man's gifts may secure respect and esteem, but not obedience. It is not the social compact. In that case all who have not signed the compact are free. It must be submitted every generation. Moreover, we can join a voluntary association or not, just as we choose, but we no more will our connection with civil society than the hand does with the body. Furthermore, we can withdraw from a voluntary association at pleasure, but this option is not granted in civil matters.

But there is one other consideration. Government has the power of life and death. This does not reside in the individual. No man has a right to take away his own life, much less to employ another to do it for him. Sixty millions of people have not the right to take away the life of a criminal. How then can they delegate a power which they do not possess?

The only possible solution is, power comes from God. The wisest and best political philosophers of Greece and Rome recognized this trust. Minos, the lawgiver of Crete, claimed to have received his laws from Jupiter. His father, Lycurgus, the Spartan lawgiver, claimed the authority of the oracle of Apollo at Delphi, and Numa claimed to have been instructed by Camena, or the Nymph Egeria. Layard's explorations in Nineveh and Babylon have brought to light ancient records engraved upon the rocks representing their emperors prostrate before the gods. Wilkinson says the Egyptians thought that religion and the state were so interwoven that one could not exist without the other. The Mohammedans thought they were so intimately connected that it mattered little what became of the state which they regarded as the body, provided religion, which they regarded as the soul, were preserved. The Indian races regarded religion as the mother of politics. The emperor of China is regarded as the viceregent of the supreme deity. Annually he keeps a feast. Three days are spent in solitary meditation. Then he comes forth in his official robes, attended by a great company with banners and music, and enters the temple, and while the sacrifice is being offered, rolls himself in the dust and utters words most disparaging to himself and most exalting to the deity, in token of his submission to the eminence of heaven. Among the Hindoos, "Brahma is accredited as the father of legislators and the author of the Vedas." "In Thibet, Buddha is perpetually incarnate in the person of the Grand Lama, who dispenses the temporal power by consecration, as the Pope of Rome did for several centuries."

Plutarch said: "There has never been a state of atheists. If you wander over the earth, you may find cities without walls, without king, without mint, without theatre or gymnasium; but you will never find a city without God, without prayer, without oracle, without sacrifice. Sooner may a city stand without foundations, than a state without belief in the gods. This is the bond of all society and the pillar of all legislation." All this clearly indicates that there is an ineradicable conviction in the human soul that civil authority originates in the Higher Power, and it is only in recognizing this fact that conscientious submission can be secured.

2. That civil authority comes from God is distinctly and forcibly taught in the Scriptures. The rod of Moses which he held aloft upon the mount, Aaron and Hur sustaining his hand, while Joshua and the armies of Israel fought the Amalekites in the valley of Rephidim, was a symbol of the sovereignty of God in national affairs. The anointing of the kings of Israel by the prophets of God was the pledge and seal of the authority with which God invested them. In the 82nd Psalm, rulers are called gods, because they are clothed with authority from God and stand as his representatives among men. In Proverbs, wisdom says: "By me kings rule." In Romans 13th, Paul affirms, "rulers are God's ministers." They are the arm of God executing his will upon earth.

3. That civil authority is from God is the verdict of history. Egypt worshiped beasts and became the basest of kingdoms. Nebuchadnezzar was driven from men, and Belshazzar saw the hand recording his doom upon his palace wall, because they gave not God the praise. The Roman legions razed Jerusalem to its foundations and scattered the people, because they rejected the Messiah their King. Alexander's kingdom was divided into four dynasties ere he expired, because it was bound together only by a rope of sand. The Roman Empire grew until her eagles overshadowed all nations. Then she defied the King of kings, and God let loose "the terrible swarming hordes from the Northern hive," who quickly destroyed the empire. So conscious were these "barbarian hordes" of their divine commission to do this that they denominated their thundering legions "The Hammer of the Universe, and the Scourge of God." England accepted the principles of civil and religious liberty and she is to-day the greatest nation on the globe.

The Pilgrim Fathers brought the tree of liberty to America. But on one side was planted the Upas of slavery, on the other side the Upas of secularism. In 1861 God came with the axe of his justice and laid it at the root of the first Upas and cut it down and cast it into the fire. We must now cut down the other Upas and let the tree of liberty grow and fill the land.

DR. CHAMBERS AND PROHIBITION.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter. Isa. 5: 20. In the September number of the Homiletical Review is an article by Talbot W. Chambers, D. D., of New York, in opposition to the prohibition of the liquor traffic. I desire to give it a brief review.

First. The question at issue is not what might have been expedient in other lands and in other ages, but rather what is now demanded for the protection and well-being of society in our land.

In discussing this question we may reasonably conclude that any measure that is approved by the best and wisest people of the land, and most earnestly opposed by the worst, including the great majority of the violators of all law, human and divine, is presumptively right, and ought not to be opposed except for most weighty considerations. Manifestly the great mass of Christians, including nearly all of those who are eminent for piety and learning, do approve of the prohibition of the liquor traffic, and would be glad to see it effectually suppressed. It is equally true that nearly all of the vilest and worst of mankind are as one, in their opposition to this measure. Principles, like men, are known by the company they keep.

The first position taken is, that prohibition is of the nature of a sumptuary law, and is "an abridgement of the natural right of every man to do what he will with his own, provided it works no ill to his neighbor." But the keeping of a dram shop, and the selling of intoxicating drinks does work ill to our neighbor. No fact is better attested, and hence no man has a natural right to engage in such business. But if it is morally wrong to keep a dram shop, it is also wrong to patronize it, and the man who buys of the dramseller becomes a moral partaker of his evil deeds. Prohibitory laws do not forbid the purchase of alcohol for legitimate purposes and in legitimate places, and hence are not sumptuary. They only say that when the sale of strong drink works evil to society such sale shall be suppressed; and that those who would buy for legitimate purposes must go elsewhere to purchase.

Again, he says, prohibition assumes that "any use of intoxicating drinks is a malum in se." It assumes nothing of the kind. Whatever may be true or false about the possible use of alcohol as a beverage, the law only assumes that when and where its sale works an unquestioned evil to society, promotes pauperism, crime and death, then society in self-protection may suppress such sale. No man has a right to establish a dynamite factory in the heart of a great city, because of the danger to life and property. Neither has any one a right to establish a dram shop, and for similar reasons. The question of malum in se is not involved in the case.

Again, he says, prohibition does not prohibit, and cites the State of Maine as an example. But the argument proves too much. If this principle were true, then the laws against gambling and houses of prostitution, which have never had but a partial enforcement in our cities, ought to be repealed. They ought rather to be enforced more perfectly. But even their imperfect enforcement is of incalculable benefit to mankind. But the Maine law is very generally enforced, and so well satisfied are the people of that State that after an experiment of nearly thirty years they voted two to one, to put it into their constitution as an irrevocable law.

Again, he says, "the force and efficiency of law depend on the moral support of the people it is to govern." This is partly true, but constitutes no objection to prohibition. No one doubts that a majority of the people of Kansas, Iowa, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Georgia, Mississippi, Arkansas, North Carolina and South Carolina are in favor of prohibition. It is altogether probable that the large majority of the people of the United States would be glad to see this unholy traffic prohibited. But whether it ought to be prohibited and suppressed has nothing to do with the opinions of the majority. The voice of the people is not the voice of God. It may be impracticable to suppress it until the people so determine; but this has nothing to do with what ought to be their decision.

His fifth objection is that by making prohibition a party question it is drawn down into the dirty pool of politics, and so destroyed in its practical influence. But if prohibition is, as he says, wrong in principle, this is surely no objection, as it will result in bringing it sooner into contempt. If, on the other hand, this is a great moral issue, does any one wish to keep it out of politics for that reason? Are we to have no morality mixed with our politics?

Sixthly, he says, that zeal for prohibitory laws gives men a bad spirit. He affirms what is not true when he says that prohibition "takes the place of moral agencies." The truth is that the men who have been most earnest for prohibition have been the men who were also most earnest in moral suasion, and that while they have sought to suppress the crime of the liquor traffic, they have not been less diligent in preaching against the sin of intemperance.

Seventhly, he argues that the conceded right to regulate the liquor traffic implies no right to prohibit it, and that we ought at least to try a well-regulated license system before demanding prohibition. The learned doctor reminds me of the old lady who when she was confounded by argument out of the Scriptures, replied, "That's where I and Paul differ." Our great jurists all affirm that the right to regulate does imply the right to prohibit. As for trying license, that is just what we have been doing for fifty years. Fifty years ago there were some self-respectful and law-abiding men engaged in the liquor traffic. There are none such now, and we need a different kind of law for their restraint.

His ninth proposition is against the occasional extravagance of prohibitionists, and that it alienates many friends. The objection may be valid so far as extravagance goes, but not as against the object for which we contend.

His last objection is that the advocates of prohibition have made it take the place of Christian character. This is simply not true. We have demanded prohibition for the protection of society, and insisted on religion for the salvation of man. Nor is it true that they "have indulged in an intemperance of speech, as criminal as the crime they wished to extirpate." The blood of no man like Haddock's is on their skirts. Mistakes they may have made, but what class of men are more honorable? Woe unto him that traduces them.

THE LABOR PARTY.

We give a large space to matter which refers to the Labor party, as far as possible in the words of the most reliable of the leaders. American citizens should understand the facts, and it is only by a patient hearing of both sides that any intelligent verdict can be made up. The vote cast by the Labor party at the late election is a legitimate subject of study. Its most conspicuous characteristics are:

1. It is a party of the cities. Outside of localities where there are shops we find little or no vote. It is said that this feature will soon pass away; that the farmers, who are largely anti-monopolists, will in future vote with the Labor party. This will require one of two things to happen, both of which are extremely improbable. Either Mr. George, the most conspicuous of the leaders, must be retired, and his theory discarded, or the farmers must be expected to vote in favor of dispossessing themselves of the farms they have paid for in whole or in part, and become tenants of the state. He must be able to believe a great deal who can confidently expect the farmers to put themselves in the political attitude that party occupies to-day. In every proper sense the party is a city party, and it will require great modifications to make it otherwise.

2. It is a party which roots itself in secret societies. All the preparations for political action were made in such societies. The voter surrendered himself to the society. So, at least, we are compelled to believe from the professions and declarations made, as well as from the general history of the party. This is mentioned for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that any system which reduces a man to a machine, a mere puppet, is vicious. The caucus system in legislative bodies is an example. It is affirmed that this system is necessary to the maintenance of a party. Just so; and that is one of the reasons for condemning it as vicious. So omnipotent is the party idea—a government by a party as opposed to a government by representatives of the people,—that men do not hesitate to subject their reason, judgment and conscience to the keeping of others. They experience no revolt when the demand is made. They are conscious of no shame when they find that they are voted by party leaders instead of voting their own convictions. While organized parties are a necessity in a free government, they should never make slaves of men. No one can read the average party journal without feeling himself in an atmosphere of party idolatry. The terms expressive of genuine patriotism are sometimes employed, but only the more effectually to bind to the party car. It is one of our worst evils.

It is not therefore a hopeful sign for the new party that it begins its life burdened with party shackles. To emancipate the voter and make him an independent citizen would be a worthy achievement. Then to organize a party around some great principle which can be formulated into a working policy, and which men support because of their convictions and not because their society, or order, or lodge have voted to favor it, is a proper and useful thing to do. Just as there can be sects without sectarianism, there can be parties without partisanship.

3. It voices a discontent and is a protest; but so far as we are advised, it comes before the country with no definite plan for relief. Mr. George has a definite plan. We do not understand the party to have adopted it, but until those who have thought longest and most carefully are able to point out a practicable plan of relief, the party will be at a great disadvantage. There is no doubt that the increase of wealth both from manual labor and from machinery should be more equally distributed. But how can it be done? Until there is a reasonable answer to this question thoughtful people may well be excused from joining the party.

The Prohibition party has always recognized monopoly as an evil, and has made definite demands on the Government, covering definite practical points. But it recognizes as the immediate and pressing need, the removal of that monstrous institution which sucks nine hundred millions of dollars per year into a whirlpool of waste where it is lost for all good uses—nine hundred millions paid for idleness, for disease of body and mind. For it is undeniable that not a dollar spent for intoxicating drink yields a valuable result. Hence the demand is made that a business as really opposed to the public good as organized horse-stealing would be, and yet one which unblushingly assumes to control the Government in its own interest, shall be suppressed. This is a clear-cut issue. Anybody can understand it. The evil is everywhere and pressing. When the evil is pointed out the remedy also is at hand. It appears to us a necessity for a successful party to have a definite plan of relief which will stand the strain of investigation and experiment. The fact that the party are at once successful in electing some officers and representatives will count for much with surface-thinkers, and will go far towards attaching such to the party. The dozen members of the Illinois General Assembly who claim to be in a position to hold the balance of power occupy a most responsible position, and a dangerous one for their party. They are so in haste to get into office, to be invested with authority, that they do not stop to ask what backing they are to have. Unorganized sentiment, no matter how abundant, is as useless for a reform as a pile of iron bars, tubes, bolts, rods and plates would be for a locomotive. If by a master-stroke of legislation they can point out a way to reach their goal it will be a great help to them; but if they fail in this, their very success will be their calamity.—Dr. A. J. Jutkins in the Reason.

THE NEW YORK STRIKE.

A sad story was recited before the committee of the Legislature by the coal handlers on Friday. A topman, that is, one engaged on the track near the chute in unloading the cars, testified by detailed tables of figures that the topmen on the Lehigh pier, Perth Amboy, N. J., earned $484.84 in 1884, $401.98 in 1885, and only $363.08 in 1886. On the Wyoming pier the wheelmen, who wheel coal on vessels in barrows, earned in 1886 $482, and the topmen $333.68. These are the average wages earned per man. Last year the average wages earned on the Westmoreland docks at South Amboy was $14.50 per week of seven working days of thirteen hours each. But the employment is not constant. It is irregular. The men must be on hand at 7 o'clock in the morning, and, after waiting three or four hours, may be dismissed for the day, or may not be put at work until in the afternoon, when they must keep on until far into the night. They are paid only for the hours of work. The average earnings last year were from about $360 to $380. The trimmers who shovel and trim the coal in the holds of vessels have a very hard and unhealthy life. They breathe an air filled with coal dust and are short-lived. Their doctor's bills take about half their wages. Less than eleven years is the average life among them after they begin the work. There is a constant exposure to accidents among all the classes of men on the piers. They wish about $480 a year; would be satisfied with that. In the middle of last October they sent in their requests for relief, accompanied with a scale of wages; on the 25th the companies refused them. The men continued their efforts for the bettering of their condition until January 4th, but meeting with no success then struck work.

The testimony bears all the marks of candor and truthfulness, and awakens pity. The condition of these men should be improved, and by the companies employing them. But why were not these facts given to the public long ago? They should have been made known before the strike. This country and every free country is ruled by public opinion, and that is formed by information. These plain workmen are not to be censured for neglect to tell their hardships, but their leaders are.

The Executive Committee which has been extending the strike would have rendered the men it directs a very much better service if it had published in December the facts and figures given at this late date to a legislative committee. This failure to give information prevails everywhere, in all the appeals of the workmen to the sympathy of their fellow-men. The newspapers professing to advocate and represent the cause of labor, are almost barren of facts relating to the condition of the wage-earners. We have examined them again and again for such information, and obtained next to nothing. The leaders of the unions do not know how to lead. They are not controlled by American opinions. They seem out of sympathy with the methods of a free people. Their action is so unwise, so despotic, obstinate and unfeeling that it is impossible to avoid the conviction that they are animated more by a disposition to exalt their personal importance and to grasp and wield power than to serve the interests committed to their care. The utter disregard of the ordinary means, the proper, reasonable means for creating and moving public opinion comes either from a stupidity and ignorance which disqualify them for leadership or from a contempt for public opinion which is the very essence of despotism and is to be resisted to the utmost.—Christian Intelligencer.

and not the people for the Government, and the Government was given as little power as was possible for the welfare of the people. Thus it was provided so wisely that there should be no connection between, no union of, church and state. But none of the bravest of her governors, none of her statesmen or philosophers, ever thought or meant by that secure partition that religion in the people should be disparaged or placed at a disadvantage. By every consideration it was a line of reservation for the people and for their good. Religion must flourish from the hearts, minds, and souls of the people. Government takes care of the National interests, leaving to conscience and manhood the reservation that the people should be free. Religion takes care of the people and makes them freemen, faithful to God and society. So long as these energies are not suppressed, the people will be a glorious and free people.

ENCOURAGEMENT FOR THE CONGRESS.

Endorsements of the coming Congress are numerous and everything indicates an enthusiastic and large gathering. The plan of having fifteen 30-minute speeches, each on a single phase of the secret lodge question, to constitute as many chapters in a book for future reference and study, is meeting with universal approval. The secretary of the committee of arrangements is doing his utmost to perfect details and secure the ablest talent possible for addresses and papers.

Accompanying Bro. Stratton in his visits to some of our city pastors, we met only God-speeds in the work. One faithful worker who has gathered a large congregation, mostly of foreign birth and their descendants, said, "I don't know what to do, my people seem to have a perfect craze for these societies. They used to work and plan for the Sunday-school and the church, but now it's the lodge and the union. I am greatly troubled over this matter, and will do all I can to help on your work."

This is an index to a feeling already become quite general among the pastors of churches composed largely of members from the industrial population. They are "troubled on every side." Something they feel must be done, but just what is not clear to all. These pastors and the general public are in a condition to consider any plan which promises aid in the solution of this question, which they are forced to consider. The united wisdom of a large body of Christians, representatives of all branches of the church of Christ, met in one place and filled with the Holy Spirit, ought to give forth utterances that would shed a flood of light on this difficult problem. Can it be doubted that such a conference will be a great and lasting benefit to the church of Christ. To make it a grand success the churches and other bodies named by the committee must respond by delegates and sustain the movement by their united and most importunate prayers. Read again the call by the committee and the important notice accompanying it, and do not delay to comply with their very proper request.

REFORM NEWS.

WORK IN THE OLD NORTH STATE.

Goldsboro and its Churches.—New Bern and its Recollections of Dr. Walsh.—Old Beaufort Welcomes the N. C. A. Agent.—A Dangerous Ferry.—How the Knights of Labor Work for Colored Lodges.

NEW BERN, N. C., Feb 2, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Goldsboro, N. C., I found to be a pleasant little city of about 8,000 inhabitants, and unlike the other towns, comparatively new, having been built since the Weldon railroad, which passes through, and takes its cotton to Norfolk. A lively and moderately fertile country around it is devoted to cotton, corn and rice, which from here to the coast become an important crop.

The pastor of the colored Presbyterian church, Rev. C. Dillard, was a student of Howard University in 1882, when I lectured there. He also heard Bro. Stoddard in the City Hall in Washington. He was convinced that secret societies are wrong in principle and his experience in pastoral work has deepened his convictions. He introduced me to Miss Louisa Dorr, a member of the Society of Friends from Massachusetts, who is superintendent of the colored schools of the city, and who expressed her hearty sympathy. So also did Prof. Stevens, who had known Sam'l D. Greene in Boston. We also visited Rev. A. R. Williams, for many years pastor of the colored Baptist church in that city. He purchased his freedom before the war, went North and obtained an education at Rome, N. Y. He is quite well informed on the general subject of secret societies, but had never seen the Cynosure. He said he would be glad to have me address his people. It was arranged that I should speak to the teachers and pupils of the schools at 11 A. M. I did so and had excellent attention. I could not remain longer, and so left at 5 P. M. for this city. I visited all of the seven grades of the colored schools of Goldsboro and was impressed with the able and excellent manner in which they are conducted, but also with the great need of larger and better school buildings.

I reached New Bern at 8 P. M., and stopped at the Gaston House. This is one of the oldest cities of the State, was settled first by the Swiss and named New Bern, after their own city. It was captured by Burnside, in March, 1862, and was for a time occupied by the A. M. A. but afterwards given up. I called on Rev. A. A. Scott, pastor of the colored Presbyterian church, who received me cordially and expressed his hearty sympathy in our work. He is a graduate of Atlanta University, and has been here eight years. He took me to see Rev. C. A. Smith, pastor of the A. M. E. Zion church, who has the largest colored congregation in the place. I am invited to preach in the Presbyterian church next Sabbath morning and in the A. M. E. Zion church at night.

I also called on Mr. N. S. Richardson, the printer who formerly published Dr. Walsh's Anti-masonic paper in this city. He said the paper never had more than 500 or 600 subscribers, and lost its distinctive character when Dr. Walsh died, and it passed into other hands. He expressed his hearty sympathy with our work. I go (D. V.) to-night to Beaufort, N. C., and expect to return here on Saturday.

I left New Bern for Beaufort (36 miles south-east) at 8:30 P. M. and reached Morehead City, the terminus of the railroad, at 11 P. M. From here we must pass three miles over the water in a sailboat. The fog was so dense that a passage was impossible and we stayed at Morehead till morning. At 9 A. M. we began to feel our way across. We passed near Ft. Macon, but did not see it, and at 10:30 were at the ancient town of Beaufort, a pleasant village of 2,500 people.

There is here a fine harbor of deep water, and under other influences it would have become an important place. It has scarcely grown any for fifty years. The little old court-house looks like a relic of antiquity, and there are no fine structures here except the monuments in the cemetery, which indicate that at least there have been some people of wealth and culture. Nevertheless it is a pleasant place. The water that nearly surrounds it is as clear as crystal. The surf that breaks on the outside of the low islands makes a perpetual roar, and toward the southeast the great Atlantic stretches before you. There are two large hotels, and, some months ago, a larger one was swept away by the sea. The people are mostly fishermen, and it is both a summer and winter resort for invalids. Beautiful groves of live oaks are everywhere about the town, and the streets are finely shaded with oaks and elms.

Rev. M. Jenkins is pastor of the Congregational church, and has charge of the colored schools of the town. He received me cordially, and arranged for me a meeting on the evening of the 3d. The attendance was very good, and the attention was excellent. The meeting was opened by a Congregational minister from Connecticut, who is agent for the American Missionary Association, and wears conspicuously a Masonic pin! He listened with others to my talk and I hope was benefited.

This morning I called on Rev. J. B. Small, pastor of the A. M. E. Zion church. He is a native of Barbadoes, West Indies, and a man of culture. He said he was decidedly opposed to all secret societies, but had known nothing of the work of the N. C. A. He purchased a copy of "Freemasonry Illustrated," and was glad to get our tracts and the Cynosure.

At the hotel I met Judge C. R. Thomas, formerly member of Congress from this district. He said he had never joined any secret society, and was opposed to the whole system. He subscribed for the Cynosure on trial. I forgot to add that Beaufort is a prohibition town, and the law seems well enforced.

GOLDSBORO, N. C., Feb. 7.—I left Beaufort under some difficulties. The delightful weather was suddenly followed by a violent storm of wind and rain, and three miles of water passage was not pleasant. Nevertheless, two boatmen took me over to Morehead City in a sailboat, which several times ran into the sandbars and marshes, and was nearly upset. Finally my feet were safely on the end of the pier, and with much difficulty I walked a mile to the hotel. Next morning at five o'clock I was on the train for New Bern, which we reached at night, and I enjoyed a breakfast and needed rest.

On Sabbath morning I preached in the new and tasteful colored Presbyterian church, Rev. A. A.

Senator Evarts, in an address before the Baltimore Young Men's Christian Association the other day, said: "Our whole political system was based upon the idea that Government is for the people,

Scott, pastor. He was away, but his elders and deacons showed me every attention. In perhaps no other colored congregation in the city is there so much intelligent piety, and in no other is so little of the secret lodge influence. What I said on that subject seemed to be heartily accepted.

At 7 p. m. I went to St. Peter's, the A. M. E. Zion church. This is a fine new building, neatly finished and furnished, and with a seating capacity for 1,500. The pastor is an Odd-fellow, who joined the lodge to do good to others, and has always been in doubt about it. The Presbyterian pastor, and one other minister were present, together with 400 or 500 people. More would have been there but for the rain. I spoke an hour from Eph. 5: 11, 12. I had good attention, though I was aware that three-fourths of all that were before me belonged to some secret order. The pastor, Rev. C. H. Smith, thanked me for my faithful words, and said he was convinced. The Presbyterian minister promised to do what he could in furtherance of our work, and I cannot but think that some good seed has been sown.

Violets and other spring flowers are appearing, and the willows are visibly green.

RALEIGH, N. C., Feb. 9.—On Monday night, the 7th, I reached the pleasant and hospitable home of Bro. C. H. Ellis at Dudley, N. C., who is joined with his excellent wife in teaching a large colored school, and who also preaches to a Congregational church under the patronage of the A. M. A. They received me most kindly and told me that there was to be a lecture in their church on the Knights of Labor that evening by an officer in the order. We all attended and found a house full, mostly colored, who listened to a presumably honest, but much misinformed and prejudiced speaker. He made exaggerated statements of the encroachments and oppressions of capital, and said the only remedy was in organization as Knights of Labor. He said the order had never originated a strike, nor had they ever counseled or committed violence; but when laborers were thrown out of employment, they paid them the same wages they had received while employed. He reviewed the principles of the Knights, and insisted especially that the government should take possession of the railroads, and that all millionaires should be legislated out of existence. The speech was taking and suited an ignorant people who earn small wages. The idea of better wages for less work, or even no work at all, was very congenial. He told them they had simply to meet and raise not less than $20, and he would come and organize them. Other remarks were made by both white and colored men, and at a late hour they separated, feeling quite sure they had found a remedy for all their troubles.

Notice was given that next night a lecture would be given on secret societies in general and the Knights of Labor in particular. Supposing it to be in the same line, there was on the next night a full house, nearly the same persons that had listened the night previous. I spoke for more than an hour, dwelling on the general objections to all secret orders and especially to secret labor organizations. Nearly all seemed surprised, some seemed bewildered, and many convinced that the entire lodge system was evil. A Freemason attempted a brief reply, but it was evident that it had little influence. Bro. Ellis heartily endorsed my statements and it is quite probable that no secret lodge will be formed in that community. I go to Charlotte, N. C., and thence to South Carolina. H. H. HINMAN.

OHIO NOTES.

ST. CLAIRSVILLE, O., Feb. 10, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I pause after a little walk of some seven miles at the home of our old friend A. J. McFarland and will endeavor to briefly chronicle a few items that may be of interest.

I have received several letters via the Columbus office as usual, this week, but not nearly as many as should have come in. There are a number who are indebted to me for their papers who agreed to send the money before this. Some doubtless forget their agreement. Please, friends, be as prompt as you can, and don't put me to the trouble and expense of writing to you.

I am assured by Rev. J. M. Wylie, of Frazesburg, Muskingum Co., that my work at that point has not been in vain. He writes requesting me to return and speak at Dresden, a place near by. I take the liberty to copy a little of his letter: "Your lectures here have caused quite a stir. I have understood that some man at Dresden is ready to bet $50 that you will not lecture there, and that they have threatened if you attempt it to carry you out." I shall try to go to Dresden, as soon as convenient. I have never felt the effect of any Masonic arguments; perhaps here will be a chance. They certainly need a little Anti-masonry there to wake the people up.

It is said Wendell Phillips was once giving an anti-slavery lecture, when some one in the crowd threw a rotten egg and hit him on the cheek. He paused, took his handkerchief and mildly said while wiping his cheek, "I have always contended that pro-slavery arguments were very unsound."

I was greatly disappointed in finding Rev. W. G. Waddle, of New Athens, away from home. Appointments were made for lectures for the past three nights in this vicinity, however. The attendance was not what it would have been had the roads been better and rain less.

Mr. Albert Lee, a man who belongs to the Presbyterian church in New Athens, in which I spoke, stated to the audience that he had sat in the Grand Lodge and that he saw nothing in Masonry contrary to the Christian religion. When questioned he admitted that Christ was excluded from the Blue Lodge, and did not deny that he was nearly unclothed, haltered and blind-folded when he was entered in the lodge. And yet, this man of at least ordinary intelligence, did not see anything contrary to the Christian religion in Masonry! Surely, none are so blind as those who won't see. More anon.

A SKIRMISH IN WISCONSIN.

Vernon has just been visited by an agent of the Good Templars, by the name of Sible. He lectured very acceptably on temperance two evenings, to good sized audiences. But it did seem to some of us that he was more interested in organizing a lodge than in temperance pure and simple. He made a strenuous effort each evening to get names by personally passing through the audience, yet it was a most signal failure. At the close of his first lecture and before this took place, however, Bro. Farris and I pressed him closely with questions concerning his lodge, and when he tried to bluff us, we took up arms and told him and the audience what we thought of the whole business. He evidently thought he had come to a hard region, and expressed himself as more and more convinced of the necessity of a lodge here; while the fact is we have prohibition in this town this year.

At a donation party we followed up the subject by a public discussion of the following question: "Resolved, that the methods of the secret temperance societies are necessary to the success of that reform." The judges decided in the negative.

It is strange that Christians will stultify themselves and dishonor Christ and his Gospel by going into such societies. Am I to say that the Gospel of Christ delivers the individual and society from all sin except intemperance? But in order that this demon may be cast out, the secret lodge must be organized in connection with the church? We might well be ashamed of such a gospel! But no, "it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." J. B. GALLOWAY.

FATHER CLARK.

MEMPHIS, TENN., Feb. 10, 1887.

Occasionally we are favored by visitors from abroad, but to have a real, live Abolitionist of the olden time let loose among us is an unusual event.

Father Geo. W. Clark, of Detroit, the old "Liberty Minstrel," came to Memphis after several weeks of singing and speaking at Knoxville. Broken down by labor and traveling, his first effort here was followed by a severe bronchial attack, which sent him to bed, and to close confinement for a week. Rallying again, he came forth, and has held some six or eight meetings in several different churches and at the Le Moyne School.

Naturally enough, he is full of the memories of the past, when slavery was dominant here at the South, and Abolitionists were as unpopular at the North as are now the advocates of anti-secrectism everywhere. He is delighted to witness what God hath wrought, and our people heard him gladly.

It is wonderful to all how at seventy-five years of age his voice is still clear and musical, and when at his touch the organ responds to his favorite theme, "The good time coming," we look upward, as he does while he sings the cheerful refrain, and his heart seems young and hopeful as that of a youth of twenty, rather than a veteran of more than three-score and ten.

His principal themes have been the history of slavery and freedom, and the great temperance reform, not failing, however, to earnestly and tenderly warn the people against the entire system of oath-bound secrectism. His good humor, his quaint songs, and kindly spirit, secure respect and confidence, in spite of prejudiced feelings and opinions. It should also be mentioned that the tobacco habit, so dreadful in its almost universal practice here, came in for a large share of Father Clark's attention, and there is reason to believe that a number of persons have been persuaded to give it up.

Yesterday he took leave of our city to go to Pine Bluff, Ark., where with Bro. Lewis Johnson (Presb.) and Rev. Woodsmall, Baptist Superintendent of Missions, he expects to attend several associations and other appointments.

Should Father Clark decide to remain South for a more extended tour eastward through Mississippi and Georgia, I would bespeak for him the confidence of the pastors and churches. B. A. IMES.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OPEN DOORS FOR THE MESSAGE OF REFORM.

CINCINNATI, O., Feb. 3, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—On last Sabbath morning I preached in the Poplar St. Presbyterian church, Rev. J. C. White, pastor, on the dominion of Christ. They have here 175 members and 350 scholars in the Sabbath-school. Recently Bro. White observed his 81st birthday. He answered 500 letters of congratulation and received a number of valuable presents. He was school companion of the poet Whittier who is two years his junior. He is second cousin to Senator Hoar of Massachusetts, and his son-in-law is nephew to the Hon. James G. Blaine. He has had a remarkable career. He has held successful pastorates in Providence, Cleveland, Chicago and Cincinnati. His eye is not dim nor his natural force abated. He delights in service still. In the evening I preached in the Union M. E. Chapel, Rev. L. M. Hagood, pastor. There are 700 members here and a Sabbath-school of 750. The house was crowded. The colored people receive reformation principles with great enthusiasm. Bro. Hagood is a second Sam Jones. He is carrying on successful revivals at this time.

On Monday evening I lectured before the students of the Pulte Medical College. Homeopathic instruction is given here. They have the largest and best appointed building for its purposes in the country. They have 60 students, and they are the most orderly and respectable set of students in any medical college in the city. They gave undivided attention, and after the lecture gave a most hearty vote of thanks. Dr. J. D. Buck, Dean of the faculty, very kindly made all arrangements for us.

On Thursday evening I preached in the 4th Presbyterian church, Rev. R. H. Leonard, pastor. After service we went over to St. Paul's M. E. church where Francis Murphy was holding his Gospel temperance meeting. He insisted that I "give them a word of blessing," which was as follows: "I believe in Gospel temperance. I believe the Gospel will save from all sin. It will save the drunkard. Bro. Murphy is sounding the key-note of the Gospel. You remember the fable of the debate between the sun, frost and wind as to how the plaid could be removed from the traveler. The wind blew and he held it tightly. The frost came and he drew it closely about him. The sun poured down his burning heat and he threw it aside. It was too hot. So you may preach the terror of the law and the sinner clings to the cloak of his self-righteousness. You may bring the frosts of divine judgments and he wraps himself up. But let the love of the Sun of Righteousness be poured down and he throws it aside. The love of Christ constraineth us. God bless Bro. Murphy and his work. But suppose all his converts and the temperance people in the United States were to put their heads together. They would be in the majority. We believe in majorities ruling. This is not a nation of drunkards. It is a temperate nation. Let a temperate nation declare in her supreme law that this is a fact and that her government shall be administered on temperance principles."

On last Sabbath afternoon a meeting was held in the first Presbyterian church for the purpose of inaugurating a Presbyterian City Mission. Mr. Thomas McDougall has given $4,000 for that purpose. Two missionaries, one English and one German, are to be employed at $1,000 each per year. At the end of two years he believes the work will be so far advanced that its support will be an easy matter. Rev. Geo. P. Hayes, D. D., presided. Mr. McDougall, Rev. J. J. Francis, Rev. Geo. C. Heckman and Rev. W. H. Robertson addressed the meeting. Rev. Robertson is the English missionary. The German has not been secured yet. Bro. McDougall stated that some time ago he had witnessed Rev. Robertson's work in Ireland. Ever since he had been looking for some one to do the same kind of work in our city. A few months since Bro. Robertson came to America and has since been looking for some one who would support him in his work here. This winter the two met and found they were looking for one another. Dr. Hayes said that meeting had been fore-ordained. And so the work is begun. Mr. Geo. T. Howser, Gen'l Secretary to the Y. M. C. A., appeared before the Presbyterian Ministers' Association and laid before them their plans for the new building. It is to be located on the old site S. E. Cor. 6th and Elm sts. Size, 60x90, five stories high. Its cost will be $100,000. They have $15,500 subscribed. Bro. Howser is gathering a fine class of young men about him. He is sure that within one year after the new building is completed their membership will be 2,000. He has been very helpful to me. He opened the way for me at the Work-house, and has called upon me to lead in two of his services in their hall. J. M. FOSTER.

ONE MORE DENVER TESTIMONY.

Professor O. S. Fowler in one of his lectures in Denver last December was speaking of the moral and physical evils that result from the separation of the sexes. He eulogized Horace Mann for resigning a lucrative and honorable position that he might demonstrate practically the successful co-education of the sexes. At the same time he condemned the Y. M. C. A., the convent and the cloister, because each of them excludes one of the sexes.

He then said, "The Freemasons and Odd-fellows do wrong in not admitting women. They know my sentiments and they don't like me a bit. But I don't care whether they like me or not." Then throwing out his right arm in animated gesticulation and snapping his fingers loud enough to be heard all over the house, he exclaimed in a loud voice, "I wouldn't give THAT! for their opinion."

The above is from an eye and ear witness, and as you are publishing the well-defined sayings of notable men against the clans and secret orders we think the independent stand that Prof. Fowler took in Denver, amid Masons and Odd-fellows, is worthy of note with others, for there are too many whose heads are right on this subject but hearts faint to tell it, and we would love to send up every name that is on the Lord's side. Surely those opposed to darkness and secret selfish clans are on the side of God and right. ST. CLAIR ROSS.

AN OPEN LETTER TO FRANK M. FORBUSH, GRAND SECRETARY OF THE HOME CIRCLE GRAND COUNCIL OF MASSACHUSETTS.

DEAR SIR:—A short time ago your circular and paper of documents came to hand. I am told in the circular, "No town in Massachusetts is too small for a Council of the Home Circle. Please read the enclosed documents carefully, after which, if you will get up a charter list in your town you will receive a LIBERAL COMPENSATION for your time and labor."

The first words on your paper of documents are, "the Home Circle is a secret benevolent order." Now, dear sir, I think it would be as impolitic to multiply secret societies at this time, as it would for Pharaoh to have gone to raising frogs, when they were swarming into his bread-troughs.

Not long ago Gov. Oglesby of Illinois had to call out two regiments of soldiers, with forty rounds to each man, to protect a few laborers going to and from their work from the assaults of one secret society. Were I greedy for grandeur or gold, and had not the fear of God before my eyes, I might attempt to get up a charter list in this good old town of Weston. But should I succeed, when I had clutched that liberal compensation I think I would feel some as Judas did when he was sneaking off with those thirty pieces of silver. Three institutions on this earth, God has ordained, the Family, the Church and the State; all else are human inventions. I am sure it is perfectly safe to exert all the power and influence we have for good, in these three, remembering the pattern our Saviour has given us saying of himself, "I ever spake openly in the world, and in secret have I said nothing." Please read Rev. 13: 16, 17, and 14: 9, 10. Now I have resolved not to carry the mark of the beast to the bar of Almighty God. Respectfully yours, INCREASE LEADBETTER.

CALIFORNIA NOTES.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Jan. 29, 1887.

The Cynosure comes to us weekly and we appreciate it highly. After our perusal it is frequently sent to some neighbor. It is with pleasure that I recall the events of your visit with us, and our stroll through "Chinatown." The "high-binders" still pursue their nefarious business. Only this week three policemen who were rescuing an enslaved Chinese girl were followed by an armed mob of them and one policeman came near losing his life. Rev. Bro. Masters, superintendent of the Chinese Mission, was the one who secured her freedom. She was taken to the Mission.

The Chinese here in San Jose and vicinity furnish a great deal of business for the courts. Yet, be it said to the credit of the race, they furnish many examples of frugal industry. In the vicinity of the University of the Pacific (which I am now attending) many Chinese are making comfortable livings. There is very little now said concerning boycotting. The attention of most localities seems now engaged in home and city improvements.

Los Angeles has had a boom in real estate for some time past. San Jose has now aroused, and backed by the best natural advantages of climate and soil proposes to make known as thoroughly as possible her great attractions. The boom is here. So much for real estate. While that excites the minds of many the cause of Christ does not languish in many hearts and minds. That, too, commands attention, but not to the extent that many who are deeply engrossed in the things of this world will one day wish it had done.

There are near three hundred and fifty students in attendance here, the largest number ever enrolled. Prohibition sentiment is strong among the large majority of students.

A petition praying the legislature for a "Sunday law" has recently been circulated. The Christian element of our State hope to secure their wishes from the present legislature. But two light rains have up to this time blessed our valley this season. More is hoped for in the future. L. R. REID.

DISCUSSIONS AND VOTES.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 5, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Perhaps a few words concerning the "Arkansas Baptist College" will be interesting to your readers. This is a missionary school for colored people, and one main feature of it is the training of Baptist ministers for practical effective work. Rev. H. Woodsmall, General Missionary for the Southwest for the Am. Baptist Home Mission Society, is spending the winter here working up the interests of the school. He has a good class of ministers under his charge, taking a course in practical Bible study.

Rev. J. H. Garnett, recently of Morgan Park, Chicago, was appointed president of the school by the A. B. H. M. Society. He has an assistant, Mrs. Miller, in the literary department of the day school. Besides this I have a night school that is doing good work. Yesterday afternoon, during the hour appointed for discussions and general exercises, the question was discussed, "Resolved, that secret societies do more harm than good." There was much interest manifested and many of the ministers took part in the debate. At the close of the discussion a vote was taken on the merits of the question and nearly every one present voted against secret societies. All those connected with the school as teachers are firm against this and all other evils that are degrading our nation. Yours truly,

WARREN H. RISHLE.

PITH AND POINT.

THE BANNER TOWN IS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

On Saturday, Jan. 22, Rev. H. H. Hinman lectured here on secret societies, and again on Monday. To your readers he needs no introduction or commendation. I was heartily pleased with the manner in which he treated his subject. So far we have succeeded in keeping all secret societies out of our churches and out of our neighborhood. We are very grateful to Bro. Hinman for his visit, and to the good people in the North for sending him. I wish every colored person in the South could hear him.—ALFRED CONNET, McLeansville, N. C.

A FAIR OFFER—WHY NOT ACCEPTED?

Last October I met a brother Simpson of Garfield, Washington Territory, who told me of an offer he made four years ago to Elder Carnes of Colfax, who is engaged in building up a Baptist College at Colfax. The offer was this: forty acres of land at Garfield, then worth $1,000, now $2,500, provided he would get $9,000 more to go with it within five years, the college to be built at Garfield or elsewhere. Also, that it should be a Christian school, and that no atheist, infidel, deist, Roman Catholic, Mason, or Odd-fellow, should ever be engaged to teach in it. Otherwise the land to revert to the donor. I talked with Elder Carnes frequently about the school, and they were much in need of funds, but he never hinted of this to me, nor do I think he has ever tried to secure the donation as offered; nor do I think he ever will. I wish I may be mistaken.—J. H. HUNTING, Russell, Kans.

MANY FRIENDS WHEN YOU LOOK FOR THEM.

I have been talking and enquiring among the people here where I live, and it is quite surprising to find how many there are who oppose the secret lodges in sentiment although not much informed upon the subject. However, this is not the case with all. One man, a former resident of Birmingham, Iowa, is a staunch and well-informed Anti-mason, having heard many of the leading lecturers and workers in the cause.—JAS. P. ROGERS, Bijou Hills, Dak.

CHEER UP, BROTHER! REMEMBER ELIJAH.

Oh, that some of Christ's dear soldiers in this work would call on me, as they pass through these parts, and make this a stopping place. If they could, it would so refresh my spirit, and encourage me in future duty. But, oh! to be only a sentinel all the dark night all alone,—for so it seems to me—and none to take my place at the second or third watch of the night. This requires greater courage and faithfulness than on the battle field with comrades on either side to cheer you in the strife. When will the good time come when I shall be relieved, and rest a little while, while others take my place (which it seems to me I so poorly fill after all) and bear public witness against this subtle evil of lodgery.—L. D. BROWN, Morancy, Ind.

IS THE POLE STAR GETTING OUT OF PLACE?

The course of the Cynosure upon the subject of secret societies, temperance, and morality is all that could be desired. Its stand upon the subjects of Chinese immigration, the Indian question, woman suffrage, and protection to American industries is utterly untenable; and it will never have, nor deserve, a large circulation until its position with reference to these subjects is changed. A religious paper is always supposed to be ready to discuss religious subjects. But during the past year the Cynosure's columns were always open to any one who had anything to say in favor of substituting the first day of the week for the Sabbath that God appointed, but could not admit any reply. In this matter the action of the Cynosure was neither candid nor honest.—EDWARD A. WASHBURN, Denver, Col.

NOTE.—In discussing public questions, as tariff, Chinese, Indians, etc., the Cynosure is on the side of eternal justice and righteousness, if human judgment can determine it. So we believe our position good, and that the time when "ever the truth comes uppermost" will prove it so. Bro. W., unfortunately for the value of his last objection, is not often in the Cynosure office, and is not aware of the articles on both sides the Seventh-day question we send back; and his memory is at fault also, or he would recall several, both for and against, which appeared in 1886.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON IX.—February 27, 1887.—Destruction of Sodom.—Gen. 19: 15-36.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Escape for thy life.—Gen. 19: 17.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

From the Christian, Boston.

The angels of God had gone on to do their mission. There were three personages who appeared to Abraham, but only two came to Lot. One tarried with Abraham, and he is called the Lord, or Jehovah. The others went down to do their solemn work. Lot, true to his instincts and his early training, was not forgetful to entertain strangers. They entered his house and he made them a feast. But it was Sodom, and the baseness of a debauched and drunken people could only be restrained by the mighty power of the angelic messengers. And when the morning arose, the angels hastened Lot, saying, "Take thy wife and thy two daughters which are here, lest thou be consumed in the iniquity of the city." Streaks of dawn were on the eastern clouds. The last day of Sodom had come, and the angels stand hurrying and hastening Lot to escape. And while he lingered, hesitating, and at the prospect of leaving his friends and relatives, stupefied perhaps with horror at the thought of the impending doom. While he lingered, the men laid hold upon his hand and upon the hand of his wife and his two daughters, the Lord being merciful unto him, and they brought him forth and set him outside the city. When they were outside the city, He said, "Escape for thy life." Who is He? Perhaps the same one we read of in the previous chapter, He with whom Abraham pleaded. "Look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain." There must be no lingering, no looking back. Escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed. There is no safety on Sodom's level. Lot made the mistake of his lifetime when he left Abraham and came down toward Sodom. He must leave that whole region, so fair, so fertile, and so well watered,—he must flee to the mountain and escape for his life. And Lot said, "Oh, not so, my Lord." Abraham was praying for others, Lot was foolishly praying for himself. I cannot escape to the mountains. Behold this city is near to flee unto, and it is a little one, oh, let me escape there. Is it not a little one? and my soul shall live. This little city of Bela or Zoar was probably among the foot hills, a little above the plain, but not far off on the mountain. Lot was old; his wife and two daughters were with him. The journey might be dangerous, and it was hard climbing the steep and barren hills. Evil might overtake them. Robbers or wild beasts might destroy them. He had no faith to prompt him. He was a crushed and broken old man. Zoar was a little city. It was not a great thing, he thought, to ask that it might be spared as a refuge for him. "See, I have accepted thee." And so he was permitted to tarry there, though it is evident that he was not satisfied or safe, and finally decided to go on. The sun was risen when Lot entered Zoar, and then the Lord rained fire and brimstone upon Sodom and Gomorrah, and overthrew those cities and all the plain. It would seem that burning brimstone fell from the sky, and the region being filled with sulphur and bitumen, the destruction became all the more horrible. His wife looked back from behind him, longing for her beautiful city home, wondering what would be the fate of the place, and perhaps wishing that she had never left it. Suffocated by the sulphurous steam, the spray of salt and sulphur rain seems to have encrusted her whole body, so she became a pillar of salt. Anything left near the Dead Sea now speedily becomes encrusted with saline particles, and such pillar-like lumps are still to be seen on the southwestern borders of the Dead Sea. The fire descending from heaven may have been met by a bituminous petroleum eruption, inflammable gases bursting forth from the riven earth, and these with the petroleum, that still exists about the plains of Sodom,—liberated perhaps by an earthquake or a thunderbolt—would produce such a destruction as is here described.

Lot's wife looked back. How many there are who have partly escaped the snares and sins of the world, and yet have looked back. How woeful is their apostasy, how terrible their doom, and how solemn the warning of the Saviour, "REMEMBER LOT'S WIFE." May we add another warning, especially to the businessman, REMEMBER LOT!

From Peloubet's Notes.

THE ANGEL'S WARNING. As God sent his angels to Lot, and one of them was the Lord himself, so God sends angels to warn us. Chief among them is Jesus Christ himself, with his loving heart, his message from God, his perfect example, and his cross, showing more than all else the danger of sin, and the desire of God for the salvation of men. Then his Word, the sweet and hallowed Sabbath days, prayer meetings, Sunday schools, teachers, friends, God's providence, joys, afflictions, the influences of the holy Spirit, the voices of our own consciences, all are angels sent from God, entreating us to escape from our lives.

STAY NOT IN ALL THE PLAIN. It is not enough to go outside of the walls of the Sodom of flagrant acts of sin, open crimes, and irreparable and degrading vices; but we must not stay in all the plain. We must be saved from all sin, and from the love of it, from that state of the heart which is the soil in which sin grows and flourishes. (1) Those stay in the plain who cling to secret sins. (2) Those who break off bad habits, but do not repent of all sin. (3) Those who are sorry for the punishment of sin, but not for sin itself. (4) Those who rest in good resolutions and intentions, without keeping them. (5) Those who rest in conviction of sin, in a general seriousness and thoughtfulness, without giving the whole heart to God. (6) Those who rest in religious forms and ceremonies. (7) All who live on the border land, or in the twilight, of Christianity, but do not believe with all their heart in the Lord Jesus as their Saviour and their Lord.—P.

LOT'S ESCAPE. Lot was saved so as by fire, but he lost everything for the sake of which he had gone to Sodom. His wife and some of his children were destroyed; the others were contaminated. And yet no doubt it was largely for their sakes that he pitched his tent toward the fertile fields of Sodom. He lost his home, his flock and herds, and all his property. He escaped, a poor, forlorn, seemingly broken-down man. The poorest investment he ever made was in property in Sodom. There are not a few Lots still living, who have pitched their tents toward Sodom, who have indulged in doubtful practices, and have been saved so as by fire (1 Cor. 3: 11-15), escaping themselves, for at heart they were good men, but have lost all they hoped to gain by their course.—P.

PRAGMATICAL.

1. We have another illustration of the blessing of true hospitality. Like Abraham, Lot also entertained angels unawares, and received a heavenly blessing.

2. Those who have become hardened in sin refuse to believe God's warnings, and refusing, perish.

3. Whosoever voluntarily and for selfish reasons makes the ungodly his companions, will become contaminated, no matter how strong or how good he was.

4. Ver. 15. There is no way of escape from destruction except by leaving sin. Salvation is from sin, not in sin.

5. This leaving sin and hastening to the Saviour requires great earnestness and self-denial. "Strive to enter in at the strait gate."

6. In escaping for our life, we should take our families with us.

7. Vers. 16, 17. God sends his angels to warn and entreat and help us to escape,—the Bible, the Holy Spirit, afflictions, joys, conscience, teachers, friends, examples.

8. "Stay not in all the plain." In the outworks of sin, in good resolutions, in religious forms, in general morality, in vague hopes, in partial reformations, in anything short of Mount Calvary, Jesus Christ and him crucified.

9. It is possible to be saved so as by fire, losing most that our lives have sought, property, friends, dear ones, because our lives have been largely built of the "wood, hay, stubble" of worldliness, instead of the "gold, silver, precious stones" of heavenly usefulness and character.

10. Vers. 18-21. We sometimes make most foolish prayers, insisting on what seems best to our short sighted vision, instead of trusting all things to God, who knows best. Faith does not so much insist on any particular good, as to commit all things to the love and wisdom of our heavenly Father.

11. Vers. 24, 25. It is necessary, when the wicked are beyond hope of reformation, and are only a leaven of evil in the world, that they should be destroyed. Their punishment is both justice and mercy.

12. The wicked have within them the elements of their own punishment,—their moral natures, memory, conscience, bad character, remorse. These are often dormant till God's outward punishment sets them aflame. As Milton's Satan says, "Myself am hell."

13. Ver. 26. It is a terrible thing to backslide, to look back regretfully at worldly pleasures, and linger along instead of hastening to salvation.

14. The value of a good character. Who would buy real estate in Sodom?

15. Our treasures should be those which fire cannot destroy.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monumental quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition fully attested by J. O. Deansburg, Past Master Unity No. 19, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Finney on Masonry. The character, aims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has attracted the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1838. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-ry; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

National Christian Association,
221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 307 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan. "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan; Times; and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees. 524 pages.....$2.00.

In the Collar; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secrecy in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are transformed and perverted by the baneful influence of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not need to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. H. B. of the Grand Lodge of the State of Ohio. A history of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft. The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $15.00. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen, $7.50.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By F. R. Romaine, Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago. It contains the correct and "standard" ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, and the manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. Tables of Contents: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, The Washington Masonic Lodge, and Webster's Denial to Masonry, Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, The Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Signa of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 31, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that General Washington was the only person who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas C. Moore, comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, and others. $1.50 each; per dozen, $17.50.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of the lodge. 338 pages; cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council of the Knights Templar, by Thomas C. Moore, comprising the degree of Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of the Temple. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $0.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscence of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan by Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 35 cents each; per dozen, $3.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees or Masonic obligations, the candidate takes the million horrible oaths. 18 cents each; per dozen, $1.80.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with the above general subject of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting exposure of the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and aims, by Rev. David McBride, Pres. J. Blanchard and Dr. Edward Heintz. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1887.

FALSE LIBERALISM, AND TRUE.

"Thou for my sake at Allah's shrine,
And I at any god's for thine."

This is false liberalism Tom Moore, while lionizing in the United States, turned the heads of half the simpering misses and poetic swains of literary circles by his doctrine in the above distich, though a known and avowed rake and profligate in morals. Hated was to worship Allah for the sake of his mistress, and she worship fire or anything else for him. Such is all false liberalism. Its principle is not the glory of God, but the gratification of self.

On the contrary, Christ's liberalism included Cornelius, a captain in a conquering pagan army, of the band called "The Italian Band." Not, of course, an orthodox Jew, but yet, "A devout man, one that feared God with all his house; which gave much alms to the people and prayed to God always." To him a vision was granted, and an apostle sent.

If there is one Cornelius in all the spirit circles, lecture-ships and squads of New England, though we have met in their conventions when they were in the vale of abolition, we have not been so fortunate as to meet one. "Not one who prayed to God always," "with all his house." We have traveled one hundred miles in Utah, and found each Mormon having a familiar spirit and revelations of his own. We have walked through the Masonic temples in Boston, Philadelphia, and Cincinnati, and have conversed with a thousand Masons; but an instance of consistent, god-fearing, household religion, like that of this heathen Roman centurion, we have not found among them all. "The Lord our God is one Lord" Deut. 6:4. But the lodge, the circle and the papacy are polytheistic, having "lords many and gods many," and what is virtue in the jurisdiction of one, is vice in the realm of another. And since polytheistic paganism is become unpopular by the moral and political meanness of its national and social results, the devil-gods of the old shrines of idolatry have changed their jackets like thieves and burglars, and animate the contraband worships of Christendom, and legions of devils inhabit these self-projected worships, and mesmerize their followers, who

"Wandering upward to the blest abodes

Fear makes their devils weak and hope their gods,
Gods partial, changeful, passionate, unjust,
Whose attributes are rage, revenge and lust."

And "liberalism in belief" covers all these gods and worships with its clouds of incense and dubiety, so that all who "believe in the immortality of the soul and its progressive future," are saints in the liberal calendar, let them hold and practice what they may beside.

But as the woman who is liberal with her love, has no love; so these "liberals" in religion have no true religion; but "wandering out of the way of understanding, they remain in the congregation of the dead."

But we are not to hate liberals, or any other of human kind. Christ did not. The Samaritan was his neighbor, and the "woman of Samaria" was his convert; though he insisted that salvation was of the Jews, who had the oracles and truth of God. Yet his most dire and terrible denunciations were against those who held the truth in unrighteousness and so were blind leaders of the blind.

"AMERICAN GENERAL REFORM PARTY."

We have received with request for our co-operation a manifesto for a new party with the above title. The conception is not a bad one, but the method seems hardly wise. In 1888, if the Prohibition party, which now out-numbers all other reform parties, shall bring forward a candidate who can see and will say that the fuel, bread and commerce of the United States is in danger so long as there is one secret sworn politico-religious league tolerated by our laws, whether called "Masons," "Knights" or any other title drawn from the devil's vocabulary, that candidate will draw to himself the votes of all true intelligent American reformers. But the multitude of political parties now in the field demanding "Reform" seems to indicate that the policy of Satan is to split up reformers into splinters so small, and keep them so separate from each other, that there can be no general flame. Since the American party was formed in 1872, now fourteen years ago, two or three other parties have sprung up with the name "American" in their title. This proves two things: that the name is true, and that it is popular. Our American platform has tinged with its own complexion several other platforms since it was put before the public. The very first article is a platform by itself; that "ours is a Christian, and not a heathen nation, and the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of Civil Government." And this, and this only, is the "American platform;" as Charles Francis Adams at Buffalo (1848), said: "That grand conception of our fathers, a CHRISTIAN COMMONWEALTH."

This is our conception. It gives the Bible to schools, the Sabbath to the laborer, the oath to our courts, chaplains, Thanksgivings and fasts to the people and the nation to God, as against the swarming multitudes of little gods, with each his self-projected worship. We hold ourself ready at all times to unite with any and all reformers on this basis.

Any of our readers who wish to learn about this attempt to organize a new party can do so by addressing S. E. Booth or J. Colvin, Moline, Kansas.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND THE LABORING CLASSES.

The controversy between Archbishop Corrigan and Dr. McGlynn, the deposed priest, will call public attention to the monopolies established by the Romish power, even more than did the defrauding of his Cincinnati flock by Archbishop Purcell, a few years since. McGlynn, as disciple and second of Henry George, has fully accepted his errors respecting national ownership of land. His superiors, though they make out a good case against him for insubordination, are not able to invade his right to private opinion, erroneous though it may be. The George doctrine is of course most obnoxious to Rome.

In its time the Roman Catholic church, in Europe was the largest owner of the soil. From the earliest time to the present, dyng Roman Catholics, to propitiate heaven and condone their sins, have made bequests of land to the church. As the latter never sold its realty, by the end of the sixteenth century it was in possession of the best portion of the soil of the Old World. Henry VIII., in breaking with Rome, took away from the church its landed possessions in the United Kingdom, and every nation in Europe, Catholic as well as Protestant, has since followed his example. The last to seize the land of the church was the Italian kingdom. Hence the position of the papal power has always been a protest against interference with the right of property in land.

A gentleman, formerly well-acquainted for years in Italian and Spanish ports, told us lately that after the accession of Victor Emmanuel to the Italian throne, the government confiscated a large portion of the property held by the Romish church, the total valuation being $400,000,000. This property included many large buildings, convents, etc., which it was found difficult or impossible to sell and were therefore used for government purposes, as barracks, custom houses, etc. At the time of confiscation the papal power claimed to own one-third the whole property of Italy, and even now in the Spanish peninsula owns a yet larger proportion. The difficulty of selling the confiscated property was largely increased by the opposition of the priests, who used their influence to deter their congregations and gave out that all these millions of property would some day revert to the pope with a round interest in addition. They thus endeavored to cloud the title to this property and too often succeeded in prejudicing the popular mind.

A remarkable confirmation of the threat of the papal power to recover possession of property it has been compelled to disgorge, is seen in its claim upon immense estates in England with a round interest added, as found in a pretended "History of the Protestant Reformation" by the somewhat famous William Cobbett. In the first volume of the work Cobbett attempts to show that the chief motive of the Reformation was "plunder;" and that the success of the effort "has impoverished and degraded the main body of the people." He does this in a most incoherent and labored manner, ranting at this and that ruler in coarse language; indeed, his grossness renders the book hardly fit for ordinary reading, though it is reissued by an accredited Catholic house in New York. Cobbett himself was notorious both in this country and England during the first quarter of this century. He was several times arrested and fined for his libels on both sides the water, but nothing seemed to check his virulence. In 1819 when he finally returned to England, he took back some of Tom Paine's bones and proposed to canonize the author of the "Age of Reason." His second volume is almost entirely filled with a simple list of the abbeyes, priories, and other properties recovered by the British people from the priests, with their value at the time and their estimated value at the time Cobbett wrote, two centuries later. This "present" value is always twenty times greater than that of the first assessment. He evidently copies from some Roman Catholic record; and, why, it is naturally asked, is such a careful record kept, with both prices put down, the whole filling 236 closely printed pages? Why, unless requisition is sometime hoped for by the priests? This idea of "impoverishing and degrading" a people who had been so diligently farmed by the priests is most original and astonishing.

H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, Boston, now lecturing on religious topics in England, writes to his paper of some of these great establishments which were preserved through the storm of the Reformation. The cathedral at Lincoln he says has stone enough to build fifty respectable meeting-houses, and cost enough to build 500 chapels in India or China, and is after all comparatively valueless for the real work of the Christian church. "Wherever we find," he says, "these vast and majestic structures, from the Egyptian pyramids down, they speak of the poverty of the people and the oppression of their civil and ecclesiastical rulers. And to this day the more magnificent the cathedral, the meaner the homes of the people who worship in them; while those who worship the Lord in plain and inexpensive places, are most likely to have comfortable and happy homes, and occupy positions in every way more desirable."

This is the real picture of poverty and degradation which unscrupulous priests and lying histories, like Cobbett's attribute to the truth which broke against Romanism in the 15th century. What, indeed, may be seen to-day of the poverty and degradation in Roman Catholic countries? In Ecuador there is a church, it is said, for every 150 inhabitants; and ten per cent. of the population are priests, monks, or nuns. The priests control the government in all its branches, and 272 days of the year are observed as feast or fast-days. One-fourth of all the property belongs to the church and seventy-five per cent. of the people can neither read nor write.

If the Henry George movement shall help to disentrail the mind of Catholics respecting the wicked monopolies of Rome it will have done something to compensate the country for the mischief and discontent it has produced by spreading an unsound philosophy.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—The Cynosure wishes to make personal mention of itself. It may hope to do so for the benefit of friendly readers without violence to any rules of propriety or modesty. The following from an exchange is an appreciative notice which any paper might envy, and is all the more valuable because from our noble co-laborer in Christian reform, the Christian Statesman:—"The Christian Cynosure has shown remarkable vivacity and power of late in the advocacy of its difficult and unpopular, but most important cause. We doubt if ever a deserving cause was better served by a journal specially established for the purpose. Great interest has been awakened of late by a series of biographical articles, accompanied by really excellent portraits, a rare thing in newspaper work, and by a series of papers on the times of war and reconstruction, by the Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, one of the heroes of the Kansas struggle for freedom, and for twelve years member of the Senate of the United States. The sketch and portrait of Dr. George B. Cheever, in the issue for December 30, were especially admirable."

—In a private letter Miss Flagg tells a most touching story of animal affection shown by a large Newfoundland dog, Dan, for her lately departed mother. She says: "Even the cat and dog, both great pets of hers, seemed to feel an almost human sense of loss. You know how Dan looks in the picture you have of him, how his eyes sparkle, and how full of life and fun he seems. It was a common remark of people who came to the door while mother was sick, 'How that dog has changed!' He seemed to stand in the shadow of our grief. When mother lay in her casket Dan went with us to take the last look. He caressed the cold, still face and seemed to wonder that she did not speak to him. He refused at first to leave the room, but we coaxed him out. A little while after we missed him. He had slipped back into the parlor and was standing with his fore paws on the casket looking sadly down into it. He stood in that attitude for a moment, then got down of his own accord and with drooped head walked slowly out of the room and never tried to enter it again. It seemed as if he knew that he was taking the last look."

—Pres. H. H. George, of Geneva College, Beaver Falls, Pa., has prepared with much study and care an address on evolution, which he has delivered with great success in different cities in the East, and we should be happy to announce that he was to repeat it at points about Chicago during his visit here to the Christian Congress, March 30th. The Pittsburgh and Philadelphia papers say of this address: "For over an hour he held the closest attention of his audience and made a deep impression." "The different theories of evolution were fairly presented, and in a masterly way overthrown. He presented in an effective manner the great cost of accepting evolution as now advocated. The lecture should be published and widely circulated."

—Bro. George W. Clark, of whom we last heard that he was nearly sick with a cold at LeMoyné Institute, Memphis, has recovered and writes under date of Feb. 9th that he has had large and attentive audiences, especially in Bro. Countee's large fine church. He is much interested in the Memphis people and believes the way open to a great and good work in that city. On Thursday he expected to go to Pine Bluff, Arkansas, where he will lecture in Rev. Lewis Johnson's church, going on from there to join Prof. Woodsmall in a three-days' ministers' institute. Any contribution to help bear his expenses will be gladly forwarded from this office.

—Rev. A. T. McDill, formerly editor of the Christian Instructor, and more lately of Denver, is now located in Santa Ana, California, to the southeast of Los Angeles. In response to numerous requests, he is endeavoring to secure suitable colony lands in southern California, for a United Presbyterian settlement. Bro. McDill was most earnest in arranging for a meeting against the lodge in Denver last spring.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold went on from Tonica to Wenona, Ill., and last week addressed crowded houses in the latter town, and the friends there esteemed it one of the best presentations of lodge religion ever made to them. One of the Tonica pastors, who has been a Royal Arch Mason, endorsed the lectures, and confessed the representation of lodge heathenism all true.

—The Young Womans' Christian Temperance Union of Wheaton, Ill., lately invited the public to hear an address by Pres. C. A. Blanchard in the College Hall on "Ireland." The excellence of the address constrains us to say that many communities might well think themselves favored by its repetition, and possibly may secure it by application.

—Bro. Edward Mathews, who gave up his work in Michigan last fall, after assisting his brother in mission work in New York a short time, has determined to join William Taylor's African mission. He will go to the Congo country, says the Detroit Evening Journal, to put together and launch the missionary steamboat lately purchased.

—Rev. T. H. Hanna, D. D., of Monmouth, Ill., First United Presbyterian church, gave last week the first of a series of special lectures to the students of the U. P. Theological Seminary at Allegheny, Pa. "Popular Preaching" was his topic.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS OF CHURCHES AND CHRISTIANS.

FINAL ACTION.

In view of the history of secret societies in this and other lands, and the present state of our country, brought about and managed by secret orders, and the further fact that over twelve hundred clergymen and other influential Christian men, representatives of a public sentiment on this subject, have signed a request to Joseph Cook, asking that the secret lodge system be discussed in the Boston Lecture Course, and in harmony with the action of the National Christian Association, the United Brethren, the Wesleyans and Free Methodists, the Reformed and United Presbyterians, Lutheran Synods and Councils, and other ecclesiastical bodies, and in compliance with the expressed wish of Dr. McCosh, Dr. Talmage, Dr. Storrs, and others whose names are omitted for brevity, it was voted to hold a National Christian Congress, and the following gentlemen were chosen a committee, with power to increase their number, issue an official call, and make all necessary arrangements for a Congress of Churches and Christians.

COMMITTEE.

CALVIN W. PRITCHARD, Editor Christian Worker and Friends' Review.

REV. JOSEPH E. ROY, Western Secretary of the American Missionary Association.

REV. B. T. ROBERTS, Editor Earnest Christian and the Free Methodist.

REV. M. C. RANSEEN, Pastor of Gethsemane Swedish Lutheran Church.

REV. L. N. STRATTON, President of Wesleyan Theological Seminary.

OFFICIAL CALL.

Pursuant to instructions, and in humble reliance upon Almighty God for wisdom, and upon the Christian patriotism of our fellow citizens for co-operation and support, we have secured Hershey Music Hall Chicago, Ill., and hereby announce that a Congress of Churches and Christians will assemble at 9:30, A. M., on the 30th day of March, 1887, and continue its sessions two days and evenings, to consider the nature and principles of the secret lodge system and its influence on the Christian religion and civil liberty, and to take what steps may seem proper, after prayer and due consideration.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The committee have learned with satisfaction of the action of several sympathizing bodies in appointing representatives, and are in receipt of the names of over fifty delegates already chosen.

Every Conference, Presbytery, Association, Council, Church, Educational Institution, or other body favoring this Congress, is respectfully urged to at once provide for a representation in its meeting. Let the names of delegates appointed, or who shall be chosen, and the names of all persons intending to be present be forwarded at once to Rev. L. N. Stratton, West Division postoffice, Chicago, Ill., so that entertainment may be provided for those who desire, and a roll of members begun.

L. N. STRATTON, Secretary.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The Forty-ninth Congress has but a short time in which to complete its record. From the progress legislation is making this fact seems to be realized in both the Senate and House. Very little time has been wasted this winter by either. Indeed, the present session has been an exceptionally industrious one.

In looking over the work of the last few days it will be found that some appropriation bills were disposed of,—the railroad attorneys' bill got through the Senate—about a hundred pension bills were passed, (some of which are of the kind that the President will veto) and there were debates on such subjects as Congressional funerals at public expense, clerks for Congressmen at public expense, civil service reform under the present administration, ships, guns, coast defenses, and on other questions.

Secretary Manning will be subjected to some very severe criticism in the House of Representatives because of his reply to the resolution of inquiry sent him by the silver men, but he will not be impeached, as threatened, for his party in the House would not allow the matter to go that far. The authors of the resolution were much nettled at the Secretary's attempt to show them that they did not know what a greenback was; that they did not know the difference between a Treasury note, which is now almost a thing of the past, and a greenback, which is known to the law as a United States note. This allegation of the shallowness of their knowledge displeased them, and they also consider Mr. Manning censurable for previous official acts. Consequently, at the Capitol, there has been some consulting of books relating to impeachment, what it means, to whom it applies, the proper occasions for impeachment and how to do it.

Senator Stanford of California believes that much may yet be learned from English methods, although it is quite the fashion to cry out upon Anglo-mania. Taking the laws regulating the open trade unions of Great Britain as a model he has introduced a bill for the incorporating of labor organizations. This may be a wedge to split them off from the lodge system.

These are the hardest weeks of the year for the President. The measures that are being sent to him by Congress demand much careful attention, and the drafts upon his time, politically and socially, are very pressing. The most prominent social event of the week at the White House was the diplomatic dinner, at which the representatives of twenty-three of the thirty friendly nations usually represented here were present. Mrs. Cleveland surmounted the difficulty which presented itself in the wine to be served to the foreigners. Her temperance proclivities on the one hand, and the courtesy due the guests of state on the other, might have seemed antagonistic to a person of less tact, but she reconciled the two claims upon her by distinguishing between her capacity as mistress of the White House and her character as an individual. In the former she served the usual wines, and in the latter she confined her own potations to water.

Senator Conger of Michigan is being warmly commended by the labor lodges as one of the commissioners to be appointed under the inter-State commerce bill. The Typographical Union is especially urgent. One of their leaders spoke severely the other day of "certain enemies of organized labor," meaning Senator Hale and others who endeavored to wrest the control of the Government Printing office from secret society control and restore in it the national authority. The attempt, said the printer, "seemed about to be successful, but Senator Conger, and that other staunch friend, Senator Voorhees, thwarted it by lifting their voices in the Senate chamber in favor of our union. Had these two men remained silent on that occasion, Columbia Union would to-day have not one of its members employed in the Government Printing office, but it would be a huge 'scab' institution."

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

KING'S CHAPEL.—AN OLD BURIAL GROUND.—THE COLOSSAL TOMB OF A STRANGLED ENGLISH CHURCH.

On the northeast corner of School and Tremont streets, just in the shadow of the renowned Parker House, which hovers above it like a beautiful white cloud, majestic in its artistic proportions, stands a low, dark and prison-like structure known as King's Chapel. At its front, which faces Tremont street, surrounding rather than supporting a massive pile of masonry, originally designed as the foundation of a steeple which never was, and probably never will be completed, are twelve huge Corinthian pillars, reminding one of the columns of the building at Gaza, which Samson cast down. Between this sombre edifice and the Suffolk County Probate building, and the City Hall, lies an old graveyard, wherein "lie interred," as the innumerable low slate headstones inform the passers-by, many of the celebrities of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Upon two large composition plates fastened to the bars of the gates at the main entrance on Tremont street, the names of the most illustrious sleepers are inscribed in raised capitals, viz:

This ancient home of the dead, and the old-fashioned chapel, (which more than anything else, resembles a colossal tomb), stand out most conspicuously in the midst of the busy life surging around them through the main arteries of the city, and the piles of modern architecture.

On a Sabbath morning, passing with a decidedly aristocratic current of humanity through a narrow, and low-studded entrance, you are suddenly ushered into one of the most quaint and accurate architectural auditoriums in New England. The transition from the lugubrious exterior to the surprisingly cheerful interior has an almost magical effect. The contrast between the cold and gloomy world, and the warmth and brightness of heaven is suggested. Space forbids a more minute and extended description of this exquisitely designed and appointed sanctuary. Seated in one of the high-backed, yet comfortable box pews, you can almost imagine yourself back in the time of the Georges. The service you observe to be of the Low Church Episcopalian order, but when the rector ascends the rostrum, above which is suspended the old-time sounding-board, and enters upon the morning discourse, if you have often attended Episcopal services, you will begin to vaguely wonder at the cause of the strange incongruity of the sermon and liturgy.

Returning to your home, or hotel, should you be interrogated as to where you had spent the morning, the following dialogue would naturally ensue, much to your astonishment:

"We attended services at King's chapel."

"Interesting?"

"Very."

THE HOME.

COME, LORD JESUS.

Come, Lord, and tarry not;
Bring the long looked-for day;
Oh, why these years of waiting here,
These ages of delay?

Come, for thy saints still wait;
Dally ascends their sigh;
The Spirit and the Bride say, Come;
Dost thou not hear the cry?

Come, for creation groans,
Impatient of thy stay,
Worn out by these long years of ill,
These ages of delay.

Come, for the corn is ripe,
Put in thy sickle now,
Reap the great harvest of the earth;
Sower and Reaper thou!

Come in thy glorious might,
Come with the iron rod,
Scattering thy foes before thy face,
Most mighty Son of God.

Come, and make all things new;
Build up this ruined earth;
Restore our faded paradise,
Creation's second birth.

Come, and begin thy reign
Of everlasting peace;
Come, take the kingdom to thyself,
Great King of Righteousness.

—Horatius Bonar.

"HE'S COMING TO-MORROW."

"The night is far spent; the day is at hand."

My soul vibrated for a moment like a harp. Was it true? The night, the long night of the world's groping agony and blind desire, is it almost over? is the day at hand?

Again: "They shall see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, look up and rejoice, for your redemption is nigh."

Coming! The Son of Man really coming, coming into this world again with power and great glory? Will this really ever happen? Will this solid, commonplace earth see it? Will these skies brighten and flash, and will upturned faces in this city be watching to see Him coming?

So our minister preached in a solemn sermon; and for moments at times I felt a thrill of reality in hearing. But, as the well-dressed crowd passed down the aisle, my neighbor, Mr. Stockton, whispered to me not to forget the meeting of bank directors on Monday evening, and Mrs. Goldwaite poured into my wife's ear a charge not to forget her party on Thursday; and my wife, as she came out, asked me if I had noticed the extravagant toilet of Mrs. Penman.

"So absurd," she said, "when her income, I know, cannot be half what ours is! and I never think of sending to Paris for my things; I should look on it as morally wrong."

I spoke of the sermon. "Yes," said my wife, "what a sermon! so solemn. I wonder that all are not drawn to hear our rector. What could be more powerful than such discourses? My dear, by-the-by, don't forget to change Mary's opal ring for a diamond one. Dear me! the Christmas presents were all so on my mind that I was thinking of them every now and then in church; and that was so wrong of me!"

"My dear," said I, "sometimes it seems to me as if all our life were unreal. We go to church, and the things that we hear are either true or false. If they are true, what things they are! For instance, these Advent sermons. If we are looking for that coming we ought to feel and live differently from what we do! Do we really believe what we hear in church? or is it a dream?"

"I do believe," said my wife earnestly, (she is a good woman, my wife), "yes, I do believe, but it is just as you say. O, dear! I feel as if I am very worldly—I have so many things to think of!" and she sighed.

So did I; for I knew that I, too, was very worldly. After a pause I said, "Suppose Christ should really come, and it should be authoritatively announced that he would be here to-morrow?"

"I think," said my wife, "there would be some embarrassment on the part of our great men, legislators and chief counselors, in anticipation of a personal interview. Fancy a meeting of the city council to arrange a reception for the Lord Jesus Christ!"

"Perhaps," said I, "He would refuse all offers of the rich and great. Perhaps our fashionable churches would plead for His presence in vain. He would not be in palaces."

"O!" said my wife earnestly, "if I thought our money separates us from Him I would give it all—yes, all—might I only see Him."

She spoke from the bottom of her heart, and for a moment her face was glorified.

"You will see Him some day," said I, "and the money that we are willing to give up at a word from Him will not keep Him from us."

That evening the thoughts of the waking hours mirrored themselves in a dream.

I seemed to be out walking in the streets, and to be conscious of a strange, vague sense of something just declared, of which all were speaking with a suppressed air of mysterious voices.

There was a whispering stillness around. Groups of men stand at the corners of the street and discuss an impending something with suppressed voices.

I heard one say to another, "Really coming? What? to-morrow?" And the other said, "Yes, to-morrow He will be here."

It was night. The stars were glittering down with a keen and frosty light; the shops glistened in their Christmas array; but the same sense of hushed expectancy pervaded everything. There seemed to be nothing doing; and each person looked wistfully on his neighbor as if to say, have you heard?

Suddenly, as I walked, an angel-form was with me, gliding softly by my side. The face was solemn, serene and calm. Above the forehead was a pale, tremulous, phosphorus radiance of light, purer than any on earth—a light of a quality so different from that of the street lamps that my celestial attendant seemed to move in a sphere alone.

Yet, though I felt awe, I felt a sort of confiding love as I said, "Tell me, is it really true? Is Christ coming?"

"He is," said the angel. "To-morrow He will be here!"

"What joy!" I cried.

"Is it joy?" said the angel. "Alas, to many in this city it is only terror! Come with me."

In a moment I seemed to be standing with him in a parlor of one of the chief palaces of the city. A stout, florid, bald-headed man was seated at a table covered with papers, which he was sorting over with nervous anxiety, muttering to himself as he did so. On a sofa lay a sad-looking, delicate woman, her emaciated hands clasped over a little book. The room was, in all its appointments, a witness of boundless wealth. Gold and silver, and gems and foreign furniture, and costly pictures and articles of virtu—everything that money could buy—were heaped together; and yet the man himself seemed to me to have been neither elevated nor refined by the confluence of all these treasures. He seemed nervous and uneasy. He wiped the sweat from his brow and spoke:

"I don't know, wife, how you feel, but I don't like this news. I don't understand it. It puts a stop to everything that I know anything about."

"O John!" said the woman, turning toward him a face pale and fervent, and clasping her hands, "how can you say so?"

And as she spoke I could see breaking out above her head a tremulous light, like that above the brow of an angel.

"Well, Mary, it's the truth. I don't care if I say it. I don't want to meet—well, I wish He would put it off. What does He want of me? I'd be willing to make over—well, three millions, to found an hospital if He'd be satisfied and let me go on. Yes, I'd give three millions—to buy off from to-morrow."

"Is He not our best Friend?"

"Best Friend!" said the man, with a look of half fright, half anger. "Mary, you don't know what you're talking about? You know I always hated those things. There's no use in it; I can't see into them. In fact, I hate them."

She cast on him a look full of pity. "Cannot I make you see?" she said.

"No, indeed you can't. Why, look here," he added, pointing to the papers, "here is what stands for millions! To-night it's mine; and to-morrow it will be all so much waste paper; and then what have I left? Do you think I can rejoice? I'd give half; I'd give—yes, the whole, not to have Him come these hundred years." She stretched out her thin hand toward him, but he pushed it back.

"Do you see?" said the angel to me solemnly; "between him and her there is a great gulf fixed. They have lived in one house with that gulf between them for years! She cannot go to him; he cannot come to her. To-morrow she will rise to Christ as a dewdrop to the sun; and he will call to the mountains and rocks to fall on him—not because Christ hates him, but because he hates Christ."

Again the scene was changed! We stood together in a little low attic, lighted by one small lamp—how poor it was—a broken chair, a rickety table, a bed in the corner where the little ones were cuddling close to one another for warmth. Poor things! the air was so frosty that their breath congealed upon the bed-clothes as they talked in soft, baby voices. "When mother comes she will bring us some supper," said they. "But I'm so cold," said the little outsider. "Get in the middle, then," said the other two, "and we'll warm you. Mother promised she'd make a fire when she came in if that man would pay her." "What a bad man he is!" said the oldest boy; "he never pays mother if he can help it."

Just then the door opened and a pale, thin woman came in, laden with packages.

She laid all down, and came to her children's bed, clasping her hands in rapture.

"Joy! joy, children! O joy, joy! Christ is coming. He will be here to-morrow."

Every little bird in the nest was up, and the little arms around the mother's neck; the children believed at once. They had heard of the good Jesus. He had been their mother's only friend through many a cold and hungry day, and they doubted not He was coming.

"O, mother! will He take us? He will, won't He?"

"Yes, my little ones," she said softly, smiling to herself; "He shall gather the lambs with His arms, and carry them in His bosom."

Suddenly again, as by the slide of a magic lantern, another scene was present.

We stood in a lonely room, where a woman was sitting with her head bowed forward upon her hands. Alone, forsaken, slandered, she was in bitterness of spirit. Hard, cruel tongues had spoken her name with vile assertions, and a thoughtless world had believed. There had been a bubble of accusation, a crowd to rejoice in iniquity, and few to pity. She thought herself alone, and she spoke: "Judge me, O Lord! for I have walked in my integrity. I am as a monster unto many, but thou art my strong refuge."

In a moment the angel touched her. "Mysister," he said, "be of good cheer. Christ will be here to-morrow."

She started up, with her hands clasped, her eyes bright, her whole form dilated, as she seemed to look into the heavens, and said with rapture:

"Come, Lord, and judge me; for thou knowest me altogether. Come, Son of Man, in these have I trusted; let me never be confounded. O! for the judgment-seat of Christ!"

Again I stood in a brilliant room full of luxuries. Three or four fair women were standing pensively talking with each other. Their apartment was bestrewn with jewelry, laces, silks, velvets, and every fanciful elegance of fashion; but they looked troubled.

"This seems to me really awful," said one with a suppressed sigh. "What troubles me is, I know so little about it."

"Yes," said another, "and it puts a stop to everything! Of what use will all these be to-morrow?"

There was a poor seamstress in the corner of the room, who now spoke. "We shall be ever with the Lord," she said.

"I'm sure I don't know what that can mean," said the first speaker, with a kind of shudder, "it seems rather fearful."

"Well," said the other, "it seems so sudden—when one never dreamed of such a thing—to change all at once from this to that other life."

"It is enough to be with Him," said the poor woman. "O, I have so longed for it!"

"The great gulf," again said the angel.

Then again we stood on the steps of a church. A band of clergymen were together. Episcopalian, Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Old School and New School, all stood hand in hand.

"It's no matter now about these old issues," they said. "He is coming; He will settle all. Ordinations and ordinances, sacraments, creeds, are but the scaffolding of the edifice. They are the shadow; the substance is Christ." And hand in hand they turned their faces when the morning light began faintly glowing, and I heard them saying together, with one heart and voice: "Come, Lord Jesus! come quickly." —Harriet Beecher Stowe in Words and Weapons.

THE COMING OF CHRIST.—I will come again.—John 14:3. I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you.—v. 18. As the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be.—Matt. 24:27. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel, which also said: Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.—Acts 1:10, 11. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven.—1 Thess. 4:16. Be ye also patient: establish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.—James 5:8.

"LIKE UNTO MEN THAT WAIT."

How long, O Lord, our Saviour,
Wilt thou remain away?
Our hearts are growing weary
Of thy so long delay;
Oh, when shall come the moment
When brighter far than morn
The sunshine of thy glory
Shall on thy people dawn!

How long, O gracious Master,
Wilt thou thy household leave?
So long hast thou now tarried,
Few thy return believe.
Immersed in sloth and folly,
Thy servants, Lord, we see;
And few of us stand ready
With joy to welcome thee.

How long, O heavenly Bridegroom?
How long wilt thou delay?
And yet how few are grieving
That thou dost absent stay!
The very Bride her portion
And calling hath forgot,
And seeks for ease and glory
Where thou, her Lord, art not.

Oh, wake thy slumbering virgins!
Send forth the solemn cry,
Let all thy saints repeat it,
"The Bridegroom draweth nigh!"
May all our lamps be burning,
Our loins well girded be,
Each longing heart preparing
With joy thy face to see.

LOST.

There was once a boy in Liverpool, who went into the water to bathe, and he was carried out by the tide. Though he struggled long and hard, he was not able to swim against the ebbing tide, and he was taken far out to sea.

That evening a gentleman, who was walking near the place where the little boy had gone into the water, found his clothes lying on the shore. He searched and made inquiries, but no tidings were to be heard of the poor little boy. He found a piece of paper in the pocket of the boy's coat, by which he discovered who it was to whom the clothes belonged. The kind man went with a sad and heavy heart to break the news to the parents. He said to the father, "I am very sorry to tell you that I found these clothes on the shore, and could not find the lad to whom they belonged; I almost fear he has been drowned." The father could hardly speak for grief; the mother was wild with sorrow. They caused every inquiry to be made, but no account was to be had of their dear boy. The house was sad; the little children missed their play-fellow. Mourning was ordered; the mother spent her time crying, and the father's heart was heavy. He said little, but he felt much.

But the boy was picked up by a boat belonging to a vessel bound for Dublin. He was almost lost. The sailors were all very kind to him, when he was taken into the vessel. One gave him a cap, another a jacket, another a pair of shoes, and so on.

The lad was taken back in a vessel bound for Liverpool. As soon as he reached that city, he set off toward his father's house. He did not like to be seen in the strange cap and jacket and shoes which he had on, so he went by the lanes where he would not meet those who knew him. At last he came to the hall door. He knocked. When the servant opened it, and saw who it was, she screamed with joy, and said, "Here is Master Tom!" His father rushed out, and bursting into tears, embraced him. His mother fainted. "There was no more spirit in her." What a happy evening they all, parents and children, spent! They did not want the mourning. The father could say with Jacob, "It is enough; my son is yet alive."

But what do you think will be the rejoicing in heaven, when those who were in danger of being lost for ever, arrive safely on that happy shore? How will the angels rejoice, and the family of heaven be glad! Perhaps when some of you hereafter go to heaven, your fathers and mothers, or brothers and sisters, will welcome you and say, "I am delighted to see you safe. Welcome! welcome!" You will not go there like the boy with the cap and clothes of which he was ashamed, but in garments of salvation, white as snow, with crowns of glory that fade not away.

But remember the great multitude of heathen children, who have never heard a word about heaven, and who do not know that there is any Saviour for lost men. Suppose you had seen that Liverpool boy carried out to sea by the tide. How would you have pitied him! Then suppose you had seen the water full of boys, all drifting out beyond the reach of human help. How would your spirit have died within you! When you should have turned away, and gone home, how sad you would have felt! No "pleasant bread" could you have eaten that night. But all the children in heathen lands are drifting—can you tell whither?—Church Messenger.

A HAPPY CHILD.

Bishop Ryle, of England, says the happiest child he ever saw was a little girl eight years old, who was quite blind.

She had never seen the sun, nor moon, nor stars, grass nor flowers, nor trees, nor birds, nor any of those pleasant things which have gladdened your eyes all your life. More trying still, she had never seen her own father or mother, yet she was the happiest child of all the thousands the bishop had seen.

She was journeying on the railway this day I speak of. No one she knew was with her, not a friend nor a relation to take care of her; yet, though totally blind, she was quite happy and content.

"Tell me," she said to some one near by, "how many people there are in this car. I am quite blind and can see nothing." And she was told.

"Are you not afraid to travel alone?" asked a gentleman.

"No," she replied, "I am not frightened; I have traveled before, and I trust in God, and people are always very good to me."

"But tell me," said the bishop, "why you are so happy?"

"I love Jesus, and he loves me; I sought Jesus and I found him," was the reply.

The bishop then began to talk to her about the Bible, and found she knew a great deal about it.

"And how did you learn so much of the Bible," he asked.

"My teacher used to read it to me, and I remembered all I could," she said.

"And what part of the Bible do you like best?" asked the bishop.

"I like the story of Christ's life in the Gospels," she said; "but what I like best of all are the last three chapters of Revelation."

Having a Bible with him the bishop read to her, as the train dashed along, Rev. 20th, 21st and 22d chapters.—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.CHICAGO'S BIG BEER BILL.

One of the brewers of this city has lately given to the Free-Press some interesting facts in reference to the extent of beer-drinking here, upon which can be based a fairly reliable estimate of the cost of the traffic to the consumers, who are, in the large majority of cases, wage-earners and people of small means. The brewer states that the quantity of beer sold annually to the city of Chicago is 1,560,000 barrels, or 624,000,000 glasses, reckoning 400 glasses to the barrel. (The Milwaukee brewers represented here are alone said to sell 572,000 barrels, or more than one-third the entire amount.) Reckoning Chicago's population at 700,000, this gives over 890 glasses a year for every man, woman and child in the city.

The cost to the consumers of these millions of glasses of beer is about $31,200,000 for the whole city and the stranger that is within its gates! The estimate of 890 glasses per individual means an average annual expenditure of $44.50 for each man, woman and child! Opinions vary as to the proportion of the people including women and children, who do not drink beer, but the smallest fraction named by several men conversant with Chicago people and their daily life, is one-half. Accepting as true this opinion that the whole of the beer is drunk by not more than half the people, we must double the average amount consumed by each of the beer-drinking half; this makes an expense of $89 paid by the average beer-drinker each year.

Beer is especially the poor man's drink, and hence it is a safe assumption that this large sum spent for beer comes principally from the common people who are least able to afford it. A recent labor document computes the average income of the "wage-earners" of Chicago at $425 per annum. Can it be that they spend anywhere near one fifth of this for beer? If so, Mr. Powderly should hasten here and effectually carry out the slogan, "Boycott the saloon."

I have obtained from the offices of the City Comptroller and the County Clerk the amount of taxes for all purposes, State, County, City, Town, School, etc., which are paid in this city. The sum totals of the taxes which all the "rings" extort from the people of the city are as follows on real and personal property:

State Tax.....	$ 574,061.16
County.....	1,110,550.44
Town.....	157,191.24
City.....	5,027,029.35
Parks and Boulevards.....	654,251.73
To this the railroads add their mite of taxes.....	186,754.80
Total.....	$7,709,838.72

So that the grand total of the tax which all the real, personal and railroad property pays in the city of Chicago is less than one-fourth of what the city pays for beer.

One of the items included in the city tax of $5,027,029.35 is that for schools, the total cost of which for 1885—from the abstract of taxes for which year all these figures are taken—was $1,708,701.38, or less than one-eighteenth of the amount expended for beer. How long before the non-partisan method of scientific temperance instruction in the public schools will catch up with and outstrip the beer saloon with the latter seventeen lengths ahead?

In slave days a considerate darkey came in from the stable and said to his master: 'Mahs'r one o' yur oxen am dead; t'oder too. 'Fraid t' tell y' o' bof twunst f' feah 't mout broke yur heah!' In the foregoing only the cost of the beer curse has been discussed. There is as much spent for whisky, wine and other liquors as is spent for beer!

As a result of all this, there are several poor families in Chicago this winter, also a few criminals. The Cook County Hospital for the Insane is full, and the county's quota in the three State asylums full also. —Chicago Correspondence of the Voice.

BENEFITS OF THE G. A. R.

O. D. Barker was in the Free Press office and from him we learned following facts. He has been approached very often to join the Masons and other such truck, but has always declined. He now sees the benefit (?) of such orders, for J. M. Whitcomb, who was running another saloon, and who belongs to the Masons, the G. A. R., and the K. of P., received from some worthy (?) brother due notice that the officers would be after him, and he got out his stuff at 11 o'clock at night; but Barker was not notified and was caught. The fines against Barker are now $375 and costs, but the high official Whitcomb in the G. A. R. has only the costs in one case amounting to $25 against him. Sheriff Wilkin and Whitcomb are the high officials of the G. A. R. and both are good (?) Masons, and before he searched Whitcomb's premises, Whitcomb always received notice, and was never caught. Ben. Johnson is a G. A. R., a Mason, Knight Templar, and he pretends to be doing fair in getting after Barker. Ben. Johnson says, that he was instructed by the supervisors to collect all these fines and costs for five years back. After he does that, then he should bring to justice all of these secret society men who protect criminals and screen the guilty and help them to defy the law. Then the lodges, posts, etc., should be presented to the Grand Jury as nuisances, and fines inflicted on their officers and promoters. The idea in the minds of the Free Press editors is that the secret society men want to have a monopoly of running saloons, billiard halls, gambling dens, and other such places. We have often wondered why they meet in the dark, and now we know that they are plotting against the rest of the community. Dennis says that he has no money to pay his fines and therefore expects to lie in jail till it is settled. Go on, thou beautiful system of heathenism and infernal meanness.—Birmingham (Iowa) Free Press.

The first constitution of National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, adopted in 1874, antedating any State constitution, states the objects of the organization to be as follows: "The education of the young; the formation of a better public sentiment; the reformation of the drinking classes; the transformation by the power of divine grace of those who are enslaved by alcohol; and the removal of the dram shop from our streets by law." This is the foundation of the W. C. T. U. of America.—Mary Allen West. This is a good foundation. Help to rear a grand superstructure upon it!

The Vermont Legislature has recently passed the most perfect law requiring scientific temperance instruction in the public schools yet enacted in any of the States. It contains a provision whereby any school which fails to give such instruction forfeits its school fund.

An injunction prohibiting the sale of liquors, was granted recently against the saloon keepers along the line of railroad between Tunnel City and Seattle, W. T., it having been shown by indisputable records that 3,000 men without whisky performed the same labor as 4,000 with whisky.

"Quite a mongrel affair?"
 "We don't quite comprehend."
 "Regular Episcopalian service?"
 "We should judge so."
 "Downright Unitarian sermon?"
 "We thought—we—we—"
 "You thought so—but didn't know so; isn't that about it?"
 "Then we have attended a sort of Episco-Unitarian service?"
 "That's about the size of it."
 "Isn't this a new departure?"
 "Yes, it's to prevent a departure."
 "You are enigmatical; please be explicit."
 "Well, to be serious, the society worshipping in King's chapel is Unitarian; to hold the property, 'tis said, the regular observance of the Episcopal service is necessitated,—to prevent its forced departure."
 "We thought the church was gathered and established by the early Episcopians of Boston."
 "So it was, but shortly after the Revolution, it evolved into Unitarianism, but to 'survive' it retained the old shell."
 "A kind of wolf in sheep's clothing."
 "Exactly."
 "Almost eclipses the reputed manipulations of the same evolutionary species at Harvard?"
 "Right again."

The following paragraph, from the Boston Herald's (Dec. 13, 1886) report of an anniversary celebration of the founding of the church, may be of interest:

"At the end of the war (Revolutionary) there was an aversion for everything English, which was shared in by the congregation of King's chapel. The very name of the church was altered to Stone Chapel, till it was noticed that the old name might be considered as applying to the 'King of kings.' The English prayer book was revised, largely through the influence of Dr. James Freeman, who was the rector of the church. Mr. Foote (present pastor) thus comments on the revision: 'What was the character of this change in our words of prayer? Our Book of Common Prayer, as thus adopted, was substantially the same as it now stands. Its most significant omissions and changes from the liturgy of the Church of England as it has been used here (besides leaving out everything which referred to the English crown and church) were in those phrases which related to the doctrine of the Trinity. By this act the church took a distinct and unequivocal position, and based its worship on the Scriptures only, refusing to accept the unscriptural additions of later ages to the primitive faith.'" "From that day to this," the Herald continues, "King's chapel has belonged to the Congregational Unitarian denomination, and its congregation has been uniformly large and influential."

In other words this church evolved from faith in a trine God-head to confidence in an Unitarian human-head. "Distinct and unequivocal position," says Mr. Foote. Well, perhaps his definition of these weighty adjectives are about as correct as his scriptural interpretation, but certainly, as long as the service of a denomination whose fundamental doctrines it repudiates, is observed in any part, the King's Chapel Society's "distinct and unequivocal position" is very, very ambiguous, to say the least.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The revival in Wheaton began last fall in the College and has passed on through the town by way of the Wesleyan and M. E. churches. A special communion was held by the College church January 30 and sixteen united with the church. Fifteen have been received by the Wesleyan church. More are to unite soon with both these churches. The meetings at the Methodist church have been held several weeks and some 30 or more profess Christ or have been reclaimed from a back-slidden state. At the Wesleyan meetings one brother who had been a member of the Masonic lodge, for the first time in public made known his determination to live for Christ and not for Masonry. We understand a similar testimony was given in the Methodist meeting.

—Bro. B. Loveless, after a series of successful meetings in Clinton, Iowa, is now in Cedar Rapids, where the work of salvation has begun with great encouragement.

—High Street church, Columbus, O., is again rejoicing in an extensive revival, many heads of families having been brought to Christ. Bro. C. W. Hiatt, the pastor, has conducted the meetings.

—Rev. M. S. McCord of the United Presbyterian church at Providence, R. I., recently preached an appropriate and interesting sermon on the 12th anniversary of his settlement.

—The work of Mr. Pentecost in Cleveland, which begins March 1st, has been preceded by excellent meetings by the evangelist Needham, in the great Doane Tabernacle. These meetings have been a great blessing to the People's church and pastor Johnson is much encouraged.

—Dr. M. M. Gibson of San Francisco, after twenty years of hard work for Christ in that city, is looking forward to a tour through Europe, during the coming summer.

—The Los Angeles United Presbyterian congregation is growing under the ministration of Rev. J. M. Hervey, who says his new church will soon need extension if the increase continues.

—Bro. Harry Agnew writes from Estcourt, Natal, to the Free Methodist, that the war at Inhambane, which drove him from that place, is now about over. The natives sacked the house of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, stealing what they could and smashing the rest. Quietness has been restored, and Bro. Agnew will return.

—Robert Shemeld at Estcourt has been laboring with energy to build a school house and mission dwelling, and has been prospered in his efforts, preaching and teaching the Zulus the way of Christ.

—Rev. Z. McNew, of Washington, Indiana, who has long served as a faithful presiding elder in White River United Brethren conference, has been blessed with a powerful meeting at Washington. Eighty souls have come to Christ for salvation and many have united with the church.

—At the revival meeting at Payne, Ohio, under the labors of Rev. P. B. Williams, 47 have been converted, 38 have joined the church, 3 have left the lodge, some other lodgites are on the fence.

—More than 30,000 copies of the Hebrew New Testament lately translated by Prof. Delitzsch have already been circulated among the Jews. Mr. Faber states that in Galicia, Roumania and Bessarabia whole families of Jews assemble in secret with their friends to read the Gospel.

—The Rev. Geo. F. Pentecost, pastor of the Tompkins Avenue Congregational church of Brooklyn, announced to his congregation Sunday, January 30, that he had resolved to devote himself exclusively to evangelical work, and tendered his resignation, to take effect on March 1. His first evangelical work will be in Cleveland.

—The Moravian, in an article on the ability of Christians to have their own way here if they will only agree to insist on it, recalls the efforts to check the movement to open the Centennial Exhibition on the Sabbath, and tersely says: "The Centennial Exhibition kept the Lord's day holy because the Christians of Philadelphia determined that it must be so."

—Major Whittle, James McGranahan, and Charles Herald, the evangelists, have been holding union evangelistic meetings in Harrisburg, Pa., since the first of January. Two hundred and fifty-five claim to have been saved during the month.

—An impressive service was held at the chapel of Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, last Tuesday, being the ordination of two Persian students named Serzius Van Moses, and Oshana Van Jesus, who, after a brief preaching tour through this country, will go to Teheran, Persia, in charge of the Christian mission.

—The interests of the American Medical Missionary Society of Chicago are being presented in the churches of the different denominations in this city. The First Congregational, of which Dr. Goodwin is pastor, permitted the presentation of the cause from the pulpit giving it his sanction. The agent has also been with Dr. Scudder at Plymouth Congregational church. This society was organized in March, 1885, and has now seven students under its auspices, a small number in comparison with what it might have had if it had been furnished the funds necessary. The society is inter-denominational, and receives funds and students from all the Evangelical Protestant denominations. Each donor or church has the directing of the donation. Students are furnished with superior advantages in the Chicago or Rush Medical College for three years, during which time they are afforded much practical experience in medicine and evangelistic work.

—Evangelist Moody brought his mission on the West Side to a close Friday evening, and preached at the Western Avenue Methodist Episcopal church an earnest sermon, touchingly appealing to his audience to turn to God that night. The crush at the doors was so great that the building was packed before service commenced, and hundreds were unable to gain admission. An overflow meeting was held at Warren Avenue Baptist church by Mr. Bliss.

—Francis Murphy addressed between two and three thousand people at the Gospel temperance meetings at Farwell Hall Friday, and hundreds came forward and took the pledge. His meetings began Tuesday and have been well attended.

—President McCosh has recommended to the Board of Trustees of Princeton College that the institution take on the dignity and title of Princeton University.

—The American Board has decided to commission Rev. Dr. A. Hume to return to the Maratha Mission, notwithstanding that he has inclinations in the direction of the future probation theory, but he has promised to avoid teaching or preaching that doctrine.

LITERATURE.

BROTHER AND LOVER: A WOMAN'S STORY. By Eben E. Rexford. Cloth, 40c. New York: John B. Alden, publisher.

Mr. Rexford is well known to many American readers, who were perhaps unaware of his poetical genius. But this is a genuine poem; and for gracefulness, simplicity and fine versification and a fine and gentle treatment of a tender theme, American literature supplies few that are its equal. It is a real love story, but a noble one. It is, too, a story of friendship and devoted patriotism, ennobling the emotions of every reader. Mr. Alden presents it to the reading public in an attractive style which must add to its popularity.

The Phrenological Journal and Science of Health for February, 1887, opens with a portrait and sketch of Michael Munkacsy, the artist, whose picture, "Christ before Pilate," has excited the wonder, admiration, and criticism of the world. "The Progress of the Emancipated Race" is a series of sketches and portraits of eminent colored men. "A Divided Republic" is a curious paper with a half-threat of what may possibly be done in the event of the continued indifference of legislators to the demand of a handful of women for suffrage. The papers in health are of general interest as they treat of conditions especially probable in our climate. The editorials are unusually spirited, particularly that on "The new brain theory."

That measles is not a disease which children "ought to have" is conclusively shown in Dr. Chapin's important article on "Measles and its Complications," in the February number of Babyhood, which no mother of young children can afford to overlook. Equally valuable articles in the same issue are "Scrofulous Tendencies," by Dr. L. M. Yale, and "Treatment of Diarrhea," by Dr. Jerome Walker. Under "Nursery Problems" are to be found discussion of such interesting topics as "Test for Cross-Eyes," "The Value of Flour Balls as an Article of Diet," "Disadvantages of Early Instruction in Piano Playing," "Physical Exercise for girls," "Preparing for Weaning Time," etc.

Science announces that it has in preparation a series of original maps of explorations and geographical investigations in various parts of the world. The work is in charge of Dr. Franz Boas, who has resigned his position with the University of Berlin to assume charge of the geographical department of Science. This new department in Science will cover a field which has never been touched by American journalism. The first of these maps will be issued in March. Science is published at 47 Lafayette Place, New York.

"A Night in Chinatown," an illustrated article by Mr. Geo. H. Fitch, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, is one of the most striking and interesting articles in the February number of the Cosmopolitan, Rochester, N. Y. It sets forth in vivid and picturesque language the striking features of this Chinese settlement in the heart of an American city. Dr. Edward W. Bemis's article entitled "The Iron Octopus," is an able and timely discussion of the railroad problem.

Vick's Magazine for February is a bright number which warns us to be getting ready for spring. Everyone will want to read of "Low Prices" and the new climbing plant "Mina Lobata," "Landscape Gardening," "Forest Trees," and "Plants for Amateurs."

J. S. Ogilvie & Co., New York, issue their eighth collection of Recitations and Readings for public and private entertainments, selected by Mrs. Anna Randall Diehl. It has many excellencies.

The Converted Catholic for February devotes much space to the Father McGlynn case in New York, and the editorial on "Public Money to Catholic Institutions" is timely. Almost the only public money voted by Congress to charitable institutions in Washington, goes to the Catholics.

The Library Magazine as a semi weekly is a new venture by John B. Alden, the popular New York publisher. "Goethe and Philosophy," "Nova Scotia's Cry for Home Rule," "The Lower Education of Women," "Vocal Music in Public School Instruction," are a few of the late article that will have a wide reading.

The Missionary Review office, now removed to 436 W. 20th street, New York, has issued a pamphlet on missions for American girls, "Shall I Go?" which ought to be circulated by the million. They can be had for 50c per dozen; $3.50 a hundred.

HOME HINTS.

BENEFITS OF RUBBING.

Rubbing and kneading for chronic maladies is no new thing. For hundreds of years a class of women known as "rubbers" have figured conspicuously in England. And, while their operations have in the main been confined to persons of the lower classes, instances of a very notable character have occurred, in which sick people of the highest social standing have called in these rubbers, where all other means had failed. Remarkable cures under such circumstances have become historic.

A large class of women have devoted themselves to the same work in Mexico. Indeed, this sort of manipulation has become nearly universal. And I venture the assertion, that the most remarkable cures ever achieved among us have been the work of the rubbers. These peripatetic doctors, who cure by "laying on of hands" (which means rubbing, and generally of a very violent sort), do perform wonderful cures. I know that physicians generally sneer at these miracle workers, but if with their drugs the doctors could perform such cures as these quacks do actually achieve, there would be no end to the glorification.

There are numberless sufferers from uterine displacements and inflammations, who submit to an endless round of indecent and torturing applications without avail, who might by lying down flat, with the shoulders as low as the hips, and having a little daily kneading and percussion of the lower part of the abdomen, obtain a relief which they can get by no other means.

But it holds true that no other class of affections is so immediately, decidedly and permanently impressed by these manipulations as those of the digestive apparatus. There cannot be imagined a case of indigestion in which rubbing, kneading and percussion may not prove useful. Nor do I believe there is any other affection of the organs of abdominal cavity which is not benefited by such treatment.

We physicians may shut our eyes and ears, and cry "humbug" as long as we please, the people know very well that thousands of exhausted invalids, who have passed entirely beyond our drugs, are rubbed back into life and health. And I will add the opinion that still other thousands, who are waiting in vain for salvation to come from a bottle, might be restored by judicious rubbing.—Dio Lewis.

RUBBING CURE.—It is impossible to find a simpler and more effectual remedy for nervous diseases than what is known as the Rubbing Cure—a cure within the reach of all. Nervous persons are in a disturbed electric state and need the rubbing friction from another's hands to draw off the electricity which is in excess, or impart what is lacking to a healthy condition. Rubbing is the best anodyne that can be administered. It soothes and quiets the nerves, inducing sleep, which in turn invigorates the body. Again, rubbing is beneficial to invalids as a substitute for other exercise and outdoor life. Were rubbing generally resorted to in the case of persons suffering from overwork or nervous prostration, more cures would be wrought than the best physicians ever dreamed of in their philosophy.

OVER-WORK.—In our American life we quite over-strain the muscles, over-weary the brain, and overburden the heart. Men at the hottest point of enterprise give out, and consumption takes the body, lunacy the mind, avarice the affections. Prominent men drop suddenly here and there, when they are all aglow with perspiration, and dilated eye, and absorption of success. The epitaph is—"Died of over work." It should be—"Died of mismanaged work." That wheel on the car is not hot because it rolls faster than the other wheels, nor because its journal was not packed as well—because some unusual friction has heated it. Here is a sewing machine with which a woman has flung thrust enough to baste the two hemispheres together at the equator and reach to the north pole, and make a spool of it; and yet it has needed little repair, as it has sung the dollars together with its monotonous buzz. Here is another that has returned, broken in pieces, and radically injured. Lack of lubrication, misfiring or guiding, causing an injury, and then it has been up-hill work ever since, till it has become absolutely worthless.

Men are worked in precisely the same way. A man cannot run his mind and leave his body in the lurch without harm. No mechanic shall fail in muscle nor in skill; he will fertilize his mind as he goes along, and keep a window in his soul open to the good. No business or professional man shall waste in body or waver in mind if he will proportion his intellectual and physical toil, and not forget his religious obligations.—Health Culture.

FARM NOTES.

VALUE OF WHITE GRAPES.

At a late meeting of the Summit Co., Ohio, Horticultural Society, a brief report was made of the vineyards at Euclid, near Cleveland, of which there are three thousand acres in all. Two vineyards of Niagara are in bearing. Concord brought two cents a pound the past season, Delaware five cents, and Niagara and Pocklington seven cents. The Early Victor was found to be less profitable than expected. While it is rather earlier than the Worden, the latter is larger and colors up very early.

From this report it appears probable that the opinion will prove to be true which has been expressed by some practical and experienced fruit-growers, that the white grapes, such as Niagara and Pocklington, will be worth no more than Concord when they become plentiful and are no longer a novelty. The ultimate test will be quality and not color, and it is impossible, with the growing discrimination the public is acquiring, that fruits no better than the white ones above named, ranking not at all above the Concord, even if equaling it, should bring a price above fruit of the high quality of Delaware and Catawba. White grapes, however, like the Duchess and the Rebecca, should bring a price equal to any in the market. These are of high quality, and, like most fruits of high quality, more difficult to raise, and costing more than those of inferior varieties.—Vick's Magazine.

THE KIND OF GRAPES TO RAISE.—Mr. E. P. Powell gives the following advice, and it is worth heeding:

"For a small home garden I would recommend to plant Pocklington, Worden, Vergennes, Massasoit, Lindley, Delaware, Duchess, Lady, E. Victor, Empire State, Walter, Brighton, Jefferson—a baker's dozen. If you wish a lot of grapes with least trouble and most neglect, take Worden and Lady and Agawam—especially Worden; but Lady must get a good growth before you neglect it. Cover your sheds with Concord, Worden, etc. If south of forty-two degrees run them up trees like elms and ash. There is nothing so fine for porches and walls as grapes. I have a vine that runs around my house seventy-five feet in one direction and forty in another, shading the windows and shielding the walls from hot sun. A barn covered with vines is an object of beauty. The profits may be equal to that from a cow. The fruit is one of the healthiest, and as a mere object of beauty is equal to the finest of all ornaments. I grow the best of the wild grapes for arbors to shelter seats in. Their fruit is best of all for jelly."

OIL YOUR BOOTS AND SHOES.

The efficacy of oiling depends much upon the way in which it is done. In the evening brush the shoe clean, and then wash it with lukewarm water, rather to moisten than to clean it. Set it where it will dry slowly. It should not be perfectly dry the next morning, when the oil is applied, but feel damp, not wet, however. The best mixture for oiling shoes is made of one half of neat's foot oil—be sure you get the genuine article—one third beef tallow, and one sixth castor oil. Mix thoroughly over a gentle heat. Depend upon the rubbing rather than the heat to get the oil in—to express it differently, two parts of rubbing to one of heat. If the shoes are pegged, as farmers' shoes usually are, and always should be, get the oil in well between the uppers and the sole; it will prevent the sole pulling loose, or the leather breaking away from the pegs. Shoes worn at farm work should be oiled at least once a week. It requires only a few minutes to do the work, and it is decidedly profitable labor.—American Agriculturist.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a half pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the Pillow-Inhaler, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or saline on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cures. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased part.

HOV. E. L. HODGES, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the Pillow-Inhaler has been the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchitis and Catarrh of the Throat, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

MR. H. G. TATE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh, coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a Pillow-Inhaler, and after using it only once, is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the Pillow-Inhaler has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMBY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumby's book, "National Suicide and Its Prevention," will be read with pleasure even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more percent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield, "Even his failings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumby is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.

The Christian's Secret

OF A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others to the most delicate. There is no heavy Christianity here."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delightful and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to title."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experienced allusion taught out of God's word, and is worthy of wide circulation."—Christianity.

The first Monday in April is a critical day for Michigan. The fate of the Prohibitory amendment to the State constitution will then be decided. The resolution providing for the submission, provides that, if carried, there shall be absolute prohibition, except for legitimate purposes, of the manufacture, sale, or gift of spirituous, malt or vinous liquors in the State. The friends of the reform throughout the country are realizing the importance and critical nature of the case, and are raising funds and sending able men to canvass the State. May God give victory to the right.

Boston Corbett, whose well-aimed musket brought down Wilkes Booth, the assassin, became an unpleasant dictator to the Kansas legislature last week. He had been appointed an assistant door-keeper though known to have fits of insanity. Last Tuesday he whipped out his revolver and cleared a gallery and received prompt obedience when he demanded the legislative body to adjourn. Corbett has lived for some time in Concordia and has something of a local reputation for his denunciation of secret societies. The lodge will now rail at the "cranks," but the consideration of the iniquities unbosomed in secretism is enough to make many Corbetts crazy.

Freemasonry furnished a sensation in New York last week. It seems that Jere Dunn, a notorious Chicago gambler, thief, pugilist and murderer, with a pal, his equal in crime and keeper of a brothel, were some time since made Master Masons in "Prudence" Lodge, and then in due time went on through the chapter degrees in Palestine Chapter. As soon as the matter got to the public ear, the infamy of the case caused the chief authorities of New York Freemasonry to immediately suspend the lodge and chapter in the summary way the despotic rules of the order provide. There is no great significance in the matter, except that it shows what a broken-down gate the lodge has against the devil; and how many companions of such characters there must be in the order to have passed on their characters in committee and associate with them on the square for months.

William C. Stevens, a veteran of the anti-slavery struggle, died in this city during the early part of the present month at the age of nearly 90 years. He was the founder of the town of Princeville, near Peoria in this State. He was a personal friend of Wm. Lloyd Garrison, and his house became known as one of the stations on the underground railway. For his conviction and opposition to slavery his property was destroyed and the lives of himself and family threatened. On the occasion of one of Garrison's speeches, from the front door of his house, the audience was dispersed and the house riddled with bricks and other missiles. It has been his happy lot to live to see the triumph of the principles for which he was willing to endure persecution.

President Cleveland's veto of the Dependent Pension bill, though a document of considerable length is also an able paper. His position is quite generally approved by the press of the country. No unprejudiced observer of affairs can fail to note that our politicians in Congress are altogether too free with the immense surplus an unwise council has allowed to accumulate in the National Treasury. They will soon want to pension every suttler and muledriver who followed the army, and when no pensioners are in sight, they will squander a million or two on needless bridges across the Potomac. The Washington correspondents tell us that this last pension bill and others to follow it originated with the G. A. R. Lucius Fairchild of Wisconsin, the head of the order, has issued an order to all the camps to pass resolutions, and work upon the tender feelings of their Representatives to get a vote passing the bill over the veto.

Mr. Moody has at last moved into those parts of Chicago which are generally looked upon as mission fields. In a large skating rink, well out on Milwaukee avenue in the northwest part of the city, meetings were opened on the Sabbath, and although it will accommodate several thousands, crowds were turned away because there was no more room. Meetings will continue a week in this locality. Last Friday Mr. Moody spoke of the Chicago Evangelization Society which was organized when he came here about New Year's time. He spoke with enthusiasm and hope of the work the society was doing, and said that in the spring when his own work closed, Major Whittle would be here to carry it on. It is believed by those who are best acquainted with his plans that Mr. Moody is in the midst of the most important work ever undertaken here by way of a definite plan for the evangelization of the masses. This plan will be a kind of fruits of his life work for Chicago, and will be more elaborate, far-reaching and practical than any yet successfully undertaken. The business men have confidence in the faith and executive ability of Mr. Moody, for they can see that city evangelization is the best, most direct, and most economical means of counteracting the rabid socialism that has secured so strong a footing here. Many of them also see that the Gospel is the only real remedy for these social and political evils. But they need to remember that this is a work that cannot be altogether done through an agent, though one of the best God ever chose. A little personal effort and self-sacrifice will double the value of the money invested in the Evangelization Society.

The note of last week on the inconsistency of the practice of the Knights of Labor lodges with their proclamation of principles has its confirmation in the report of the Philadelphia Press last week, that Powderly and his board declare the Chicago boycotts entirely unauthorized, and yet there is no movement to enforce the frequent proclamations issued from the Philadelphia headquarters. The Press says: "The increasing lack of high discipline in the big order, and the failure of the various district assemblies to keep close to the suggestions of the general master workman and his board, have made Powderly's face anxious, and worried all his lieutenants." Can it be true that Powderly, who seems often to be a man of fair judgment, is beginning to realize that his secret, despotic method of organizing the workmen is all a mistake and that they can never secure permanent and wholesome reforms by such means? Word comes from Salem, Massachusetts, that the order of Knights of Labor is rapidly falling to pieces from various causes incidental to the failure of the great leather strike, the difficulty being that the more radical members had obtained control of the association and precipitated strikes. A number of former leaders in the Knights claim that a new organization will shortly be established in Salem, with substantially the same principles as the Knights of Labor, with the exception that the members will be pledged not to participate in any strike or boycott until all other means of arriving at a settlement have failed. This is exactly the platform of Powderly's order, and the movement shows how far it has departed in its practice from that position: and the new order will travel over the same road.

IS OURS A CHRISTIAN NATION?

BY REV. B. W. WILLIAMS.

"We hold that ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation."
—American Platform.

The general impression has usually been that the United States is a Christian nation. We believe that this idea is well founded. There are two classes of persons, however, who dissent from this view of the matter. First, there are the infidel secularists, who contend that Christianity was totally ignored in the formation of our government, being placed only on a level with other religions, and with infidelity; and that this great republic cannot be said to have any distinctively Christian character. Then, there is a certain school of Christian thinkers who say that ours is far from being a Christian nation, because some of our customs are at variance with the divine law; and that nothing short of the explicit acknowledgment, in our national constitution, of the Lord Jesus Christ as the ruler of nations, and God's revealed will as the supreme law, together with entire obedience to this law, will constitute a Christian nation. With the former class, we cross swords; and we appeal to the facts of history and the established usages of our government, to disprove their assumption. With the latter we dislike very much to take issue, for we recognize among them men of learning, piety and patriotism.

In order to rightly decide the question, we must clearly understand the meaning attached to the terms employed. Without this, we need not hope to reach a correct and satisfactory conclusion. What do we mean by a Christian nation? And in what sense does the American platform affirm such to be the character of our government? It evidently does not intend to convey the idea that Christianity is, with us, a state religion, to be enforced by law. It does not use the term in any sense that would imply compulsory conformity, in faith and practice, to the Christian's creed. When we affirm that this is a Christian nation, we simply mean to say that our government was founded by Christian statesmen; that it was based upon Christian principles; that its administration has generally been characterized by Christian usages; and that the Christian religion is entitled to special respect and protection as the acknowledged religion of the people.

The fact that there are yet some wrongs and inconsistencies in the management of our national affairs (such as Sabbath desecration, lax divorce laws, and the permission of the liquor traffic) does not invalidate the claim we make any more than errors in the conduct of the individual Christian invalidate his title to the exalted honor of being a follower of Christ. It is still a fact that the main forces of our national life are shaped and modified, to a great extent, by Christian influences. This is shown by our employment of chaplains in legislative bodies and governmental institutions, our use of the judicial oath in courts of justice and on inauguration into office, our exemption of church property from taxation, our annual observance of Thanksgiving Day, our laws concerning the observance of the Christian Sabbath, etc. The founders of the Republic wisely prohibited the establishment of a national church, but at the same time they recognized the fact that religious principle is essential to the welfare of the state, and that Christianity is justly entitled to the protection of law as the religion of the people.

Let us now consider some of the facts upon which we base the claim that ours is a Christian nation:

I. This country was originally settled by Christian believers. The desire to plant Christian colonies, and to establish a Christian commonwealth, was one of the principal motives which prompted our forefathers to emigrate to America. The various colonies were founded by the different religious denominations. In New York, the Dutch Reformed church predominated. In Virginia the church of England was established. Pennsylvania, Delaware, and West Jersey were settled by the Quakers; Massachusetts, by the Puritans; Maryland, by the Catholics; other colonies, by the various Protestant sects. Bancroft says:

"The colonists, including their philosophy in their religion, as the people up to that time had always done, were neither skeptics nor sensualists, but Christians. The school that bows to the senses as the sole interpreter of truth had little share in colonizing our America. The colonists from Maine to Carolina, the adventurous companions of Smith, the proscribed Puritans that fled from the fleet of Winthrop, the Quaker outlaws that fled from jails with a Newgate prisoner as their sovereign,—all had faith in God and in the soul. . . . Our fathers were not only Christians, they were, even in Maryland by a vast majority elsewhere almost unanimously, Protestants."—History U. S., Century Edition, vol. iii., p. 177.

Let it be remembered, then, that the first settlers of this country were Christians and not infidels.

II. The Declaration of Independence was chiefly the work of men who revered Christianity and the Bible. This is made clear from several facts.

1. It appears that the first man who openly and publicly declared in favor of a total separation from Great Britain was Samuel Adams, of Massachusetts. This was about the year 1768. (Bancroft, vol. iv., p. 109.) He "originated the idea of a Colonial Congress in 1765, and was the earliest advocate of a Continental Congress in 1774." (Lossing's Eminent Americans, p. 79.) These measures did much to prepare the way for independence. At the time the declaration was made in 1776, no one man had done so much to bring about independence as the elder Adams." (Bancroft, vol. v., pp. 269-70.) We are told that "he was a sincere and practical Christian; and the last production of his pen was in favor of Christian truth." (One Hundred Years of a Nation's Life, p. 15.)

2. The first formal declaration of independence ever issued by a public assembly in America was made by a company of Scotch-Irish Presbyterians at Charlotte, Mecklenburg county, North Carolina, in May, 1775. (Bancroft, vol. iv., pp. 577-79.) This is known as the Mecklenburg Declaration. True, it was local in its character, and formed only a kind of prelude to the final declaration of independence by Congress in July, 1776; but it goes to show that the prime movers in the struggle for liberty were Christians. Infidels talk a great deal about the services of Thomas Paine to the American cause; and it is true that he did much, by his writings, to popularize the idea of independence. But at that time he was a professed Quaker, and not an avowed infidel. His "Common Sense" and his "Crisis" were both written from a Christian standpoint, and employed Scriptural arguments. It was not until some years later that he became an infidel. We have nothing good from his tongue or pen after his renunciation of Christianity.

3. It will be remembered that the resolution in Congress, which declared "that these united colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States," was offered by Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia. (Bancroft, vol. v., p. 267.) "He was a professed believer in the Christian religion; and this avowal of his faith was made amid the accumulated honors of the world, which were lavishly bestowed on him, with sincere good will, and in the full unclouded exercise of his vigorous mind." (Dwight's Lives of the Signers, p. 286.)

4. The committee appointed by Congress to draft the Declaration of Independence was composed of men who revered the Christian religion. That committee consisted of Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman, and Robert R. Livingston. (Bancroft, vol. v., p. 269.) The last mentioned, however, was called to his duties at home before the final vote was taken, so that his name does not appear as one of the signers to that instrument.

Mr. Jefferson has often been put down as an infidel; but a closer examination of his character reveals the fact that he was far from being a scoffer at religion. In 1803 he wrote a letter to Dr. Rush in which he said: "To the corruptions of Christianity I am indeed opposed; but not to the genuine precepts of Jesus himself. I am a Christian in the only sense in which he wished any one to be; sincerely attached to his doctrines, in preference to all others." (Works, vol. iv., p. 479.) He was a frequent and liberal contributor to religious enterprises. He attended the Episcopal church regularly, and participated in the services. His children were baptized in that church. His wife belonged to it. He was buried according to its rites. (See Randall's Life of Jefferson, vol. iii., chap. 14.)

John Adams was a man of fervent and sincere piety, and for sixty years a member of the church. (Sanderson's Biography of the Signers, pp. 129-30.)

Dr. Franklin had been tinctured with skepticism in his youth, but his practical good sense soon led him to abandon such views, and according to the testimony of his biographers, he became, in maturer years, a believer in divine revelation. (See Lossing's Eminent Americans, p. 40; Sanderson's Biography of the Signers, p. 402, and One Hundred Years of a Nation's Life, p. 42, 43.) He called himself a "Protestant of the Church of England, holding in the highest veneration the doctrines of Jesus Christ." (Parton's Life of Franklin, vol. i., p. 557.)

Roger Sherman was an humble, faithful and devoted Christian. "Before he had attained the age of twenty-one years, he made a public profession of his religion, and continued more than half a century a zealous defender of its doctrines." (Sanderson's Biography of the Signers, p. 222.)

5. It appears from a careful study of American history and biography that the signers to the Declaration of Independence, with scarcely an exception, were men of deep religious convictions—firm believers in Christianity and the Bible. If there was a scoffer at religion among the entire number, we have been unable to find any record of it in history. They were men who "owned the restraints of religion." (Sanderson's Biography, p. 21.) When they signed the Declaration of Independence, "it was accompanied with prayer to Almighty God." (Abbott's Lives of the Presidents, p. 106.) They explicitly recognized, in that immortal document, the existence of God as our Creator. They spoke of the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness as being derived from him. They asserted the Christian idea of the equality of all men. They appealed to God, as the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, for the rectitude of their intentions. How, I ask, could these facts be explained on the hypothesis that our forefathers were hostile or indifferent to the Christian religion?

III. The Revolutionary War, by which our independence was established, was carried on and successfully terminated chiefly by Christian believers.

The soldiers and patriots of the Revolution were very generally men who accepted, with devout reverence, the Christian religion. An atheist in the American army would have been regarded as a kind of moral monstrosity. The generals who led our armies were, with scarcely an exception, devout, pious, prayerful men. This is especially true in regard to Washington, Putnam, Green, Warren, Prescott, Morgan, Wayne, Knox and Lincoln. Those foreign noblemen who came to America to assist in the struggle for liberty, De Kalb, Steuben, Lafayette, Pulaski, and Kosciuszko, were also Christian believers. Benedict Arnold, who betrayed his country and went over to the enemy, did not acknowledge the restraints of religion. Charles Lee was an infidel, but he turned out bad, and was dismissed from the army in disgrace.

IV. The adoption of the Federal Constitution and the formation of the government under it was principally the work of Christian statesmen.

"Many of the authors of the Constitution were themselves men of strong religious convictions." (Townsend's Analysis of Civil Government, p. 225.) Some people imagine that the Constitution of the United States is an infidel document because it prohibits Congress from making any law respecting the establishment of religion. This provision, however, did not result from indifference or hostility toward Christianity, but from a desire to prevent the establishment of a national church. Judge Story says:

"We are not to attribute this prohibition of a national religious establishment to an indifference to religion in general, and especially to Christianity, which none could hold in more reverence than the framers of the Constitution, but to a dread by the people of the influence of ecclesiastical power in matters of government."—Exposition of the Constitution, p. 259.

We may be reminded, just here, that the constitutional convention declined to have its sessions opened with prayer. Yes; but Lossing says it was because there was no money which could be appropriated for the payment of a minister of the Gospel for the sacred service." (Outline History U. S., p. 231.)

V. The preservation, development, and progress of our government are chiefly due to the labors of Christian statesmen.

The men who have been chiefly instrumental in defending, strengthening, and perpetuating our free institutions, and in giving stability, honor, and greatness to our nation have not been infidels, but believers in Christianity and the Bible. This is notably true of such men as Hamilton, Madison, Jay, the Adames, Kent, Story, Webster, Clay, Jackson, Lincoln and a host of others. They feared God. They revered the Bible. They believed in Christ. What would our country have been to-day without their services? How small would be the volume of American history were their achievements eliminated from its annals. Abbott truly says:

"The presidents of our colleges, the most prominent men at the bar, the most distinguished of our statesmen, our ablest scientific men, our most heroic generals, are men who revere Christianity; who seek its guidance through life, and its support in death."—History of Christianity, pp. 300-1.

These observations of the illustrious historian are undoubtedly well-founded. They are worthy of our utmost confidence. We are indebted to Christian statesmanship for the establishment, development and preservation of our free institutions.

VI. Our ablest jurists, historians, and writers on constitutional law have declared ours to be a Christian nation.

The courts have repeatedly declared that Christianity is a part of the common law of the land. Our most eminent jurists have affirmed it in their decisions. And our wisest statesmen and best historians have entertained the same opinion. In proof of this assertion we quote the following extracts as samples of the many that might be given.

CHANCELLOR KENT:—"The Christian religion is the law of the land, in the sense that it is preferred over all other religions and entitled to the recognition and protection of the temporal courts by the common law of the State."—Decision, case of the People vs. Ruggles.

JUDGE ALLEN:—"Christianity is not the legal religion of the State, as established by law. If it were, it would be a civil or political institution, which it is not; but this is not inconsistent with the idea that it is in fact, and ever has been, the religion of the people. This fact is everywhere prominent in all our civil and political history, from the first settlement of the country and acted upon by the people, as well as by constitutional conventions, by legislatures, and by courts of justice."—Decision, case of Lindemuller vs. the People.

CHIEF JUSTICE SHRE:—"Our own government and the laws by which it is administered, are, in every part, legislative, judicial and executive, Christian in nature, form and purpose. In using the term 'Christian' I do not and cannot use it in an excluding sense. Alfred, in collating the laws of England, certainly considered the Jewish law as part essential of a Christian system of secular government, and as the authority and foundation of the common law. Let me repeat, therefore, that I use the word compendiously, and in this inclusive import."—Nature and Form of the American Government, p. 35.

CHIEF JUSTICE STORY:—"One of the most beautiful boasts of our municipal jurisprudence is that Christianity is a part of the common law, from which it seeks the sanction of its rights, and by which it endeavors to regulate its doctrines. And the boast is true as it is beautiful. There never has been a period in which the common law did not recognize Christianity as lying at its foundation. It recognizes the illegal every contract of the common law. It recognizes with profound humility its holidays and festivals and obeys them as 'dies non juridice.'"—Quoted in Kingsbury on the Sabbath, p. 124.

THE HISTORIAN BANCROFT:—"Certainly our great united commonwealth is the child of Christianity. It may with equal truth be asserted that modern civilization sprang into life with our religion; and faith in its principles is the life-blood on which humanity has at diverse times escaped the most threatening perils."—In New York Christian Advocate, April 3, 1884.

Quotations might be multiplied; but these will suffice. In view of these considerations, our position will not seem novel or unwarranted. We trust the reader may be able to reach an intelligent conclusion with little or no difficulty.

Christianity is the parent of our great republic. It sustained our fore-fathers in the struggle for independence. It taught their descendants to be free and happy. It has been the foundation and source of our national greatness and prosperity. Surely, then, it is safe to assume that ours is a Christian nation. Weatherford, Texas, Jan. 29, 1887.

TIMES OF WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION.

REMINISCENCES BY HON. S. C. POMEROY.

HOW KANSAS BECAME A FREE STATE. (Concluded.)

After this location had been effected Lawrence was a busy city, for it was a city from the start. I devoted myself to getting up a saw-mill for manufacturing lumber for our houses, and met my full share of delays and discouragements. Dr. Robinson, as we then called him, remained more constantly with the colony, and was first in everything. He was wise and prudent in counsel, and had a most unselfish devotion to the good of the Free State cause. And now, in my old age, I say deliberately he was the truest and bravest man I ever saw. I have seen him in war and in peace, in riots and bloodshed, when wisdom was needed in counsel and bravery in execution, with the most unruffled temper. While he had the courage of Caesar, he had at the same time the feelings of a man—a noble, honest champion, a fearless defender. The cause owed him much; Lawrence, everything.

In October of the first year, before we had builded a house (save temporary ones), we were visited by the officials appointed by President Pierce for the government of Kansas. I remember that Governor

Reeder, the secretary, marshals and judges, all drove up one day to see the first Yankee settlement, and partook of our rude hospitality. I was designated to make them an address of welcome. This I tried to do, and met with a pleasant response from the Governor. Samuel F. Tappan, a Boston Abolitionist of the old type, reported the proceeding for the papers, and I quote from a slip in my old scrap-book, as saying in this speech: "Gov. Reeder, and officers of the Territory: We welcome you to our place of abode, as the site selected for our homes in the new Territory. We have journeyed through the older settled States to avail ourselves of the provisions of the law which opened Kansas for settlement. We gladly welcome the executive officers appointed by the President of the United States, and shall cheerfully co-operate with you in all just measures to promote the prosperity of the Territory. We respect law and abide by decisions of courts of justice. We come to seek the things that make for peace; and in good faith to abide by the constituted authorities and make for ourselves homes in this virgin soil. We have come with the Bible and the spelling-book. They were presented to us as the emblems of our civilization, and we propose to lay the one upon the altar of a free church and the other upon the desk of a free school. We have inherited the principles of freedom from honored ancestors, and hope not to be found unworthy custodians of the gift."

"To these rude dwellings, just put up, you are welcomed. We congratulate you upon the favorable auspices with which you enter upon the responsibilities of your station; upon the delightful prospects of founding a rich and prosperous State. We have chosen this site, upon which we hope to see built a great city. On the hill which overlooks us [where the State University now stands] we hope to have erected an institution of learning, and have already dedicated all that section to learning and religion, for this generation and for all who come after us."

To this the Territorial officers responded in very fitting words. It was their first visit to Lawrence, and a great day for the new settlement. The place put on the dignity of a city before we had a single permanent house, or one that could be warmed in cold weather. Besides tents, Lawrence had a few temporary cabins, and two or three large and somewhat public edifices, made in this way: Our men cut poles or small logs about twenty-five feet long, placing the large ends in the prairie sod, and bringing the tops together, fastening them with short pieces of rope. Placed all in line they formed a sort of steep roof, like the top of a Pennsylvania barn set down upon the soil, for these poles were like rafters, and performed the same uses. We thatched them with long prairie grass, the only thing we had in great abundance, and thus protected ourselves from rain. The gable ends were covered with white cotton cloth, which kept out the wind and let in the light. For a carpet we covered the floors with new, sweet prairie hay, and congratulated ourselves upon our many comforts. These large thatched houses served the purpose for places of entertainment, for lodging and dining rooms, and for public meetings, both for week days and upon the Sabbath.

We had not been a week there before we organized "The First Congregational Church of Kansas." This some eight or ten young men did one evening in a tent, sitting upon trunks, one holding a tallow candle in his hand, while I had extemporized a writing-desk, and with pen in hand, while brother Savage (still living at Lawrence) held an ink-bottle. I wrote a Declaration that we, then and there, formed a Congregational church, and resolved that as soon as practicable we would present our letters from the several churches in the East of which we were members.

At the same time, and in the same manner, I also wrote Articles of Faith, and a Covenant, such as I remembered were in use in Massachusetts. And so a full-fledged church appeared upon the prairie, without the aid of minister, priest or bishop! We demonstrated that none were needed to form a church of Christ, where a body of believers chose to associate themselves for that purpose. The Rev. S. T. Lum was afterwards accredited to us as minister and missionary, and was cordially received. He examined all we had done, pronounced it regular and proper, and then and thereafter we enjoyed regular preaching service. That church, thus formed, took the Bible presented to us at Rochester, and there she stands to-day, with an elegant church edifice, filled with devout worshippers, and the Rev. Richard Cordly, an honored and beloved pastor, officiating in a most acceptable manner.

This is to show that the church goes of itself,—is planted where believers choose to make their homes; that the source of all authority under God is in the church itself; and it is inherent there, and no officials from abroad need to come to give authority, or to exercise authority. Indeed, there is no authority higher than the church itself acting under Christ, the Great Head.

This example of church organization was copied elsewhere. The public school, too, followed in the wake of the church. Mr. Charles L. Edwards, whose name suggests his honored and distinguished ancestors—and he, not a degenerate son—was soon in charge of the first free school. He had been a successful teacher in my town in Massachusetts, and could not, and did not, fail in the new settlement.

Thus were established these models of religion and learning with the first settlement. And they stand to-day, and will forever stand, not simply as monuments of the wisdom and devotion of the first settlers of Lawrence, but as the pride and glory of a great commonwealth. There stands Kansas, the center of the continent, the Queen of the Prairies, high above all her surroundings in her efficiency of church service, in her well-equipped schools, and in her influential and commanding public press. In these consist the greatness, the grandeur, the glory of a State.

Washington, D. C.

THE IMMORAL LODGE COVENANT.

BY REV. C. F. HAWLEY.

In discussing the morals of Ancient Craft Masonry we must remember that it is the covenant that makes the Mason; not what the master says to the candidate before he is sworn, nor what is said to him in the lecture after he is sworn; but the covenant, ratified with an oath. What makes one Mason better than another when viewed from the Masonic standpoint is, that the one keeps his obligation more strictly than the other. Therefore, to determine the moral character of Masonry we must analyze its covenants.

As religion is principally taught in the Master's degree, I would call attention to the morality of the Master Mason's covenant.

I admit that Master Masons are sworn not to cheat each other: and that they are further sworn not to act the part of libertines towards the wives or mothers or sisters or daughters of Master Masons, when they know them to be such. I frankly confess that I fail to see any moral quality in these clauses of the Master's obligation. It seems rather as though they expected to initiate some scoundrels, and, therefore, swore them not to cheat their brother Master Masons, under no less penalty than to have their two legs amputated above their hips, and a bonfire made of their bowels; that they expected to receive some licentious men to membership, and, therefore, swore them not to select their victims from the wives or mothers or sisters or daughters of Master Masons; at least, not when "they knew them to be such." Partial honesty and chastity may be observed in this obligation; but I see only an effort to protect themselves and their families from the scoundrels and libertines of their order, while the reckless immorality of the system is seen in the fact that they are left free to prey upon the property or virtue of those outside.

Moreover, the Masonic obligations, a strict observance of which is said to free from sin, are of such a nature as to bind to sin and crime, as well. I instance the Master's obligation to keep all criminal secrets, except murder and treason, that Master Masons might commit to him; and the Royal Arch obligation to keep all criminal secrets, not excepting murder and treason. Persons thus sworn are liable to be brought into court and sworn to tell the "whole truth" about the very matter that they have been Masonically sworn to keep an inviolable secret.

Behold that Masonic witness, with two oaths upon his soul; one binding him to keep secret what the other binds him to fully reveal. God is back of the civil government, and the witness is exposed to his eternal wrath if he does not tell the whole truth, as God's minister, the civil magistrate, has sworn him to do. Masonry is back of his oath to keep the criminal secrets of his brothers and companions in Masonry, and seeks to terrify him by her savage, murderous penalties into strictly keeping his Masonic covenants. With the brazen effrontery of a harlot she insists that her covenants are irrevocable, and, therefore, perpetual; that they are more binding than either civil or ecclesiastical law; and then to cap the climax of this devilish philosophy, the victim of Masonry is taught that by strictly adhering to the covenants of Masonry he is freed from sin.

What can be more blasphemously wicked? What darker doctrine of devils has ever been taught?

What! freed from sin, by strictly observing a covenant that binds to sin! Surely it would make the devil blush, if he was cornered and obliged to father such a doctrine as that.

How long, O Lord! how long shall this system of devil worship be permitted to corrupt the churches and the courts of this Christian land?

"SO ABSALOM STOLE THE HEARTS OF THE MEN OF ISRAEL."

The Bible tells us that Absalom rose up early and stood beside the gate, and when any man had a controversy and came to the king for judgment, Absalom would call to him and say, "Of what city art thou?" After the man would answer then Absalom would say, "See, thy matters are good and right, but there is no man deputed of the king to hear thee." "Oh, that I were made judge in the land."

This stealing of hearts neither began nor ended there, but has kept pace with honesty and candor, and has more than won in the race, until there is no place where we may not find people resorting to these measures. Ask the school teacher who has hardly common sense, "How do you succeed so well in teaching?" She will reply, "Oh, I keep on the right side of the officers." Ask the officers who have no adaptation to school work, but who keep their offices several years, "How do you manage to hold your offices so long?" "Oh, I've learned to please the people." How many men during the last campaign turned their thoughts toward an office, and left their farms and workshops and stood beside the gate, not only early in the morning but late at night, not kissing, but hand-shaking, and saying, "See, thy matters are just and right. Oh, that I were made judge in the land." I knew a young man at school that was genial and pleasant; no one was so kind in explaining that which was hard to be understood as he; but a desire for pleasing took possession of him there. After leaving school he went into the drug business "and stood beside the gate," and last November he not only "stole the hearts," but also the votes of the people (with free whisky), and has now gone to Lansing to help adjust the affairs of our State and be "a judge in the land."

A man starts a newspaper in a certain village, and he puffs the G. A. R., talks of reunion, pensions for the boys, etc. He smiles on the church, then on the lodge, on the schools, on the W. C. T. U., smiles, smiles continually, and thus "he steals the hearts," and the silver dollars come rolling in, and it is thought he will certainly become one of our State Representatives. Christian women become disgusted with all this fawning and flattery, though they would love to have the ballot, but preserve us from the "wooing and cooing" for office.

Have our dear sisters of the W. C. T. U. concluded to seek the assistance of secret societies to aid them in their work? What means, at their last annual meeting, their compliments and recognition of the Knights of Labor as their co-laborers in the work of temperance? If they decided at their last meeting that the Knights of Labor were their co-laborers, perhaps at their next annual meeting they may conclude the G. A. R. is "a good temperance society," and will not many Masons become their ally? The Lord forbid that as temperance workers we should seek to steal the hearts of members of secret societies to further the temperance work.—Martha V. Sked in the American.

DR. MCGLYNN'S CASE.

The call of Dr. McGlynn of New York to Rome, to tell the pope why he did not obey his superior, and why he should not be suspended from his priestly functions permanently, has caused considerable disturbance in the Roman Catholic church as well as in labor circles. The case is a very simple one, and may be stated in a few words. Dr. McGlynn was the rector of St. Stephen's church in New York, and took a great interest in the last city election in New York, in which he espoused with great vigor and earnestness the cause of Henry George, the labor candidate for mayor. The doctor was advertised to speak at a certain public meeting, in behalf of Mr. George and his cause, which the bishop forbade him doing. Regardless of this he appeared at the meeting, made his address, and was promptly relieved of his duties as rector of St. Stephen's. His case was referred to Rome where he was ordered to appear and defend himself, but he flatly refuses to obey. There are, of course, two factions in the case. The labor people maintain that the doctor had a right to disobey the commands of his bishop, who had no authority to restrain him in his duties as a citizen, or to say what party he should or should not favor. The other faction holds that, while a priest may vote as he pleases, the church has the right to say how far he may go in the support of his candidate. Without discussing the abstract question as to whether a church has the right to restrain its clergy in politics, the labor party in New York is in no position to attack the church for what it has done. The Knights of Labor compel implicit obedience from its members, who have agreed to obey officials of the order, and certainly no Knight has promised obedience with more solemnity than has Dr. McGlynn himself, who has promised to obey the authorities of the church to which he belongs. Having done so, he should either obey or leave it, and this he has the unquestioned right to do. He can leave the priesthood whenever he pleases, but so long as he remains in it he is bound by the rules and discipline of the church. The submission he has counseled he must practice himself. The Knights of Labor would not themselves tolerate for an hour the spirit they advocate in the case of Dr. McGlynn, however restive they may be when the discipline they insist upon operates against them.—Chicago News.

THE LABORING PEOPLE AND THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The suspension of Father McGlynn by Archbishop Corrigan, for advocating the election of Henry George as mayor of New York, has naturally excited a great deal of discussion both in and out of the Catholic church. The followers of the Roman church in this country are generally very poor people, and very many of them are Irish or of Irish descent. Naturally, they incline to extreme views on the land question, and are more or less committed to the various labor organizations. Hence, a section of the poorer class of Catholics were eager supporters of Father McGlynn in the stand he took for Henry George. But the Catholic church is, by its traditions, on the side of power and property. At one time, Mother Church was the owner of the bulk of the soil of Europe. Henry VIII. was the first to confiscate the lands of the priests to the state, and his example has since been followed by nearly every government in Europe, Catholic as well as Protestant. Naturally, the church has objected to what she regarded as spoliation. Hence Archbishop Corrigan's rebuke of Father McGlynn's attitude toward the land question was but carrying out the civil policy of the church for the last three hundred years. But the vital matter is the effect of this action on the large body of Roman Catholics who are affiliated with the labor organizations. If Dr. McGlynn should raise the standard of revolt, he would, undoubtedly, have a large following. So far, in this country, when the Roman church has come in conflict with the Protestants on the school question, it has had no serious internal dissensions. This has been the nearest approach to a national dispute between Catholics in this country. Still it could never be very far reaching, as the difference does not involve doctrine, or religious faith, but it may wean a large body of working-people away from the church, if they believe the latter favors the rich and employing class at their expense.—From Demorest's Monthly for March.

ROME IN GERMANY.

The suspension of Father McGlynn for taking a part in politics which was not approved by his Church, caused great excitement and much rebellious feeling among the Irish Catholics of this city. They looked upon the act as an aggressive one on the part of their Church, and were for a time determined to resist. In reality, however, it was just an illustration of the invariable policy of that Church, a policy only modified by a judicious leniency when compulsion is found impossible.

The same question is now up in Germany. A serious conflict is apparently about to be waged between the Church of Rome and a large portion of its members over the Septennate bill. Prince Bismarck, as a last resort, to overcome Parliamentary oppositions, and crush the rising spirit of liberty, has made a league with the Pope. By this agreement he has consented to revise the May laws, which shut the religious orders out of Germany, on condition that the Pope shall secure enough votes of Roman Catholic members in the next Reichstag to carry the Septennate bill. The Pope wrote a letter expressing his desire that the bill should pass in the interests of the Church, but the Roman Catholic leaders did not feel disposed to be guided by his Holiness in such matters. Now the Bishops are, it seems, compelled to warn the priests not to take part in any agitation against the bill. There can be little doubt that the Emperor and the Pope between them will triumph.

The great struggle which is now going on in the German Empire has thus a deeper significance than the mere question of the strength of the army or the length of time for which supplies should be voted.—New York Witness.

OUR LETTER FROM GREECE.

ANDROS, Greece, Via Syria, Jan. 10, 1887.

DEAR BRO. K.:—It is a long time since we wrote to you. Since our baby died and the preaching here, the people seem to have changed their views and feelings towards us, and not only many children come every Sabbath, but some of the women come also and we have a Sabbath-school service and some extra talks to the women. But the evil priests put their hands everywhere to destroy our work. One woman came regularly every Sabbath and was so glad to hear the Word, but now for two Sabbaths she has not been here. It seems that since she went to the priest and confessed her sins during the fast just before Christmas that he turned her head away from us.

The children of our Sunday-school are very fond of pictures, so if any of your Sunday-school children have any old papers with pictures, or some pictures to spare, we should be very glad to have you send us a few, for every Sunday when they come here they see the same pictures over and over again.

We are so surprised to see a newspaper article from Abyssinia printed in a Greek newspaper about the following things which took place there. One of the high officers of the king of Abyssinia's army used to get drunk regularly and utter insulting words against the king. This reached the king's ears and the officer was called before the court to give an answer. He confessed that he was guilty of uttering such words and the officer was condemned and executed. After a few days another officer died from the effects of drunkenness. After the king heard of the death of the latter he made the proclamation that whoever should bring into the country intoxicating drinks should have his arms and legs cut off and suffer the penalty of death. This proclamation was made to the great damage to the business of the Italian merchants.

Perhaps you have already heard of it through some press and it will not be very interesting to be published again; but to me it was very striking, for it is the first time that the Greek newspapers have published such a thing and I carry the paper in my pocket and show it all around to the people. This was printed in one of the leading daily papers of Athens, the Acropolis. We hope that this proud and haughty people may take a lesson from that semi-civilized king and nation and do better. Yours with Christian love,

A. D. ZARAPHONITHES.

REFORM NEWS.

AMONG THE MOUNTAINS.

Biddle Institute, Charlotte, N. C.—Its instructors and students.—An examination in Hebrew.—Jones Institute.—Crowder's Mountain under foot.—A pleasant Sabbath.—An expected adversary.

GASTONIA, N. C., Feb. 14, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I reached Charlotte, N. C., at 1 A. M. of the 10th, and at 9 o'clock went to Biddle Institute, where I was most kindly received by President Johnson, taken to his pleasant and hospitable home and entertained during my stay in the place. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have spent twenty-five years in missionary work in the north of India. Their family of six children were all born there, and it is but two years since they returned. It was arranged that I should address the students at 9 o'clock next morning, and that I should not be limited as to time. Meanwhile I listened to recitations or visited and was introduced to professors and their families. Biddle Institute has two large and fine college buildings, beautifully situated a mile or more out of the city. It has eight professors, nearly all of whom are men of maturity and much experience. Every one of them with whom I conversed expressed a hearty sympathy with the work in which we are engaged. Several of them had been trained under the teachings of the Covenanters.

There are in attendance 105 young men—young ladies being provided for at Scotia Seminary, Concord, N. C. There is no primary department, and these young men are all in the classical or theological course. I listened to the recitation in Hebrew; and though it was "all Greek" to me, I could at least understand that they took passages of Scripture that I had selected and wrote them rapidly in Hebrew and then gave the grammatical construction. There had certainly been faithful instruction and diligent study.

At 9 o'clock of the 11th I met the students and faculty, and after the usual exercises I spoke nearly an hour on the secret lodge system, and had undivided attention. It is believed that not many of the students here are, or have been, connected with secret societies. In none of the institutions that I have visited have I been shown greater personal kindness, and nowhere has there been greater respect shown to the cause I represent.

At 1:30 P. M. I left for Gastonia (20 miles), where I found in waiting the carriage of Rev. E. E. Boyce, which took me six miles farther to Jones Institute, All Healing. Here I had a most cordial reception and was most kindly entertained. Next day, together with my daughter and a number of the young ladies of the Seminary, we started to climb the apparently inaccessible pinnacle of Crowder's Mountain. A brisk walk of half a mile, slowly ascending through pine woods, brought us to the foot of the almost perpendicular cliffs. Here a winding path up which we climbed by clinging to rocks and shrubbery brought us to the top, a thousand feet higher than the point from which we had started. There was a magnificent view of the country in all directions. The Blue Ridge, twenty miles distant, stood up against the western sky, while King's Mountain and several peaks of less note rose up around us in various directions. Of course we were weary, but we enjoyed the grand panorama which included two villages, Gastonia and Dallas, and two railroads. The rocks were sandstone, interspersed with white flint, and had by some great force been so thrown up that the strata were perpendicular. There are some perpendicular cliffs that are from 200 to 300 feet high.

We discovered that another peak was a little higher than the one where we were. In considering whether we should go to it (for none of us had ever been there) youthful enthusiasm conquered, and old age had to obey. With great difficulty and not without danger we climbed down over the rocks into a deep gorge and began slowly to ascend until greatly fatigued we reached the top, which gave us not so fine a view as from the other peak. We then tilted slowly downward, laden with ferns, mosses, holly berries and trailing arbutus, the last just ready to blossom, and found the dinner waiting, to which we did ample justice.

Sabbath morning we went to Pisgah, a country church of Associate Reformed Presbyterians, ministered to by Rev. E. E. Boyce. The house stands in the woods, and is large, pleasant and commodious. There was a good congregation of intelligent country folk, as well as the young ladies from the Seminary, who had walked two miles to attend. By request of the pastor I spoke for 45 minutes on Africa and its missions. We then had a recess of 10 minutes, and I spoke another three-fourths of an hour on secret societies as related to the Christian church. The subject was new, for it is only since I was here in December that the people have known about our work. They were anxious to hear, and when I had concluded the elders and others took me by the hand and thanked me for my faithfulness. I went home with Bro. Boyce and am enjoying his hospitality.

It has been arranged that to-night I shall lecture in the Town Hall, and it is expected that the pastor of the M. E. church South will reply. A copy of "Masonic Outrages" has been circulated here and has fallen into his hands. He thinks he is called to defend the faith. He is chaplain of the lodge and has a strong backing. May the Lord defend the right. I go from here to Chester, S. C.

General Interest and Expectation Centering in the Chicago Conference.—Lodge Jewels Lost.—An Abdiel at Bellaire.—Anti-Lodge Churches will be Vindicated.

STREUBENVILLE, O., Feb. 16, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am greatly gratified to know that the final arrangements have been made for the conference of Christians to consider the lodge question. I am confident I speak the sentiment of thousands in this State when I say that no movement which the N. C. A. has made of late has awakened such general interest as this conference. This aims at a "consummation devoutly to be wished"—a united effort of the churches. I have constantly been questioned in regard to this. Many who do not read the Cynosure have seen the call in their church papers. I hope that every friend of the cause in this State will either arrange to attend themselves, or assist the church to which they belong in sending delegates. Will not you see to this at once, friends?

During the past week I have again experienced the truth of the statement of one of our workers: "This work brings us into the company of the best people the country affords." "A true reformer always has grit as well as grace." Sabbath morning I filled the appointment of Rev. Wm. Givens. His church is known as the Belmont United Presbyterian church. The attendance was good, notwithstanding the bad condition of the roads. Rev. G. assured me that he would be glad to arrange for lectures any time I might return. I am indebted to Mr. King of this congregation for kind entertainment.

Coming to Bellaire I spoke according to previous arrangement in the church of which Rev. R. G. Wallace is pastor. At the conclusion of the lecture I succeeded in getting the Methodist preacher to show his colors. He stated that he was an Odd-fellow and was proud of it. He thought that I had not treated them fairly, but was prejudiced. He made the usual plea of charity, stating that they had been charitable to him, and so he knew they were what they claimed. Encouraged by this the tyler of the lodge took the floor and stated that he could refute every argument I had advanced if he only had the time. I told him I would give him all the time he wanted. If he wished to discuss I would be pleased to meet him. A discussion followed in which the audience took the greatest interest. The tyler was compelled to admit the statements which I had made in regard to his initiation.

In short, this discussion, like all others, helped to clinch the nail I had endeavored to drive. It was reported in the Cleveland and other papers.

If there is a pastor in the United Presbyterian church that deserves credit for his firm stand, Rev. Wallace is one of them. In some places it is comparatively easy to maintain the rule of the church, but in Bellaire it is not. All the lodge devils in this section, and their name is legion, are combined against this little band. Knowing this Rev. W. did not hesitate a moment to grant the church for my lecture. May the Lord bless him richly.

At Martin's Ferry I found that the former pastor had not enforced the rule against the lodge, and that the present pastor, Rev. Brownlee, thought a lecture at present would not be wise. He said personally, "I detest the lodge." At Steubenville I have been made the welcome guest of Mr. John Berry, a man of deep convictions, who belongs to the old line class of reformers. Mr. B. has lately been quite afflicted by deafness. He accompanied me in my calls and to the prayer meeting in the evening. The subject of the evening was, "Loyalty to the church of Christ, and especially to the principles held by this (the United Presbyterian) church." Rev. Owens very kindly opened the way and invited me to occupy part of the time in speaking of the progress of the anti-secrecy cause. He was especially interested in the conference of Christians. He has recently resigned his pastorate here to superintend the home missionary work of the church. In speaking of his work at home said he, "I always advise our young men to stand firmly by the rule of the church against the lodge. There is a crisis coming. There is a general unrest in the minds of the people. A minister said to me not long since that he would give his right arm if he could speak out on the secrecy question. When the crisis does come we will be on the winning side." This is certainly very encouraging.

Since commencing this report I have taken the train and am now winding my way up the Ohio river en route for Wellsville. I expect (D. V.) to spend Sabbath and such time as may seem best with Rev. H. T. Leiper at Moore's Salt Works.

W. B. STODDARD.

IOWA METHODISTS JEALOUS FOR CHRIST.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Owing to a revival meeting in progress at Allerton, Wayne Co., I did not get up a lecture there as I intended, but went ten miles into the country. There I preached three times in the United Presbyterian church, and once for the United Brethren. I lectured at the M. E. church at High Point in the edge of Decatur county, and also at the M. E. church of New Zion, five miles from Corydon, the county seat of Wayne county.

One of the leading brethren of the New Zion church is anxious to have me lecture in all the principal M. E. churches within the circle of his acquaintance. He offered to confer with the brethren and arrange for the lectures when I visit that part of the State again. He is sure that no friend of Jesus would remain a Mason, after hearing such lectures; and he is anxious to have me lecture in Methodist churches, believing that his people, who have been beguiled into the lodge, will immediately forsake that false way, when its true character is presented to them.

I believe this Methodist brother is right. No man, with a spark of loyalty to Christ in his heart, could adhere to Masonry, if he knew that in the religious philosophy of Freemasonry as taught by the men who are appointed by the Grand Lodges to teach Masonry, a plan of salvation is developed, as distinct as the Gospel plan of salvation, in which Christ has no part or place.

I was hindered by rain and sleet from lecturing at Lewisburg, as I had purposed. When I left Wayne county, I came to Mahaske county, and preached in the Free Methodist church last Sabbath morning and night. I have attended several other meetings since, among which was a meeting of the ministers of the city of Oskaloosa. I am preparing the way for a lecture in this city.

Brethren, let there be fervent believing prayer for the blessing of God upon this work. The lodge system is a system of false worship, ignoring repentance towards God, or faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, or both. Satan is the inspiration of all false worship. He is the god of the lodge. It is only by the power of Christ, that his mesmerizing spell upon the minds and hearts of the lodge men can be broken. Christ has power over devils. He can rebuke Satan, and deliver the lodge men from his blinding power, and give them the liberty of the sons of God.

The church must be delivered from this corrupting power. Christ, by the Holy Ghost, will make the truth mighty to free the church from the domination of the lodge if we come up to his help and pray and labor as we ought. The church is the salt of the state. It must be cleansed from the lodge leprosy, if we would have impartial justice in the courts.

WILLIAMSTON, Mich.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It may be of interest to your readers to be informed of movements in our State against the unfruitful works of darkness. We employed two colporteurs last fall, only one of whom has reported to me personally. Rev. S. E. Lane of the U. B. church was one. I have been informed of his sickness and of the sickness of his wife, so that probably not much has been done. Bro. Lane when in the field is effective.

Bro. J. Tucker, a seceded Mason of three degrees, whom the Lord has clearly and unmistakably called to the work, has done some good service since the rise of our October convention. Wherever he has been a fire has been kindled. He takes especial pains to call upon Masons and their families, and tells his simple story of how the Lord called him from the iniquity of the lodge. He carries books and tracts and scatters light and truth in every vicinity. Without mentioning his former connection with the lodge, he opens his valise and presents the tracts and shows the books, patiently waiting for the criticisms and denials which are sure to come, even from professed followers of Christ, and frequently from his ministers (so-called). He then quietly informs them that he has been through it all, and can vouch for the correctness of the expositions, at the same time referring to the call of God to him to come out and leave the ungodly system.

What always follows is easily imagined. When their wrath is at white heat, he again quietly says to them, "I used to feel just as you do. I can sympathize with you," etc., at the same time telling, or trying to tell, how God led him to see his error. Many times he is not allowed to proceed. Even in the homes of ministers he is shamefully abused, being told to leave the house, and that his talk is not desirable, etc. He has been silenced on the trains, abused in depots, pushed out of stores and shops, etc. In one instance the man of the house caught one of the books, and hurling it to the floor with great vehemence, told Bro. Tucker to leave his premises at once.

Still Bro. Tucker continues in the same pleasant way, bearing reproach for Christ's sake, and doing effective service. Michigan contains other workers who will not keep silence, even at the howling rage of the poor cable-towed votaries of the dark, secret chambers. Among these steady, straight-forward men, whose names and labors will not all be mentioned here, the name of Edwin Webster of Oakland county comes prominently before me. For how many years, I know not, he has quietly published and circulated annually hundreds, and probably thousands, of tracts, working with a small press, without ostentation or remuneration.

We as a State claim the citizenship of C. C. Foote and Geo. W. Clark, whose homes are in Detroit. There are others whose names we will not mention here, in whose lives of labor and sacrifice for this cause there occur incidents which occasionally reach the ear of the secretary, but space will not allow mention of them.

The writer is now preparing a review of the Ida Lee murder case; which murder (as no doubt it was) occurred in the village of Brighton a few weeks since. The beauties of Odd-fellow membership will no doubt come to light so that every one contemplating any such dastardly outrage will at once seek shelter under cover of this charitable institution, founded on "Friendship, Love and Truth." For the statements made some time since, concerning the Cronch murders and murderers, judge, jury, etc., I have been warned to be on my guard. I never venture away from home without a competent body guard, a relative of mine. In fact he lives with me. I find him a friend that sticketh closer than a brother, and when I put myself under his care, he said: "I will be with thee always, even unto the end of the world."

NOTES OF THE ILLINOIS WORK.

TONICA, Ill., Feb. 14, 1887.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, State agent of the Ill. C. A., was here five nights, giving his illustrated lectures on Egypt, Palestine, etc., commencing on Monday evening, Jan. 31. His lectures drew large houses of the most intelligent and cultured people of Tonica. All admitted that it was the finest entertainment of the kind that they had ever attended.

Friday evening he gave his first lecture on mythology, showing the origin of idolatrous worship, that it began by the worship of nature. Saturday night he traced it down to the modern sn-worship, Freemasonry, making it very clear that it is a religion which rejects Christ, as the readers of the Cynosure are well aware.

Bro. Arnold is well adapted to the work. His manner in presenting this subject is such as to inspire confidence in him, even from those who are opposed to the reform movement. A Mason who was present told me that every word he said about Freemasonry was true. Another Mason said that he could have sat two hours longer. An Odd-fellow said that he had never thought of the subject in that light before.

A number of Christian people have expressed themselves as seeing the lodge question in a new light after hearing the lecture, and are looking into the matter for themselves, by the aid of books on the subject. We feel that God has blessed the brother's work here in Tonica. Your brother in the work,

J. H. BULLOCK.

WENONA, Ill., Feb. 14, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I. R. B. Arnold, our State lecturer, has just given us a course of five lectures on ancient sun, or nature worship by the Egyptians. His illustrations and explanations seemed to be favorably received as an unquestionable fact, until he began comparing it to the rites and ceremonies of the Masonic and Odd-fellows' lodges, when it became very unpalatable to those members of the fraternity present, as they did not seem to relish being compared with heathen idolaters.

I think Mr. Arnold's plan of showing the origin and theology of the Masonic fraternity the best I ever saw or heard of, and more likely to meet with success than any previously followed. While he said nothing that could reasonably offend, his presentations and comparisons were so forcible that they could hardly fail of carrying conviction to a candid hearer. One of our best citizens told me it was the best lecture he had ever heard on that subject.

While some of the fraternity accuse Mr. Arnold of practicing deception, by announcing one subject and speaking upon another, they do not realize that their "eyes are blinded." Since the lecture I hear the old retaliatory threat made that, "Such lectures will make more Masons than it will convert," but I tell them if they join with a knowledge of the truth their sin is the greater. From your friend in the cause,

DISCUSSIONS AND VICTORIES ON THE OHIO.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 12, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Constantine saw a cross suspended from the heavens bearing this motto: In hoc signo vinces (By this sign thou shalt conquer). Following it he entered Rome and assumed the purple in A. D. 323. Paganism went down and Christianity ascended the throne of the Cæsars. The National Reform Association has seen the sign of Christ's crown and covenant, and following it they propose to storm the fortifications of Satan in our land, and exalt the King of kings to the throne.

On last Sabbath morning and evening I preached in the Cumminsville Presbyterian church, Rev. J. M. Anderson, pastor. They have 230 members and 300 scholars in their Sabbath-school. Their new brick church is neat and comfortable. Our audience numbered over 400 at each service. Bro. Anderson is a third party Prohibitionist. He learned national reform from Prof. A. A. Hodge while in the seminary, and it has been growing on him ever since.

The subject discussed at the Presbyterian ministers' meeting last Monday was, "Is a third party necessary?" The brethren were agreed that the Prohibition party has done good. It has held up a higher standard of political morality; it has compelled the recognition of moral reforms; and it is hastening on the crisis which will issue in national reformation. Dr. French voted the Abolition ticket before the war, and now he votes with the Prohibitionists.

On Wednesday evening I lectured in the Presbyterian church of Manchester, Rev. Maurice Waller, pastor. This is a river town of 4,000. The flood last week came up to Second street. The one in 1884 submerged the greater part of the place. Last summer the temperance people drove the saloons into the river, but they were not choked. They set up in the wharf-boats under cover of bourbon Kentucky, until the fever had passed away, and then returned. The town is infested with secret orders; Masons for men and Daughters of Rebecca for women. They are the dry rot on our political body. They are sapping the life-blood of the church. If all the time and energy and money expended on secret, oath-bound societies were devoted to the church, the millennial reign would be here within one decade. If the church allow the talent to be hid in the napkin of the lodge, she cannot expect her Head to smile upon her.

On Thursday evening I spoke in the Union Methodist church of West Union. They are holding revival meetings. The house was filled to its utmost capacity.

On Friday evening I lectured in the Winchester M. E. church, Rev. Maddox, pastor; and was entertained at the homes of Revs. Kerr and Park. I was urged to make the rounds of these same places again two weeks hence. I rode in the hack forty-six miles holding these meetings, part of the time through a dashing rain, and part chilling cold.

J. M. FOSTER.

SALVATION NEWS FROM THE SOUTH.

TARPOON SPRINGS, Fla., Feb. 9th, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—You may be a little surprised to learn that I am here in the land of flowers, preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ, a great portion of the time, to a class of people we have understood in the North to be our bitter enemies. But I find the love of God breaks down the wall of partition, and I receive as warm a welcome in these Southern churches (composed of what we termed rebels) as I ever did in any Northern churches.

I have conducted a series of meetings in three different places, Tarpon Springs, Curlew and Keystone, and to-morrow I begin a series at Anclote. The Lord has blessed my labors most wonderfully. A great many church members have been lifted out of dead formalism into a higher Christian life, and a large number of sinners have been born into the kingdom of our Lord.

I have heard of but one secret society in this section, and that is a lodge of Odd-fellows among the colored people. No liquor is sold openly in this section, and since I came here I have only seen one man that even had the appearance of being at all under the influence of liquor. Where he got his liquor is a mystery. But the people, young and old, male and female, use tobacco as though they relished it. In every place I have held meetings some one has been freed from the tobacco habit.

A man testified last Sunday that when I first presented the tobacco subject he was convinced it was a sin, and then he took his case to the Lord, and he destroyed the appetite. He claimed he had tried a great many times to quit before this, but he said the appetite was so strong he could not hold out; but now he claims to be free from any desire whatever for tobacco. A man testified in the meeting last evening that after attending one of the meetings about four weeks ago, he went home and prayed to God to show him whether chewing tobacco was a sin or not, and if a sin to destroy the appetite. He said he carried a plug of tobacco in his pocket and every once in a while he would unconsciously take it out in his hand, but would no sooner see the tobacco than the desire would leave him. This he says he did for about two weeks, and since that time he believes God has taken away the desire for chewing tobacco.

One good old lady got up in a meeting and testified that Jesus had been her Saviour for over fifty years, and then said, "This is the gladdest time of my life." One of the leading members of the church where we were last Sunday, was sick night unto death. He was taken suddenly ill Saturday night, and his people believed it to be a relapse of pneumonia which he had been having a short time since. They sent around the country and gathered in his friends, as they believed him to be dangerous. When the people were gathered in the church, I related the condition of the brother to them, quoted them the promises of God for the sick, and then we laid the case in the hands of God, and the good brother soon recovered. I saw him Monday morning and he was looking as bright as before his sickness.

I would like to tell you of many more of the cases that God has been working with, but these will suffice to show you that God is no respecter of persons or places. Yours in Christ, WM. E. CATLIN.

IS THIS ANOTHER CASE OF MASONIC MURDER?

OTISCO, Mich.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—About eight miles northeast of where I reside lives a lady by the name of Worden, who gave me the following statement concerning the death of her father:

"When I was about six years of age my father, whose name was John Bredeburgh, was said to have died of cholera in Albany, N. Y. Masons reported this, and Masons came to my father's house and unlocked his trunk and took out his Masonic regalia and carried them off. Masons told my mother that her husband was dead and buried.

"When I removed from Deerfield, Michigan, to Saginaw, I found a man named Austin, who was an old friend of my father's. He had worked with him many a day on buildings. They were stone masons. He told me that he threw the last shovel full of dirt upon my father's grave; that he (my father) was found with his throat cut from ear to ear.

"Twelve years ago I went to visit my mother in the State of New York, and I asked her about it; and she was astonished and came near fainting, and had spasms during the night. This was near Lewiston, N. Y. Across the street from my mother's there lived a man by the name of Kneeland Townsend. One night the Masons came and called him out. His wife fearing, caught hold of him and would not let him go. Then a shot was fired and the ball came near the place where Mrs. Townsend stood, brushing her hair as it passed by. Townsend then wrenched himself away from his wife and went out, and was not heard from again in a year."

This occurred during Mrs. Worden's visit at her mother's home some twelve years ago, and she could give no further information in regard to the matter. Their reason for firing upon a brother Mason she never learned.

JAMES L. ANDREWS.

A GOOD SUGGESTION—LET US HAVE IT.

PLANO, Ill.

MR. EDITOR:—Why not have some corner or department in the Cynosure specially set apart for the confessions, renunciation, or experience of individuals who have seceded from secret societies? I have lately received the following from a near relative: "I have been a member of four secret societies, one of which was Masonic; but years ago I gave all up, concluding I could fill in my time more profitably than attending them. I do not think it consistent for myself to have anything to do with them. I do not see how any devoted Christians (and I doubt if there are any) can be active in a Masonic lodge, and I do not see how any Christians can belong to the order, but no doubt many do (such as are ignorant of the real claims and teachings of the order, I suppose he means), but I think they need 'washing.' Their eyes need opening to see where they stand."

I have also received a reply to inquiries in regard to Masonry, from a minister past 80 years of age, who claims to be the oldest Mason in this State, a minister of fifty years' standing in one of the largest and most popular denominations in the land. He does not distinctly, in so many words, condemn Masonry, but advises all ministers with whom he is associated to "let it (Masonry) have the go by," thus tacitly, and very unexpectedly to me, admitting it to be an evil.

J. S. BIBBINS.

PITH AND POINT.

POMEROY, BLANCHARD, FOSTER—MORE OF THEM AND MORE LIKE THEM WANTED.

I read many papers, and I know of no one that within the past few years has improved more in character, and risen more in my estimation than the Christian Cynosure. The biographical notices and portraits of eminent Anti-masons constitute a feature of rare value. Ex-Senator Pomeroy's papers are of thrilling interest. They have only one fault. They are getting over the ground too rapidly. There can be no question that Samuel C. Pomeroy is full of reminiscences of the period of which he writes that would be eagerly welcomed by a host of readers. And let Dr. Blanchard's pen, always racy and always vigorous, and almost always right, give us from the full storehouse of his memory as many historical sketches as practicable of the stirring times in which he mingled. He must be able to recall a multitude of facts and persons of great interest to us. The new and happy feature of Bro. Foster's letters on National Reform work is to be commended, and should be maintained. And above all continue to deal out your vigorous smittings of the hydra-headed monster of secrecy with increasing rapidity and power.—D. H. COULTER, Winchester, Kan.

FINCH, STEARNS AND LODGERY THE STUMBLING BLOCKS!

By the reports of the National Convention, they must have had a very enjoyable and profitable time at Knoxville. How I did desire to be there! Poor health and "shorts" prevented. Chicago did nobly. In fact all our reform conventions and associations would be almost a failure without Chicago—wicked, lodge-ridden, dynamite Chicago! What ought to be done about organizing thoroughly the American party? If Finch and Stearns were out of the way, there would be little doubt but a union of all reform parties could be effected substantially on the American platform, perhaps with American Prohibition for a name, and both white and black on the ticket. We await action of the Chicago sub-committee. May the Lord direct.—F. W. CAPWELL.

SCATTER THE TRACTS.

I have been reading some of your tracts, and from being a strong defender of secret societies I now oppose them. If every person should read them carefully, I think there are none who will not be convinced that secret societies are only "selling dead horses," etc. I heartily wish the National Christian Association every success.—CHAS. J. LINDLEY, Madrid, Iowa.

SUGGESTION TO THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

I hope S. C. Pomeroy's letters published in the Cynosure will be put in pamphlet, and the lecture of President George, D.D., at Knoxville, Tenn., also. I wish every minister in the land would read it. If it is put up in tract form I will put it in the hands of ten clergymen.—E. P. TOURESLEY.

THE TABLES TURNED.

The pope is a protestant. Yes, he protests, not against the errors of Rome, of course, but against the loss of the revenues of his church and their restoration to the rightful owners, viz., the people and their servants, the civil authorities of Italy. He laments the present sad times, when freedom, enjoyed by Protestants in Italy, permits them to protest against Romish errors in their very citadel, the city of Rome itself!—T. H.

BRO. HINMAN CAN'T BE SPARED.

I should be rejoiced almost beyond measure, could we here succeed in getting a good, thorough Christian lecturer who is well versed in working up the degrees of Masonry, etc. We should be extremely glad to get such an one as H. H. Hinman, as some of us here believe him to be a genuine Christian gentleman. It needs some one with power, to go into what is called the Friends' church here, and tell them the deceptiveness of lodgery. What a blessing could they but be induced to read certain authentic authors on the subject.—LEWIS WOOD, Spiceland, Ind.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON X.—March 6, 1887.—Abraham Offering Isaac.—Gen. 22: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—God will provide himself a lamb for burnt offering.—Gen. 22: 8.

[Opens the Bible and read the lesson.]

From Peloubet's Notes.

"God did tempt Abraham." "Tempt," i. e., try or prove as in the Revision. God does not tempt any man (Jas. 1: 13) in the sense of persuade, or influence, toward evil; but he continually tries men, by putting them into circumstances which test and manifest their qualities of character.—Todd. The trials of life, are often a great mystery to the one who suffers the trials. "If God is so rich, why does he let us be so poor? If God is strong and so good, why does he let us have so much pain and sorrow?" He gives us for answer the words he spoke to the Israelites who wondered why they must wander 40 years in making a journey for which 40 days would have sufficed. "To prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldst keep his commandments or no" (Deut. 8: 2).

"And offer him there for a burnt offering." That Abraham did not stagger on receiving this astounding injunction may be accounted for by remembering that the practice of offering human sacrifices prevailed among the early Chaldeans and Canaanites, and that as yet no formal prohibition, like that of the Mosaic code, had been issued against them.—Whitellaw. F. W. Robertson well says, "God seems to have required of Abraham what was wrong. He seems to have sanctioned human sacrifice. God did not require it. You must take the history as a whole, the conclusion as well as the commencement. The sacrifice of Isaac was commanded at first, and forbidden at the end. Had it ended in Abraham's accomplishing the sacrifice, it would have left on the page of Scripture a dark and painful blot. My reply to God's seeming to require human sacrifice is the conclusion of this chapter. God says, 'Lay not thine hand upon the lad.' This is the final decree. Thus human sacrifices were distinctly forbidden. He really required the surrender of the father's will. He seemed to demand the sacrifice of life." The act was a supreme test of obedience on the part of Abraham. It was ever to be an object-teaching for the ages of supreme and perfect consecration to God. All we have and are belongs to God; and the true child of God holds it in subjection to his will. The principle holds the same to-day. There are times and circumstances when we must give up our lives and the lives of our children. We let them go as physicians or nurses into the most infected regions. We give them up to be missionaries, even in lands where life may be short; we give them our benediction when they go forth to defend, and perhaps die for, their country. Abraham knew that there would be some way out of it, even though by a miracle; for only so could God's promises be fulfilled (Heb. 11: 19).

"And Abraham said unto his young men, Abide ye here." For two reasons. (1) He would be alone in his agony and in his communion with God. (2) If Abraham had allowed the servants to go with him, they might have interfered, to prevent his obedience to the divine command.—Todd.

"And I and the lad will go yonder, . . . and come again to you." Some think that Abraham told a falsehood here, to prevent any suspicion of his real design; but in this instance we have good authority for believing that Abraham meant what he said, feeling sure that God would provide some deliverance for Isaac, even if it were through resurrection from the dead (Heb. 11: 19). The confidence of Abraham was based upon the repeated and explicit divine promises (chap. 17: 21; 21: 12); and it is here that we find the explanation of his ready obedience.—Todd.

"But where is the lamb for a burnt offering." Only the scenes of Gethsemane and Calvary surpass this; and the anti-type is more than the type.—Jacobus.

"And Abraham built an altar there." An altar of earth or of loose stones would be very quickly raised.

"And bound Isaac, and laid him on the altar." The Jews agree that Isaac yielded submissively to his father's will, and consented to be bound and sacrificed (Joseph. "A. J." 1: 13.) Herein he was the truer type of him, "who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously." (1 Pet. 2: 23).—Cook. It was not merely filial affection and pious obedience to the parent; it was implicit trust in God.—Jacobus.

"And Abraham . . . took the knife." Abraham, so far as his heart and his intent are concerned, has shown the deed virtually done. Paul shows that it was so regarded by God (Heb. 11: 17).—"By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac." It is not the act, so much as the will and the purpose of heart, which God regards. He will take the will for the deed, but never the deed for the will.—Jacobus.

"And behold behind him a ram caught in a thicket by his horns." Here occurs the wonderful substitution, in which God set forth as in a figure the plan of the Mosaic economy for the offering of animal victims instead of human sacrifices, —the blood of bulls and of goats instead of human blood,—animal offerings for the sins of men; pointing forward to the only acceptable substitute whom they foreshadowed, who is God's Lamb and not man's.—Jacobus. It is difficult for the most superficial reader not to be struck with the points of resemblance between the offering of Isaac and the offering of Jesus Christ, and not to be impressed with the idea which has been accepted by the whole Christian world, that the former was designed to be an acted prophecy and illustration of the latter. The giving up by the father of his only and well-beloved son (ver. 3; John 3: 16), the ready submission of the son (John 9: 19; John 10: 15), the bearing of the instrument of death by the victim (ver. 6; John 19: 17), the violent death consented to (ver. 10; John 19: 16), the deliverance from death on the third day (vers. 4, 12; Matt. 20: 19), cannot be mere incidental coincidences. The main points of difference are, that Christ actually died, and died as a substitute for others; and these facts were typified in the substitution and actual death of the ram, so that Isaac and the ram together made a perfect type.—Todd. Thus all through the earliest Scripture are types and foregleams of the great central truth of the Bible, growing clearer and fuller till it shines forth from the cross like the noonday sun.—P.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

PASTOR FISCH, of Paris, 1873:—"The church in America must stand as one man against Masonry or be destroyed."

REV. JOEL SWARTZ, D. D., a renouncing Mason:—"Its (Freemasonry's) religion is anti-Christian . . . Its prayers are blasphemous. . . Its use of the Bible is sacrilegious. . . The whole is a compound of Judaism and paganism."

MOSES STUART, Professor in Andover Theological Seminary, Mass., 1834:—"For a long time I neither knew nor cared about the subject; but recent attention to it has filled me with astonishment; and as to something contained in it, with horror. The trifling with oaths and with the awful name of the ever blessed God, is a feature which I cannot contemplate but with the deepest distress."

PRESIDENT C. G. FINNEY, of Oberlin, 1868:—"We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. In our judgment we are forced to the same conclusion, we cannot escape from it, we wish it were otherwise, we therefore sorrowfully but solemnly pronounce this judgment."

CHARLES G. FINNEY.—God demands and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion.

NATHANIEL COLVER, former pastor Tremont Temple, Boston:—"I am free to say that it is my deliberate opinion that the vicious character of Masonry and its guilt-concealing and barbarous oaths are such, as not only to release all from their bonds, but also to lay upon them the solemn obligation to tear off its covering and expose its enormity. I regard it as Satan's masterpiece, a terrible snare to men. It sits at this moment as a nightmare on all the moral energies of our government, and utterly paralyzes the arm of justice."

DWIGHT L. MOODY:—"Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges or have some darling sin they will not give up."

REV. HENRY JONES:—"On what then does the whole superstructure of Freemasonry rest but a base fabrication of wicked men, who in some dark and apostate age of the world, have risen up, united into a secret society and darkly handed down their inventions to flatter us to believe that their institution is good as having originated among wise and good men; and being ignorant of the manner in which their false pretensions would be exposed, have told us that it was established on certain specified facts and events, which by looking at them carefully, and comparing them with our Bible, we find never had existence?"

REV. MOSES THATCHER:—"Our Saviour declared to the Jewish high priest, 'I spake openly to the world; and in secret have I said nothing.' What now would be thought of the church if she should 'tyle' her doors, impose obligations in secret, and place a perpetual seal upon the lips of her members? Would it any longer be believed that her sole object is to promote the religion of the Gospel? Now if the church, which is the purest body on earth, could not and would not be trusted as a secret society, who can blame conscientious and judicious men for drawing the conclusion that any secret society, of whatever description, is altogether unnecessary and cannot exist without becoming an object of suspicion, if not an engine of wickedness."

ALBERT BARNES, 1849:—"Any good cause, I think, can be promoted openly; any secret association is liable, at least, to abuse and danger."

L. L. HAMLINE, Bishop M. E. church, in his diary, 1848:—"North Ohio Conference has progressed very rapidly till this time, but Masonry and Odd-fellowship have arrested us." At another time: "I have enjoyed and suffered much during its session. Masonry and Odd-fellowship, a bane in the midst of us, have done us much evil."—Life, pp. 323, 4.

REV. JOSHUA BRADLEY, a renouncing Mason:—"A lying spirit is abroad, and speaks through all Masonic presses, and this spirit influences all who hate the truth, and will make them worse and worse, till sudden destruction shall overwhelm those workers of iniquity, to the astonishment of every beholder. Then Masonry will rise no more to trouble Zion, and spread delusion and death amid civilized nations."

PRES. L. N. STRATTON, D. D.:—"One other fact worth naming is, that the oaths and secret workings of Freemasonry are out and well-known to the world. They are published in the reports of several State legislatures, and in Wendell's Supreme Court Reports of the State of New York, Vol. XII, pp. 9-26. Their oaths are no less murderous than those taken by the Molle Maguires, and for obedience to which latter twenty-one have been tried and hung in the State of Pennsylvania."

JOSEPH S. CHRISTMAS, Pastor Bowers Presbyterian church, New York, 1830:—"If these remarks should meet the eye of any follower of the Redeemer who still worships at the altar of Masonry, I beg him once more to consider whether, imposed on by the mock solemnities of the lodge and the pompous pretensions of the craft, he is not really attempting to effect a concord between Christ and Belial; and whether he does not owe it to the souls of Masons, to the honor of the church of Christ, and to the good of mankind, to come out and be separate."

DRS. LEONARD WOODS, EBENEZER PORTER and THOMAS H. SKINNER, Professors at Andover to the Massachusetts Legislature:—"Praying for a full investigation into the nature, language, ceremonies, and form of rehearsing extra-judicial oaths in Masonic bodies; and if found to be such as the Memorialists describe them, that a law may be passed prohibiting the future administration of Masonic, and such other extra-judicial oaths, as tend to weaken the sanctions of civil oaths in courts of justice; and pray also for the repeal of the charter granted by this Commonwealth to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts."

REV. HENRY TATEM, Providence, R. I., renouncing Mason:—"Adopting the law of liberty as I found it laid down in the Constitution of my country, and in the Gospel of salvation, I have latterly spoken with freedom of the evils of Freemasonry, and the dangerous character of the oaths and principles it sanctions and inculcates. I have been brought to a full sense of the awful and wicked responsibility of assuming such oaths, to heap upon my conscience, calling God to witness, and taking his holy name in vain to help me to keep and perform obligations which, upon examination, I am entirely convinced no man can live up to, without a frequent violation of his duties as a citizen, and an awful departure from his views of his Maker, as a member of a Christian church."

HENRY TATEM, an eminent Baptist pastor, Providence, R. I., 1832:—"It was about fourteen years ago that I was first initiated into the lodge. Within a few months after, I advanced to the Royal Arch degree, and sometime after I took the degrees of Knighthood, as they are called. I well remember the horror of my feelings when the bandage was taken from my eyes and I found myself partly naked, with men standing around me pointing at me the implements of death, and a human skull was handed me to drink from, and I was required to repeat words, awful in themselves, and which I cannot distinctly recollect, but which I believe to have been the same I find given in the explanation of that ceremony in Bernard's Light on Masonry. From that time I absented myself from the lodge and chapter. My mind was afterwards led by degrees to an examination into Masonry, which I am now satisfied is repugnant to the spirit of the religion of Christ."

REV. MATTHEW L. R. FERRINE D.D., Auburn Theological Seminary, REV. JOEL PARKER and REV. CHAUNCEY EDDY:—"Having formerly associated with Freemasons, we deem it our duty, publicly to declare that the system of Freemasonry is in our judgment, of a tendency on the whole pernicious to the moral habits, and dangerous to the civil and religious institutions of our country."

REV. LEVI CHASE, Fall River, Mass.:—"The question has been asked by Masons, who wish to asperse the characters of those who have renounced Masonry, 'Why did not they renounce it before?' For one, I will give them the reason why I did not. The Masonic oaths locked my tongue in silence—death, in all its horrid shapes and frightful forms, stared me in the face—I considered the oaths binding."

REV. JOSIAH BRADLEY, Principal of Rock Spring Seminary, Illinois, 1829:—"Masonry is a human, and cunningly formed system of deception. Is it not rightly named 'Speculative Freemasonry'? Millions have been drawn within its veil, and led away captive by its false pretensions and exhibitions of morality, charity and brotherly love. And many may still rejoice for a season in their delusions, despise reproof, and perish without remedy."

REV. JOEL MANN, a renouncing Mason:—"Although portions of the Gospel are interwoven with its forms, I conceive that Masonry presents false grounds of hope; leads men to depend on their own defective righteousness;—to expect the favor of God without the interposition of a Redeemer, and even without repentance; and thus has a most injurious influence on their eternal interests. Under the most favorable circumstances, which in any place, have attended Masonry, it has occasioned a great waste of time and money, which might and ought to have been employed for better purposes. And furthermore, it interferes materially with domestic religious duties."

REV. AARON LELAND, formerly Lieut.-Governor of Vermont and Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge (to a Baptist association):—"He stated that the first objection which presented itself to his mind was the practice of praying for the soul of a brother Mason after he had been dead two, three, and sometimes four days—that he persisted in the practice for a short season to the injury of his conscience—that it was a Romish custom, and he never would preach at the burial of a Mason when Masonic forms and customs were attended to—that he never would preach to a lodge of Masons as such, and that he was ashamed that he had ever participated in the principles and practices of the institution."

LEONARD WOODS, D.D., Professor in Andover, 1829:—"Now I have never seen or heard of any evidence, of any kind or degree, in support of the pretended antiquity of Freemasonry; and I suppose the same is true of all others. What then can we do, consistently with reason and common sense, but to withhold our belief. As to probable evidence; it would be very proper to inquire, whether it can be reconciled to the acknowledged character of Solomon, and of the twelve apostles to suppose, that they belonged to a society, established on the principles and practicing the rites of Freemasonry. If these principles and rites are what the community at large understand them to be, and what Freemasons themselves understand them to be, an answer to this inquiry would be no very difficult thing."

ELDER DAVID BERNARD:—"I solemnly renounce all fealty to Masonry, and do most earnestly beseech my brethren in Christ Jesus, of every name, to come out and bear unequivocal testimony against it. Think, O think, dear Christians, that hundreds and thousands of precious and immortal souls will be lost forever, unless they return and repent, but that the name of the precious Jesus is rejected, your Saviour, your precious and adorable Saviour taken away—the cause of your bleeding Redeemer injured—the hands of the wicked strengthened, and the Almighty God dishonored! And O, let me entreat you in the mercy and bowels of Jesus Christ, to reflect that you have to answer for the blood of those who shall find also, when it shall be forever too late, that Masonry is not a Saviour!"

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1887.

DR. HENRY M. SMITH conducts the Southwestern Presbyterian at 94 Camp street, New Orleans. This paper has representatives, leading men, in six Southern presbyteries. Dr. Smith is regarded as one of the profoundest minds in the whole Presbyterian church South, and his paper evinces the correctness of this judgment. We called on Dr. Smith at his office some two years since, and we have seldom been so favorably impressed with any person on so short an acquaintance. It is to be hoped that the committee will not fail to procure either the personal attendance of Dr. Smith, or a paper from him, for the "Congress" of March 30.

THE LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT, on Monday, Feb. 7th inst., sustained the State Sunday law by an exceedingly learned and able decision. The decision rests wholly on civil, not on religious ground. Enforced abstinence from labor, liquor selling included, is to be judged of precisely as if any other day than Sunday was selected as a laborer's day of rest, which the court holds is demanded by the laws of life and health; and the validity of the law is not injured by the selection of a day on which the masses rest on the ground of faith. The law demands one day of rest, and if Jews overwhelmingly outnumbered Christians Saturday might have been the day, without affecting the validity of the day. A friend remarked on reading this Louisiana decision, "Surely the South is becoming the New England of the United States." Of course Jews and Seventh-day Baptists are not debarred from keeping Saturday and persuading others to; and when they are conscientious, upright citizens, the law exempting works of necessity and mercy should, and would be construed liberally as applied to them. But one day must have legal protection from needless molestation.

THE CONGRESS! THE CONGRESS!!

There are some seven hundred thousand people in the city of Chicago, soon to be a million. Of these some sixty thousand are Scandinavians, whose immediate ancestors, by clear air, cold mountains, and the great Luther, were, under God's Spirit, led from human, popish ceremonies to Christ. Rebold, in his history dedicated to all the lodges in Europe and America, says: "The Lutheran Reformation destroyed almost all the lodges on the Continent." More than a million Scandinavians are scattered through the United States, and though in the homeland, their kings, their bishops, and even the Methodist, Baptist, and Congregationalist missionaries are being inducing them to subside toward ceremonial salvation and open their communion to lodges, yet both the old Lutherans and new free or mission people in this country are the clearest nationality from the lodges which we have. Let these 60,000 Scandinavians form a hollow square about the Christian congress in Hershey Hall on the 30th and 31st of next month.

This meeting is a great attempt, greater than any of us comprehend. Large as is the population of Chicago the invisible inhabitants are more than the visible, and the city itself is the mercantile, moral, and religious gateway from Europe and our own Atlantic to the Pacific, and if this Convention realizes its conception, to unify and concentrate the actually existing Christian sentiment against the lodge anti-Christ, it will prove to be a pivot of United States history.

A SOCIAL MONSTROSITY.

We have to thank Mr. E. P. Townsley for the proceedings of a Royal Arch Chapter of Masons, met in Ogdensburg, N. Y., Jan. 18th last. During a snow-blockade, which excluded guests from abroad, one hundred and fifty people of the city, "Men with their wives and daughters" (!) met to witness the installation of lodge officers "in Israelitish costumes," and to partake of a banquet. Three clergymen shared these orgies, Rev. Dr. Miller, Presbyterian, Rev. Mr. Amshe, Congregationalist, and E. C. Coleman, denomination not given.

The installing officer traced the origin of the Royal Arch degree to the founding of the second temple by Zerubbabel, and said that in the erection of Solomon's temple there was a stone rejected by the builders which was found to be the only one which would complete the building, and said that story, handed down to New Testament times, was used to illustrate the rejection of Christ by the Jews, and the speaker further quoted texts to prove that St. Paul knew and respected Royal Arch Masonry.

The Presbyterian, Dr. Miller, being called, endorsed and explained the above condensed compound of false history and blasphemy, and spoke of "the Masonic order" as the "twin sister of Christianity." The Congregationalist, Rev. Mr. Amshe, followed in a similar strain and hinted his purpose soon to join the lodge.

Now the Cynosure requests our friend Townsley to procure and forward to us the address of Presbyterians and Congregationalists in the city of Ogdensburg whose pastors are wickedly deceiving them; or, that he will himself send them this brief history of the Royal Arch degree in Masonry.

This degree was invented by papists in France. The first members were Jacobin priests. The name of the body conferring the degree, chapter, was the name of a dean and his clergy. It was called Holy Royal Arch as another secret organization of priests was called "The Holy Inquisition." It was called Royal first by Charles II., because by its aid he regained the throne of England by the overthrow of the Commonwealth, established by Cromwell. Pierston, a leading Masonic writer of Minnesota, says the degree was brought over from France into England by one Ramsay, a Scotch traitor to England, who went to France, was converted to popery, and became tutor to the Pretender, son of James II. This Ramsay (or Ramsey) was called by various titles, Baron, Chevalier, and Doctor. This Royal Arch degree was taken up by an Irishman, Dermott, who headed the York split of the English Grand Lodge, altered, and by him first named "Holy." It became popular; was taken by both parties and aided in healing the York and London schism of near seventy years. But the degree was not formally adopted by the London lodge till 1770. It was then adopted through the efforts of Thomas Dunckerly, a bastard son of George II.

The above history of this infamous device of popery and monarchy by which it seized the throne of Protestant England under James II., "the simoniac who lost three kingdoms for a mass," can be verified and established by Masonic authorities. The names of the books and pages are given on page 596 of "Freemasonry Illustrated," which may be obtained at the office of the Cynosure, Chicago, price $1.25.

We call the attention of the approaching conference, March 30th, to the fact that ministers of the Gospel are still found filling the minds of Christians with Masonic falsehoods, and undermining the Bible and history by such lying legends.

POST-MORTEMISM.

Gail Hamilton has a weak and flippant article in the North American Review which seems to oppose any probation for men either past, present, or future. Its chief characteristic is the utter absence of all reference to the teachings of the Bible, or the sayings of Christ.

A friend, well known in the columns of the Cynosure, writes a critique on the editor's Baccalaureate address, in which he makes two points against the proposition in the address, "A majority of our race for whom Christ suffered, die in infancy, of course sinless, and not liable to punishment."

1. That infant salvation is not the doctrine of the Westminster Catechism; and,
2. If heathen babes, dying without actual transgression, are saved by Christ's atonement, the older children, and their parents even, ought to be saved, dying without the possibility of knowing or believing in Christ.

This friend's suggestions are liable to the same objection with Gail Hamilton's, that is, reasoning from our infinitesimal conceptions of God to what we should suppose he would do.

"As if upon a full proportioned dome
A critic fly, whose feeble ray scarce spreads
An inch around, should dare to tax
The structure of the whole."

If we had never known a race in the moral condition of ours, a globe in the moral state of ours would be the most improbable of all improbabilities, under a wise, infinitely benevolent God. "But when men knew God, they glorified him not as God, but became vain in their imaginations, and changed the truth of God into a lie. Even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, they became filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, envy, murders, deceit, malignity, haters of God, despisers, inventors of evil things, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful," and the whole terrific catalogue in Romans 1, of which this is but an abbreviation. This testimony of God concerning the moral state of the heathen, which every traveler finds true, together with the fact that Christ's sole parting words made every disciple a missionary, this, and his promised reign on earth, are the pillars on which missions rest. These make it "A fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God," which no dreams of probation after death can diminish or take away.

The whole post-mortem scheme rests upon the fallacy that there are some who had "no chance" of salvation by Christ. Twelve legions of angels waited about the cross of Christ to do his behests. The unseen realms are bursting with them. All who are in Christ are "come to an innumerable company" of them; and these messengers and ministers of light may have strengthened myriads beside Christ, in their agony; and by his ubiquity he may, in his own person, have met thousands beside Moses in the desert and Saul on his road to Damascus, the record of which meetings is not given. These must be known and counted before we can dogmatize as to the relative numbers saved and lost. And as to the babes, which Christ took in his arms and blessed, and declared to be "of the kingdom of God,"—though there may be "—devils born,

On whose foul nature culture hath no power."

We yet have seen little babes on the bosoms of squaw mothers, whose look was as innocent, and their smile as sweet, as those in our own cradle or those of the dark-faced Jewish babes, whose mothers brought them to Christ. And as God's system includes infinity of both space and duration, we are willing to hope that the smut of eternity will prove less than its wheat—infinitely less.

—T. H. Gault, Esq., of this city, and member of the N. C. A. Board, returned last week from a brief business trip to central Kansas, and speaks with enthusiasm of the triumph of prohibition so far as he observed the condition of society. The grand progress of Kansas in every essential element of prosperity within a few years is marked on every hand, and will be yet more wonderful as years go by and the rum curse gets not only out of sight, but out of the blood.

—Rev. P. A. Huddleston, the Knoxville brother whom Secretary Stoddard recommended to the benevolent readers of the Cynosure, acknowledges with many thanks and blessings the receipt of several donations forwarded by the N. C. A. Treasurer. This brother has endured much privation and trial because he has refused to endorse or countenance the lodge in any way. May his tribe greatly increase South and North.

—Dea. M. R. Britten called on the Cynosure last week Tuesday, on his return from California. He was greatly pleased with his winter trip, and thinks that with all his tramping and staging and boating and railroading, what he does not know about the great Pacific State, no transient visitor to those regions can tell him. He thinks the home of our former N. C. A. treasurer, Rev. Edward Hildreth, at Santa Barbara, one of the very choicest spots he visited.

—Puck, the comic illustrated paper, has been hitting the "walking delegate" of the Knights of Labor and the trade unions some resounding blows. A week since it had his lordship perched in a chair strapped on the back of the laboring man, like a traveler carried over the Andes. He is well dressed with plug hat and heavy bow and redolent cigar. The strap about the laborer's breast is labelled "assessments," and the poor slave doubled down, staggerers and creeps over the rocks of "Poverty," "Distress," and "Hardship." The last number shows Mr. Walking Delegate sprawling on the ground, his assessment chair smashed, while Mr. Workingman walks off with his employer to the arbitration office, while his laughing boy and girl, with father's dinner in hand, jibe the dethroned lodge "boss." Thus be it ever to the enemies of labor.

—After the death of General J. W. Phelps of Vermont the Cynosure wished to publish his portrait and a sketch of his life, but every effort to secure either seemed to be balked, as the General left no likeness, except that which is printed on the memory of friends, and the materials for a sketch were almost equally difficult to obtain. It is with great satisfaction, therefore, that we are able to announce in our literary department that Mr. C. H. C. Howard of the Astor Library, New York, proposes to issue a pamphlet on the General's life and work. It will be a work of friendship and of great value. General Phelps began his antagonism to the lodge as early as most of us. While in the regular service he translated from the French and published a considerable volume on Freemasonry, and our readers will remember his trenchant articles in these columns almost from the first volume of the paper. We hope a liberal subscription will quickly be made up for the work.

—Monday is review day at Farwell Hall noon meeting. This week Mr. Moody led while Francis Murphy sat by, punctuating the remarks, the singing, the collection, and all with fervid ejaculations of amen with a good smack of his hands, that put every one in good humor with himself and all the world. The city pastors had been called to the platform until they nearly crowded each other off onto the reporters. It was a speckled company, as not a few remarked. Among the last to come up was Dr. Thomas himself, the well known ex-Methodist. Just behind him sat old Elder Boring and Dr. M. M. Parkhurst, both prominent in the trial that very justly evicted Thomas from the Methodist pulpits. But Thomas soon edged over by Lorimer, and then it seemed as if the unlubricated that bind in the lodge, got these two Masonic champions and Bishop Fallows close together; while in close proximity was Dr. Parkhurst who has put more Masonry behind his back forever for Christ's sake than either of them know; and Dr. Henson who stopped on the lodge threshold when he got a glimpse within, as through Ezekiel's hole in the wall; and Dr. Lawrence who has testified to his church against the evil; and Captain Bundy, the sailor evangelist, and others, not to speak of Mr. Moody himself.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS OF CHURCHES AND CHRISTIANS.

FINAL ACTION.

In view of the history of secret societies in this and other lands, and the present state of our country, brought about and managed by secret orders, and the further fact that over twelve hundred clergymen and other influential Christian men, representatives of a public sentiment on this subject, have signed a request to Joseph Cook, asking that the secret lodge system be discussed in the Boston Lecture Course, and in harmony with the action of the National Christian Association, the United Brethren, the Wesleys and Free Methodists, the Reformed and United Presbyterians, Lutheran Synods and Councils, and other ecclesiastical bodies, and in compliance with the expressed wish of Dr. McCosh, Dr. Talmage, Dr. Storrs, and others whose names are omitted for brevity, it was voted to hold a National Christian Congress, and the following gentlemen were chosen a committee, with power to increase their number, issue an official call, and make all necessary arrangements for a Congress of Churches and Christians.

COMMITTEE.

CALVIN W. PRITCHARD, Editor Christian Worker and Friends' Review.

REV. JOSEPH E. ROY, Western Secretary of the American Missionary Association.

REV. B. T. ROBERTS, Editor Earnest Christian and the Free Methodist.

REV. M. C. RANSEEN, Pastor of Gethsemane Swedish Lutheran Church.

REV. L. N. STRATTON, President of Wesleyan Theological Seminary.

OFFICIAL CALL.

Pursuant to instructions, and in humble reliance upon Almighty God for wisdom, and upon the Christian patriotism of our fellow citizens for co-operation and support, we have secured Hershey Music Hall Chicago, Ill., and hereby announce that a Congress of Churches and Christians will assemble at 9:30, A. M., on the 30th day of March, 1887, and continue its sessions two days and evenings, to consider the nature and principles of the secret lodge system and its influence on the Christian religion and civil liberty, and to take what steps may seem proper, after prayer and due consideration.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The committee have learned with satisfaction of the action of several sympathizing bodies in appointing representatives, and are in receipt of the names of over fifty delegates already chosen.

Every Conference, Presbytery, Association, Council, Church, Educational Institution, or other body favoring this Congress, is respectfully urged to at once provide for a representation in its meeting. Let the names of delegates appointed, or who shall be chosen, and the names of all persons intending to be present be forwarded at once to Rev. L. N. Stratton, West Division postoffice, Chicago, Ill., so that entertainment may be provided for those who desire, and a roll of members begun.

L. N. STRATTON, Secretary.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The President's veto of the big pension bill has been a leading topic at the Capital during the past few days. Many were prepared for the veto, since it was the logical sequence of Mr. Cleveland's action with regard to private pension bills, and he could not have been consistent had he adopted any other course. It is too soon yet to say what Congress will do about it. Its future action depends much upon the manner in which the veto is received by the country. The humiliating confession had as well be made that our National Legislators follow public opinion, instead of leading it.

Some members of the House who voted for this remarkable pension bill say now that they suppose the President is right about it. Southern members are unqualified in their approval of the veto, and declare that it will secure to Mr. Cleveland the vote of Southern delegates to the Democratic convention and insure his nomination. Others who do not agree with the President, acknowledge that the veto message is a very able state paper, and that it will be almost impossible now to pass the bill over the veto. Representative Warner, of Ohio, was opposed to the principle of the Disability Pension bill as a whole, but he maintains that the Mexican Pension bill contained much of the same principle, and that the President would be more consistent and his position stronger had he vetoed both.

Great interest centered in the personnel of the counsel engaged in the great telephone contest which has been argued here for two weeks in the Supreme Court. The appellants were represented by an immense array of counsel from all parts of the country. They were all able lawyers and commanded close attention from the crowded audiences which heard them. The great importance of this case will be better understood by the fact that the interests based on the Bell patents is now worth over $100,000,000.

The people of Washington are waiting anxiously for Congress to sanction with a generous appropriation their scheme for spanning the Potomac to Arlington with a magnificent, mile-long, memorial bridge to General Grant. It is proposed that this monument to the great chieftain shall be the ideal bridge of the world. It is to get its monumental character from two grand towers over the main piers in the middle of the river. Each of these towers is to be 250 feet high, and constructed of granite, with suitable inscriptions and allegorical representations. It is intended that the towers shall furnish emplacement for memorial stones or other objects dedicated from the various States, countries and societies. This is another evidence that the government has altogether too great a surplus. The temptation is too great for our liberal-minded Congressman. There will be no need for such a bridge across the Potomac for fifty years to come.

The printers' secret unions have succeeded in their case against the Government Printer Benedict in so far as to secure the Republican members of the Senate committee on printing against his confirmation. Their argument is that Benedict has not such a knowledge or skill in type-setting as would enable him to join their order. It is confessed that he has a general knowledge of the whole printing business joined with good executive ability and understanding of general business such as not one type-setter in thousands possesses; but the secret domination of the orders will not allow in the Government printing office one man who is not sworn to them, and our noble Senators who have too often learned to "crook the pregnant hinges of the knee" are inclined to be their humble servants.

The President's pastor complains that he is grievously afflicted with office-seekers. "Why," said he, "no one has any idea of the trouble to which I am daily subjected. I dare say my mail is as large as a Cabinet officer's, and the requests cover everything that can be thought of." He says it does not avail him much to declare that he has no influence at the White House. That plea is construed as a ruse to relieve himself of responsibility, and letters, prayers and entreaties are then redoubled to induce him to lend a helping hand to the applicant. *

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

THE "WATCHDOG" SOUNDS A NOTE OF WARNING.

The Watchman, one of the leading Baptist organs of this section, better known to Bostonians under the satirical title of "Watchdog" (a cognomen contemptuously given it by a member of its own household, at whom it had once, it is alleged, savagely snapped), has been growling at the "risible" discourses tolerated in "a central pulpit" (People's church) by the original Georgia-minstrel, the Watchman's tone had almost led us to say. That it should attack strangers is not at all surprising after its apparent readiness to bite one who claims to have once petted and fed it.

The key note of what seems to be an alarm is the danger which threatens to undermine the established method of evangelical proselytism by (as it evidently insinuated) the religious comedian, Rev. Sam Jones. Taking as a text Philippians 4:8, which reads: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things," it launches out into a prosy prefatory exegesis of the apostle's meaning, and its adaptation to the present as well as the old time, and the duty of keeping within the boundaries of what it elaborately designates "an epitome, broad and beautiful." It then enters upon the subject proper as follows:

"We are now having visited upon us in Boston," (the syntactical construction of this phrase leads us to surmise that the synonymous meaning of the little verb in the active voice is thrust) "in a central pulpit, the ministrations through a long succession of days afternoon and evening, drawing multitudes to the sanctuary, which ministrations does not at least quite tally with this precept which with so rare an emphasis was commended to those at Philippi. Among the texts used, not to unlock any wealth of meaning which lies in them, but rather in accommodation to popular usage, it has not so far been noted that Rev. Sam Jones has yet stumbled upon the one text standing at the head of this article. It is to be fairly presumed he would not of purpose pass it by. Possibly, if it was fully put under his eye, its point and its significance apprehended, and this text should commend itself to his taste, he might employ the same—at least, as the motto of a discourse. Up to the present writing he has not done this, nor has he discoursed—rather harangued—as if he possessed any knowledge whatsoever that texts like the one quoted are stereotyped in the Christian Scriptures. On the contrary, the preaching, so-called, of Mr. Jones has struck into an altogether different vein from this of the Apostle to the Gentiles. Doubtless this is done not so much from ignorance of what this preaching, as in the cited precept, is, as from the feeling that the people of Boston do not need what the Greeks of Paul's day needed, but instead, preaching of a wholly unlike sort. So the burden of Mr. Jones's discourse is, or seems to be, as to its central motive, to interest, to wake up, certainly to amuse, his Boston congregations. Thus in whole columns of his reported discourses, packed away in the finest type, the word 'laughter,' or 'great laughter,' put in parenthesis, is frequently printed. It may not be doubted that what provokes this frequent and audible laughter is of the same or of a like staple with what provokes the same thing in comedy, or in the political stump or platform speaker. The theme, if there be one, discoursed upon is of course different, but the risible effects produced are alike. The practical outcome of all is, and must be, not to lift what should be the most sacred of all themes in the estimation and in the view of the multitude, but to depress and to sink it instead."

While criticising Mr. Jones's method by an attempted application of a text which can, at best, have only an abstract bearing, it is to be hoped that the vigilant Watchman will not fail to call the attention of the clergymen of its own denomination to the peril which must naturally arise from their apparent negligence during the past eighteen months, to heed and fulfill an injunction of paramount if not more direct importance given by the same apostle, recorded in Ephesians 6:1-2: "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ," and kindred texts which are "stereotyped in the Christian Scriptures." "If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother." "Judge not that ye be not judged."

A few days after the publication of the quoted criticism, Mr. Jones preached from the very text which the Watchman seemed to so greatly fear he would omit, at Faneuil Hall, to business men, and so pungent, so penetrating was it that had the Watchman been present its fears concerning the dethronement of religious propagandism through Mr. Jones's manner of putting forth the Gospel would have been forever dispelled. Boston has swallowed the remedy as compounded by Jones, like a good child, and strangely enough manifests a desire for more, and even the so-called "Watchdog," since the snarl we have mentioned, has shut its mouth and actually wagged its old tail.

THE HOME.

A WOMAN'S QUESTION.

Do you know you have asked for the costliest thing
Ever made by the Hand above—
A woman's heart, and a woman's love,
And a woman's wonderful love!

Do you know you have asked for this priceless thing
As a child might ask for a toy?
Demanding what others have died to win,
With the reckless dash of a boy.

You have written my lesson of duty out,
Man-like you have questioned me:
Now stand at the bar of my woman's soul,
Until I shall question thee.

You require your mutton shall always be hot,
Your socks and your shirts shall be whole.
I require your heart to be true as God's stars,
And pure as heaven your soul.

You require a cook for your mutton and beef;
I require a far better thing:
A seamstress you're wanting for stockings and shirts—
I look for a man and a king.

A king for a beautiful realm called home,
And a man that the Maker, God,
Shall look upon as he did the first,
And say, "It is very good."

I am fair and young, but the rose will fade
From my soft, young cheek one day;
Will you love me then, 'mid the falling leaves,
As you did 'mid the bloom of May!

Is your heart an ocean so strong and deep
I may launch my all on its tide?
A loving woman finds heaven or hell
On the day she is made a bride.

I require all things that are grand and true,
All things that a man should be;
If you give this all I would stake my life
To be all you demand of me.

If you cannot do this, a laundress and cook
You can hire with little to pay;
But a woman's heart and a woman's life
Are not to be won that way.

—Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

THE WORK FOR CHRISTIAN WOMEN.

Suggest to the ardent, able and eloquent advocates of these new departures that the training of every girl should be based on the theology of the Incarnation and that she should begin with a profession of the Nicene Creed. I tell you in advance that you will be laughed to scorn. All the world through, men are in revolt against God's word and law; the rationalist and the agnostic are making prodigious efforts to direct public opinion, to control the press, and to imbue the community with their principles; honestly, no doubt, and under the impression that Christianity is a superstition, the Bible an un-inspired volume, and the church a barrier to progress. They know their own mind, and perfectly comprehend what they are about. And the leading advocates of woman's rights, female suffrage, and kindred projects, are either in open league with those revolutionists or mute when in their company.

Here, then, is the opening for a mission for a Christian woman, for the daughters of the church, for you who received your Christian names at the font. Here is a mission worthy of yourselves, and one which you can combine with your daily work, whatever it may be; one which gives to you the discipline which blesses yourself, the power to bless others. It is to do what you can to stem the flood, to strive to revive the faith in the hearts of those who have lost it, to resist the forces of sectarianism and naturalism, and maintain the old Christian ideas. And of this mission let me say a few words.

It is, of all works that could be named, the fittest for a Christian woman.

First, because she was at the beginning of all the trouble of the world. We are no skeptics nor novelty mongers; we believe the old story of the Bible, re-affirmed by Christ and his apostles, that Adam was not deceived by the devil, but the woman being deceived was in transgression. Now to her with whom the wrong began we look for the beginning of the right.

Secondly, because it was through her that redemption came; for the Saviour was made of a woman, bone of her bone, flesh of her flesh; she therefore did aid in a divine mystery, toward the saving of the world at first; to her we look, of right, for help in all new trial.

Thirdly, because she is the mother of man and the natural instructor and trainer of children; she stands on the throne of dominating influence, and each well-ordered Christian household attests her mighty power.

Fourthly, because, unless she forfeits that influence by acts unsuited to her sex and unworthy of her glorious position, she must be the tower of strength to her age and generation. She stands for the best that man can know, for the sweetest that he can enjoy, for the faith which is life to his spirit, for the purity which is the shield of his soul. Let the woman be the true, real woman, and man will not think of disputing her sway or rebelling under her sacred and divinely sanctioned rule.—Morgan Dix.

WOMAN'S PLACE IN THE EARLY CHURCH.

Woman occupies a conspicuous place in the primitive church. This will be evident if we simply mention some of the feminine names which appear in the New Testament records: Anna, Apphia, Chloe, Claudia, Damaris, Dorcas, Elizabeth, Eunice, Euodia, Joanna, Julia, Lois, Lydia, Martha, Mary of Bethany, Mary of Magdala, Mary of Nazareth, Mary of Rome, Mary the mother of Mark, Mary the wife of Cleopas, Persis, Phoebe, Priscilla, Rhoda, Salome, Susanna, Syntyche, Tryphena, Tryphosa, etc. Moreover, there are many women on whom the Lord bestowed signal favors, but whose names have not come down to us; for example, Peter's mother-in-law, the widow of Nain, the daughter of Jairus, the woman with the issue of blood, the Canaanite mother and daughter, the woman with the eighteen years' infirmity. Once more, there are the many anonymous women who tried, in one way or another, to serve the Lord Jesus; for example, the woman at Jacob's well, the penitent adorer in Simon's house, the widow with her two mites, Pilate's wife, the waiting women on their way to Calvary, the praying women of the upper chamber, etc. Indeed, it may be doubted whether any secular history, so small as the four Gospels, was ever written, in which the womanly element so largely prevails as in the life of Jesus the Christ.

Nor is this surprising. For, first, woman's distinctive temperament makes her, if one may so say, a natural believer in Jesus Christ. He is emphatically "the seed of the woman."

"Not she with traitorous kiss her Saviour stung,
Not she denied him with unholo tongue;
She, while apostles shrank, could danger brave,
Last at his cross, and earliest at his grave."

A NOBLE WOMAN.

Mrs. Logan, in a recent talk, spoke as follows of her husband, the late Senator: "A great deal has been said at different times about the assistance I have rendered the general in the performance of his duties. I aid him by relieving him of many details, but it is not right to say that I write his speeches, because it is not correct. I take charge of his correspondence, and I do this because the general is very conscientious. I read all his letters and lay all their contents before him. Most public men are at the mercy of their private secretaries who do not have their interests at heart, and who often abuse the confidence reposed in them. Every correspondent making a reasonable request is entitled to some sort of a response. The general never deceived any one because he has known the contents of all his correspondence. I have also done much copying and have marked authorities on various subjects upon which he proposed to speak. I belong to that class of American women who feel that the glory of their husbands is their glory. I chose rather to shine in the reflected light of my husband than to put myself forward. It has always been my sole ambition to be a good and useful wife and a true mother. I have been the companion of my husband and I think this is the ambition of the great mass of American women as it should be."—N. Y. News.

WHAT ONE WOMAN DID.

Several years ago Miss Beilby, a young English woman, who had studied medicine to fit herself for usefulness as a missionary at Lucknow, in India, was sent for by the wife of the native Prince of Punna, who was ill. Punna was a long distance from Lucknow, and the journey was a dangerous one; if Miss Beilby went she would be separated by more than a hundred miles from any white man.

Her friends urged her to refuse. The English woman was young and timid, but she knew her duty; she went, remained two months, and cured the patient. When she was about to return the Ranees sent for her, and begged her to go in person to Queen Victoria with the message that Indian women, not being allowed the attendance of male physicians, died in great numbers every year for want of care. The Ranees brought paper, pen and ink, and, with tears, besought Miss Beilby to write her petition to the Queen to send them women doctors.

"Write it small, Saheba," she begged, "for I shall put it in a locket and hang it about your neck, and you must wear it until you put it in the hands of the great Ranees herself."

Miss Beilby returned to England the next year, obtained an interview with Queen Victoria, and placed the locket in her hands with the message. The Queen was deeply touched, and empowered Lady Dufferin, the wife of the Viceroy of India, to form an association for sending out female medical aid to the women of India.

Many women doctors have been sent out by the association, and Indian women are now being educated as physicians and nurses. An estate of fifty acres, with large buildings, has been given by a native prince as a hospital for Hindoo female patients.

Had the timid missionary refused to undertake the perilous duty to one woman, these great blessings—which are but the beginning of help and hope for all the women of India—probably never would have come to them.

Sow the seed, however small it may be, of good deeds. Only God knows what the fruit will be.—Youth's Companion.

WOMAN'S EMPLOYMENT.

I have never doubted but the true and noble function of a woman in this world was, is, and forever will be, that of being a wife and helpmate to a worthy man; and discharging well the duties that devolve on her in consequence, as a mother of children and mistress of a household—duties high, noble, silently important as any that can fall to a human creature; duties which, if well discharged, constitute woman—in a soft, beautiful, and almost sacred way—the queen of the world; and which, by her natural faculties, graces, strengths and weaknesses, are in every way indicated as specially hers. The true destiny of a woman, therefore, is to wed a man she can love and esteem, and to lead noiselessly under his protection, with all the wisdom, grace and heroism that is in her, the life prescribed in consequence.

It seems, furthermore, indubitable that if a woman miss this destiny or have renounced it, she has every right, before God and man, to take up what ever honest employment she can find open to her in the world. Probably there are several or many employments now exclusively in the hands of men for which women might be more or less fit—printing, tailoring, weaving, clerking, etc., etc. That medicine is intrinsically not unfit for them is proved from the fact that in much more sound and earnest ages than ours, before the medical profession rose into being, they were virtually the physicians and surgeons, as well as sick nurses—all that the world had. Their form of intellect, their sympathy, their wonderful acuteness of observation, etc., seems to indicate in them peculiar qualities for dealing with disease, and evidently in certain departments (that of female disease) they have quite peculiar opportunities of being useful.—Thomas Carlyle.

A WOMAN'S VIEW OF WOMEN.

The best educated woman will best understand the limits of her own powers; the girl who can really earn her own living in a manner suited to her sex will not desire work for which she is unfit; and the woman who most thoroughly understands what the term "politics" implies, will be the last to aspire to a direct share in the government of the state, even though she may think herself and her sisters not unworthy of a voice in the choice of their rulers. "There is a great deal of human nature about," even in women, and you will never succeed in cutting them all to one pattern. Votes or no votes, Penelope will embroider; Nausicaa entertain her guests, Andromache nurse her baby, Helen will flirt, Aspasia teach eloquence and guide statesmen to the end of the chapter. And Cassandra? Oh, Cassandra will prophesy. We fear that she will be as little heeded as she was in the days of yore, and we hope that her forebodings will prove less true than those which spoke the doom of Troy.—Countess of Jersey in National Review.

"Be careful about how you throw coal on the fire, my dear," said Job Shuttle. "The stuff is high and going to be higher." "This hod full will be higher, I'm sure of that. It goes up in smoke and goes very soon." "Very well, when the coal bin is empty you can fill it, that's all." "That's all right. You give me your old rag money and I'll fill the coal bin and buy my bonnets besides."—Hartford Post.

FOR THE MASTER.

Speak earnestly, my sister,
Thy Lord hath need of thee
To tell the triflers at thy side,
From coming wrath to flee;
O tell them earnestly of Him
Whose truth shall make them free.

Speak warningly, my sister,
For days of grace may fly;
There are, who dear to thee, reject
The love which rules on high;
Speak warningly, speak pleadingly,
The days are going by.

Speak loyally, my sister,
Nor blush the name to own
Of Him who intercedes for thee,
Exalted on the throne;
Of Him who paid the utmost price
On Calvary alone.

Speak fearlessly, my sister,
The Lord is on thy side;
The Lord, victorious o'er his foes,
Should challenge all thy pride.
Speak fearlessly and glowingly,
Nor shrink, though men deride.

Speak joyously, my sister,
And be the light of morn,
The luster of the beaming noon,
Upon thy forehead worn.
Speak joyously, for Christ the King
Hath all thy sorrows borne.

Speak faithfully, my sister,
The Word is very plain,
It is not thine to alter it,
The Lord hath right to reign,
Speak faithfully; life's two-edged sword
Thrusts keen with healing pain.

Speak tenderly, my sister,
The world is full of woe,
And many a heart with bitterness
Is like to overflow.
Speak gently, and speak tenderly,
Where'er the mourners go.

Speak frequently, my sister,
To those who love the King;
Speak frequently, and let thy tones
With jubilation ring.
Aye, speak, and oft for pure delight
And deep thanksgiving, sing.

Speak clearly, too, my sister,
That far off homes may hear,
And dawn arise and glory shine,
On heathen nations dress;
O speak the truth for Jesus' sake,
Until his day appear.

—Margaret E. Sangster.

WHAT YOU DO, DO WELL.

"Why do you take such pains in cutting out these little figures?" asked Winnifred of her brother Ernest.

"I will tell you why, sister," replied Ernest. "I take pains because my teacher tells me that if a thing is worth doing at all it is worth doing well."

"Did he mean that we should try to do well even in trifles?" asked Winnifred.

"Yes," answered Ernest; "because, as a great man once said, 'Perfection is no trifle.'"

Winnifred sat looking at her brother, as, handling a pair of scissors, he carefully cut out figures of horses, dogs, pigs, and various other animals.

Three years afterward she remembered this conversation; for it happened at that time, that, her father having died, her widowed mother was left almost destitute, with a family of seven children to support. What should the poor woman do? At first she thought she would take in washing; then that she would try to keep a little shop. While she was hesitating, Mr. Mason, a brisk old gentleman, came to the door, and asked, "Where is the boy who cuts these figures and faces in profile?"

One of his grandchildren had brought him home from school some specimens of Ernest's skill, and Mr. Mason saw at once that they were the work of a gifted and painstaking artist.

"You must mean my little Ernest," said the mother. "Poor little fellow!" He little dreams what is coming. I shall soon have to take him away from school."

"Why so?" cried Mr. Mason. "Take him away from school? You shall do no such thing! I'll not allow it."

"We are destitute, sir, and I have no means of support," said the mother, with a sigh.

"No means of support? Nonsense! With a boy in the house who can cut figures like that, do you say you have no means of support?" exclaimed Mr. Mason. "Good woman, I will ensure your boy good wages every week for the next year if you will let him come between school hours and cut pictures under my direction.

The rest of my little story may soon be told. Ernest became the staff and stay of his family. The little talent he had cultivated so carefully and diligently was the means of giving him not only an honest employment, but a liberal support. He rose to distinction, and his productions were much sought after by all good judges of art.

WHEN YOU STUDY, STUDY.

Lord Macaulay, the celebrated historian, was a great student, and when he studied, he studied. He used to get up at five o'clock, and study till nine or ten. He got so that he could read Latin and Greek right off hand the same as you can this. He had the power of putting his whole mind on his book. Many people put part of their mind on their work and the rest on something else. But all this is wrong. Play when you play, and when you study, study. In study all the faculties are needed; reason, to judge of what you read; memory, to recollect it, and so with all the rest. Macaulay became one of the most distinguished writers of his time, and it was mainly by dint of this early habit of his, of putting his entire mind at the disposal of the work before him. All cannot study alike, but we can all be deeply in earnest in whatever it is that we do, and only downright earnestness will cause us to succeed in life.—Young Churchman.

Chinese children know how to practice the "Golden Rule," as the following testimony from an English lady missionary, will show: "After an experience of years among them, truth compels this assertion, that we have found them remarkably free from bad habits and vices. Possessing the same mental abilities, and the same spirit of emulation as our own children, they rarely manifest any malice or envy, and are ever ready to lend a helping hand one to another. This trait was exemplified while the class of small children were on the floor for recitation. The youngest of them had by hard study contrived to keep his place at the head so long that he seemed to claim it by right of possession. Growing self-confident, he missed the word, which was immediately spelled by the boy standing next him, whose face expressed the triumph he felt, yet he made no move toward taking the place, and when urged to do so, firmly refused, saying, 'No, me not go; me not make Ah Fun's heart sorry.' That little act meant much self-denial, yet was done so thoughtfully and kindly that spontaneously from several lips came the quick remark, 'He do all the same as Jesus's Golden Rule.'"—Selected.

DRIVER ANTS.

There are certain ants that show wonderful intelligence, and the "driver ants" not only build boats, but launch them, too; only, these boats are formed of their own bodies. They are called "drivers" because of their ferocity. Nothing can stand before the attacks of these little creatures. Large pythons have been killed by them in a single night, while chickens, lizards, and other animals in Western Africa flee from them in terror. To protect themselves from the heat, they erect arches under which numerous armies of them pass in safety. Sometimes the arch is made of grass and earth gummed together by some secretion, and again it is formed by the bodies of the larger ants, which hold themselves together by their strong nippers, while the workers pass under them.

At certain times of the year, freshets overflow the country inhabited by the "drivers," and it is then that these ants go to sea. The rain comes suddenly, and the walls of their houses are broken in by the flood, but instead of coming to the surface in scattered hundreds and being swept off to destruction, out of the ruins rises a black ball that rides safely on the water and drifts away. At the first warning of danger, the little creatures rush together, and form a solid ball of ants, the weaker in the center; often this ball is larger than a common base-ball, and in this way they float about until they lodge against some tree, upon the branches of which they are soon safe and sound.—C. F. Holder, in St. Nicholas.

TEMPERANCE.

THE LIQUOR LIBEL ON ATLANTA.

The following letter is from ex-Mayor George Hillier, of Atlanta, Ga., in answer to a request from the New York Witness for an explanation of a report which recently went the rounds of the daily press, regarding the present aspect of prohibition in the capital city of Georgia:

"The difficulty about the wine-rooms in Atlanta is in the act of the Legislature; what we call the prohibition law, which contains the radical defect of permitting the sale of domestic wine; and so, under the law, the city government has no power to suppress the sale of domestic wine. Under the pretext afforded by this privilege, abuses undoubtedly exist to some extent. The Evening Capital newspaper did contain in one issue the rather petulant article contained in the clipping you sent me. The paragraph seems to have been telegraphed all over the United States, for I have received quantities and quantities of similar clippings with similar inquiries from every direction. The same paper the Evening Capital, in its next and succeeding issues, in stating its views more fully, made the fact quite distinctly appear that its real object was to attack the wine-room nuisance, and seek to get the law amended so as to break up the wine-rooms, and still expressing and reiterating in most emphatic terms, the allegiance of the paper to prohibition, and its faith in its wisdom and policy. But the whisky men do not telegraph that, and the outside world has only seen what was printed by the Capital on the whisky side of the question.

"The truth is, there is not one-tenth of the drunkenness in Atlanta that there used to be in the days of the bar-rooms. The reform in the drinking habits of the people is most unmistakable, and in the very highest degree gratifying. Taken altogether, the prohibition law is to-day better enforced in the city of Atlanta, than is the law against concealed weapons, or any of that class of misdemeanors, or I make bold to say, the prohibitory law of any other city in the United States.

"What we have achieved by prohibition is worth all, and a thousand times more than it has cost us, in the struggle to carry it. Ever since its adoption prohibition has been a very decided benefit in material prosperity; but of very much greater benefit in the moral well-being of the people. We have some cause to complain that our friends at a distance are rather too ready to give heed to the erroneous statements sent abroad or printed at a distance by the whisky men. I commend them to the spirit of the old Roman patriot who was so highly extolled by his fellow-citizens because 'he did not despair of the republic'; but if they will exercise that virtue, I am compelled to say they could not claim quite as high a degree of merit as was his, because when that was said of him Rome was or had been in danger. But I feel well assured that prohibition in Atlanta is not in like danger."

We believe that the teachings of science, experience, and the Golden Rule combine to testify against the traffic in alcoholic liquors as a drink, and that the homes of America, which are the citadels of patriotism, purity, and happiness, have no enemy so relentless as the American saloon. We believe that, while the poison habits of the nation can be largely restrained by an appeal to intellect through argument, to the heart through sympathy, and to the conscience through motives of religion, the traffic in those poisons will be best controlled by prohibitory law. Therefore, we do hereby respectfully and earnestly petition you to advocate and adopt such measures as are requisite to the end that prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages may become an integral part of the national constitution.—Memorial of N. W. C. T. U. to national political conventions of 1884.

One of the most striking and, to us, interesting evidences of the progress of the prohibition cause, is seen in one of the islands of the sea. Ebon, one of the Micronesian Islands of the Marshall group, passed a prohibitory law in 1877 by a rally of the chiefs and people in assembly. Previous to the coming of the rum traders no intoxicant was known to them. But they saw at once the bad effect of the liquor. The missionaries warned them, and one of chiefs proposed that the traders be banished in the following words: "Let their Government attack us; let them blow our island out of the water if they will. It would be better for us than to be killed by their rum." All accounts from this to-be-noted island testify to satisfactory effects of the law. Thus we see "Those who are but a generation removed from barbarism and heathenism can and do enforce a prohibitory law which was pronounced by a prominent German as beyond any other law in the world. The natives say it is the only law they need. It is their only written law."—S. S. Times.

Belgium is now the greatest beer drinking country in Europe. It is third on the list of dram-drinking countries, 70,000 000 liters of spirits being drunk there every year.

LITERATURE.

THE HISTORY OF FRANCE from the Earliest Times to 1848. By M. Guizot and Madame Guizot at De Witt. Translated by Robert Black. Vol. 3, pp. 473. John B. Alden, New York.

A profound interest attaches to every political and religious movement of the 16th century, because of the Lutheran Reformation and the successive struggles of the papal power to suppress it. The location of France, in the center of European conflict, between Italy and England, Germany and Spain, render her most conspicuous in all these remarkable movements for the disenthralment of the conscience. Her king, Francis I, was the most brilliant of the three famous rulers of the Reformation, though the emperor, Charles V, of Germany was perhaps more powerful, and Henry VIII, of England more ambitious. The history of the Reformation, always read with interest, is most absorbing in the French nation, and we watch in this story of Guizot with increasing and painful fascination the struggle which produced a character so amiable and virtuous as Margaret of Valois, one so brave and wise as Coligny, and a people so intrepid and noble as the Huguenots on the one side, and on the other the Guises, Catherine de Medici and the conspirators of St Bartholomew. The events and factors of this great movement in France, begun so auspiciously and ending so disastrously, we find described in this volume most vividly, as it begins with the ascension of Francis I, A. D. 1515, and closes with the death of Henry of Navarre in 1610.

ALDEN'S HANDY ATLAS OF THE WORLD. Pp. 19. Price 25c. John B. Alden, New York.

At the word "atlas" the imagination conceives a book of wide page and bulky form; there is, therefore, some surprise at this pocket volume assuming so great a name. But on becoming familiar with it the value of the compilation is apparent. The maps are not large, but the statistics are. They form a valuable compilation, and as the book is in handy, pocket form, it will be found a useful companion for the newspaper, returning its value a hundred times.

GENERAL PHELPS'S LIFE.—A card from C. H. C. Howard, Astor Library, New York, informs us of his proposal to publish a pamphlet on Gen. J. W. Phelps, who died suddenly some two years ago at his home near Brattleboro, Vt., and is well remembered as one of the most prolific writers on the lodge. Mr. Howard was a friend of Gen. Phelps, and read a sketch of his life and public services before the New England Historic Genealogical Society in Boston last December. This pamphlet will cost 25 cents, and will appear as soon as subscribers enough are received to warrant its publication. The Cynosure readers ought to take 1,000 copies at least, and we hope will so signify their wish by P. O. card to Mr. Howard, as above.

JOSEPH COOK has arranged with the Rand Avery Company for the exclusive right to publish the Boston Monday Lectures for the present course. They are to appear once a week in handsome pamphlet form, magazine size, in large type on fine paper, thoroughly revised and copyrighted by Mr. Cook, and are to be the only authentic reports of his lectures. Just as the course of lectures has been given for twelve years without any aim at pecuniary remuneration, so these lectures are to be published at a merely nominal price, 10 cents a copy, or 50 cents for the set of eight lectures: to pay only the bare cost of publishing. The present course is probably the most important and most interesting of all that have been delivered within the past twelve years, covering as it does the general topic of "Current Religious Perils." In these lectures Mr. Cook is to interpret in his most eloquent and powerful manner, the many theological signs of the times, and review such vital topics as the Andover controversy, the debate at Des Moines, the attitude of secular journalism, the new religious efforts on the colleges, and the general feeling of anxiety in the churches.

The Evangelical Lutheran Almanac for 1887 is issued from the Book Concern of the Joint Synod of Ohio and other States, at Columbus. Its special value is in the carefully revised lists of educational and benevolent institutions of the Lutheran church and the Synods of North America which in all number nearly 1,000,000 communicants, and nearly all opposed to the lodge. The list of Lutheran pastors is also given very completely. Rev. D. Simon of Prospect, Ohio, is editor of this valuable compendium.

Demorest's Magazine has taken a firm stand on the Prohibition question, which makes it popular in families where there are boys to influence. Nor are the girls forgotten, for the department of "Our Girls" contains useful advice to them. Aside from its stories it deserves a place among the popular family magazines.

Everything for the Garden comes as near vindicating its title as any seed catalogue of the year, and Peter Henderson & Co., the New York seedsmen, may well be proud not only of their excellent reputation as dealers, but also of the handsome book which describes it. Among the most enterprising of our seedsmen, they have this year several new and attractive productions which gardeners and farmers will wish to see thriving under their own tillage. The price of the catalogue is 10 cents, which may be deducted from the first order.

The English Illustrated Magazine for February opens with an appreciative and honest article on Robert Burns by James Sime, which gives us a better knowledge of the home training of the wayward Scottish bard, and the factors that make up his character, than is usual in magazine articles. Other illustrated articles are "An Unknown Country" and "Description of a Morning in London." The frontispiece, "The Sheikh's Captive," is a portrait of remarkable interest.

Our thanks are due to the U. S. Civil Service Commission of Washington for their Third Annual Report which reviews the work of the past year, suggests remedies for some defects in the operation of the commission, and shows the beneficial effect of its work upon the government service.

Composite photography, the curious process by which is produced the average of an indefinite number of portraits, will be described by Prof. John T. Stoddard, of Smith College for Women, in the next Century. The illustrations, which have a weird fascination, include composites of the classes of '83, '84, and '86, and a composite of these three.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The evangelist Moody closed his work at the Lincoln Park Congregational church in this city Friday night, and there was not standing room in the building. His sermon was eloquent and touching, and hundreds went to the inquiry-room. This week he preaches afternoon and evening at the skating rink, No. 1107 Milwaukee avenue, which it is claimed will seat 6,000.

—The Gospel temperance meetings in Farwell Hall, this city, continue with unabated interest. Francis Murphy addressed two large meetings Friday, and hundreds signed the pledge. An incident occurred which brought the audience to tears, when a young man named William L. Bliss, who had been a drunkard for fifteen years, came forward and asked to sign the pledge, and then knelt on the platform and invoked God's pardon for the ruin he had wrought on his wife and children.

—At a missionary meeting in Rutger's Presbyterian church, New York, Rev. Dr. R. R. Booth, pastor, Elder Robert Carter, the noted publisher, said "his wife made the paste and he prepared the mail of the first missionary periodical sent out by the Presbyterian church." Mr. Carter was also the first publisher of Greene's "Broken Seal."

—The Holland people remaining in fellowship with the Reformed Synod are reported to be 12,500 members with 105 churches and 87 pastors.

—With this winter's accessions the membership of the Methodist Episcopal church will probably reach 2,000,000.

—In accordance with the invitation of the San Francisco Association, the 27th International Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations will be held in that city early in May next.

—At a recent meeting of the Baptist Union of Minneapolis, it was proposed to raise $15,000 for the mission work within the city during the year, and over $13,000 were subscribed.

—Rev. Dr. Spence, President of the Grant Memorial University, speaking of the Methodist Episcopal church in the South, south of Mason and Dixon's line, says there were 425,000 members of that church, of whom 225,000 were white. He said that more than $1,500,000 had been expended on the training and education of the colored people, but little had been done for the proper training of the whites, of whom 10,000,000 were in a condition of illiteracy, and of these 4,000,000 could neither read nor write; 750,000 white men were unable to read their ballots, and at the last general election did not know whether they voted for Cleveland or Andrew Jackson.

—The Hollander churches which seceded from the General Synod of the Reformed church several years since, on account of the collusion of that body with Freemasonry, formed, not long after, an organization called the "Christian Holland Reformed church." Their churches according to a late report number 68; their ministers, 44; and their membership, 7,729.

—The Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society, that raised $1,000,000 for missionary work last year, is feeling much elated over recent information received from China. About a year ago, in the riots that occurred in China, the missionaries were driven away in the outcry that was raised against foreigners. The lives of many were in danger and a great deal of property was destroyed. The Chinese Government, after an examination, has offered to pay the society $28,000. "It is only about twenty-five per cent of the actual loss sustained," said Dr. Reed, one of the secretaries at the rooms, "but the prompt action of the Chinese Government is what gratifies us. It is an assurance of protection in the future, and we shall probably have very little trouble hereafter. It is an example that our own Government might follow in protecting and reimbursing the Chinamen who were so brutally treated in the West last year."

—Although the American Board has agreed to return Mr. Hume to the mission work, the case of R. J. Morse of Yale Theological School, who has recently been licensed to preach, was too much for the Prudential committee. The rejection is assumed to be on the basis of the probation theory. In stating his theological belief to the Board, Mr. Morse said: "I am not prepared to affirm that all those are lost who do not receive the Gospel in this life. I do not believe that the Bible teaches such a doctrine. I do not believe that the general tenor of the Bible-teaching is that now is the day of salvation. This teaching it is my purpose to teach. All I mean with reference to the hypothesis of a future probation is that I do not know. Practically it affects neither my belief nor my teaching."

—There are four educational institutions in the South, designed for the benefit of the colored race, which were established and are entirely supported by the United Presbyterian church. One of these, the oldest, Knoxville College, is at Knoxville, Tenn. The other three are in Virginia. The largest of the four is Norfolk College, at Norfolk, Virginia's "city by the sea"; the other two are in Mecklenburg county, one being Thayne Institute, in Chase City, of which Rev. J. H. Veazey is the principal, and the other the Bluestone Mission, at Abbeville, of which Rev. J. A. Ramsay is the head. The four institutions are under the control of a board of trustees, of which Rev. J. W. Witherspoon, D.D., of Allegheny City, Pa., is the secretary. The object of all four is the same, to provide for both sexes of the colored race the advantages of a thorough normal and classical education, special attention being given to the training of teachers. Last year $40,000 were spent on the four schools; this year about $35,000 will be expended.

—According to the Salt Lake City Tribune, "the grandest features of Utah are her mission schools. The work they are performing is as noble as was ever done, and their success is most gratifying. They are supported in great part by money contributed in the Eastern States; it amounts to thousands of dollars annually. This work has been continued here for many years, and yet there has never been a breath whispered against the managers or the teachers of these schools. They have made a record which should gladden all generous hearts, whether Christian or pagan. They are doing a good which cannot be measured; doing it with a holy and unselfish purpose, and they have extended until their impression has become marked upon society."

—The Monday meeting of the Presbyterian ministers, on the 7th inst., says the Interior, was addressed by Mr. John B. Stoddard, of Utah, who discussed the political principles and aims of Mormonism. Mr. Stoddard was born of Mormon parents, his father being a polygamist, and for that reason is now in jail, having been convicted under the Edmunds law. The speaker pointed out the despotic character of Brigham Young, John Taylor, and others, who claim to fully and by authority represent Mormon civil and religious doctrines. That such assumptions relating to the Mormon kingdom as are now advocated by its chief men at Salt Lake City should be believed by anybody is a matter of wonder and amazement to people of ordinary intelligence. And yet it is by these miserable assumptions—they are neither less nor more—that the ignorant Mormon population in Utah is held under bondage by its leaders. Mr. Stoddard spoke out of a full heart of the mental slavery and moral peril of this delusion. It was while submitting to the degraded, disgusting and horrid indecencies and awful oaths of the endowment house that he formed the purpose to renounce Mormonism and go out of its prison house. He is an intelligent gentleman, a pleasant speaker, and his address cannot fail, where he is heard, to arouse a public sentiment, founded on a knowledge of facts, against the religious and political principles of Joseph Smith, Brigham Young and their deluded followers. Mr. Stoddard thinks the bill now before Congress, should it become a law, would seriously cripple the Mormon power, and open the way for the Christian missionary and the Christian school to secure its ultimate extinction. Those who desire to know the truth on Mormon theology should hear Mr. Stoddard, whose services may readily be secured, to lecture on these topics.

LODGE NOTES.

—The Knights of Labor and the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers are in conflict at Mingo, Ohio, regarding a strike in the Junction Iron Works. The leaders of the Knights have ordered their men back, while the Association will not permit its members to return until their demands are conceded. A conflict between both orders is imminent.

—The Brewers' Union gave as one reason for severing their connection with District Assembly No. 49, Knights of Labor, that the latter have never helped them in any way, and are opposed to the business in which they are engaged. If it was equally true of all the Knights and of their local bosses there would be much less danger of such foolish and unrighteous strikes as that which has led to this action.

—Advices to the Chicago press from Nebraska show that there is a marked activity in the movements of the Anarchist Association in Omaha. A plot has just been discovered, by which J. A. Hopsodsky, editor of a Bohemian paper, the Nardow Listy, and Frank J. Kasper, his partner, who is a City Councillor, were to be assassinated. The paper had been ridiculing the Anarchists generally, and Mrs. Parsons in particular. Last week seven men went to Hopsodsky's house to kill him, but his absence prevented the plot from succeeding. The editor has applied to the police for protection.

—William Bird pleaded as his defense in one of our Chicago courts Friday, for assaulting Thomas Healey with a knife, that he had been hired by Union men to "do up" Healey because he was a "scab." Both men are employed at a box factory, and Thursday evening, as the men came out after working hours, Bird assaulted Healey with a knife, inflicting an ugly and painful gash over the left eye. Several fellow workmen interfered, and took Bird to a police station.

—At the meeting of the Illinois Department, G. A. R., Thursday, the action of President Cleveland in vetoing the dependent pension bill was condemned, and members of Congress were asked to pass the measure over the veto.

—Ex-Governor Person C. Cheney, lately elected Senator from New Hampshire, is a prominent man in secret orders, being a Royal Arch Mason, an Odd-fellow, and also a member of the Loyal Legion.

HOME HINTS.

HOW LITTLE CHILDREN SUFFER.

Nobody knows how much little children sometimes suffer at the hands of the unprincipled persons to whom they are too often ignorantly intrusted. More than one fatal attack of brain disease has been directly traced to a dose of opium given by an unscrupulous nurse to quiet a crying child; many a child has caught its death from exposure to a hot sun or a cold wind in its perambulator while its careless nurse gossiped with lover or friend, or read dime novels in the public parks, and last but not least, many a nervous child has been injured for life by the nursery bugaboos with which it has been terrified into submission and quiet; not always by the nurse.

The mother who never bathes and dresses her baby, who does not nurse it and who sleeps away from it in another room, loses much of its sweetness, and both she and her child are to be pitied. "There is a medium in all things," and while no woman is called upon to make a slave of herself to her child—indeed the doing so is a positive injury to both—still she has no right to give the sacred charge over to hirelings, and consider her maternal duty discharged when she pays their wages.—Mrs. M. P. Handy in Boston Globe.

ACCIDENTAL PLAYTHINGS.

The very word toy implies something that is intended to amuse. Very many of the most elaborate and costly toys only do this for a short time, as long as they are new, while some article that by accident the child has become possessed of is a daily source of pleasure.

As I write my little girl of 2 sits on the floor with a button hook in her hand trying to button and unbutton her little boots. She is not playing, rather she is working; but she is interested in what she is doing, her attention is concentrated upon it and she is happy. We do not give her the hammer and looking glass, but some equally queer articles. We let her have a Dover egg beater.

"Suppose she should break it?" What if she does? It costs much less than ordinary toys, and serves her vastly better. When she had learned to put the end of it in a little dish and turn the wheel—"just as mamma does"—she was happy, and her pleasure in her new plaything lasted for weeks. She would not hurt herself seriously with it, and finding that there was one way in which it acted and made a noise she did not throw it about and use it as a hammer, but used it properly, came to have a high regard, and I have no doubt a deep respect, for it. Another plaything is a clean lamp burner with a long piece of wick knotted at the ends so that it cannot fall out, or with the ends sewed together; the child can turn the thumbscrew and make the wick move, and thus find much pleasure.—Babyhood.

THE MODEL HUSBAND.

The model husband does not assume that he is a pattern man, that he is all wise, and that his word must be law, but recognizes the married state as a republic wherein each is entitled to an opinion and the expression of it, and where each will regard the wishes of the other.

SOMETHING TO BE CONSIDERED.

The women of ancient Greece used to place the most beautiful statues in their sleeping apartments, and they reared a race of men famous through all time for their matchless symmetry of face and figure. The society ladies of the present day keep constantly with them their pet pugs and terriers, and the result may be seen in a generation of dudes.—Lovell Utstein.

To polish brass kettles that are very much tarnished, first rub with a solution of oxalic acid, then dry and polish with rotten stone of the finest emery.

The best thing for cleaning tinware is common soda. Dampen a cloth and dip in soda, rub the tin briskly, after which wipe dry, and black and dirty tinware can be made to look like new.

Do not buy an ugly piece of furniture simply because it is cheap. In purchasing, consider comfort first, then beauty. Try to combine the two in all you purchase. Do not be in haste to get everything at once, but gradually build up your home until it is "a thing of beauty and a joy forever" to all its inmates.

Talks

ON THE

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are not stirred up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable, alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind, if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that do like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shorn of their make, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the purulent literature of the day, and placed in strong, true colors. The life of the profligate is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed to the editor of the Washington Post, in which he states the facts of the abduction of a noble granite monument to the memory of William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument, and the whole is illustrated with a full and complete account of the abduction, seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Onondaga jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT TO IT.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the influence of the 'secret societies' by a course of error, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of the 'secret societies'."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association.) Single copy, 5 cents.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barry, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"The tales we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-bound bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire. Pardon though he be."—Brooks' Watchman, (Pittsburgh.)

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secrecy, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago.)

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by

REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,

(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-Masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the subsequent address of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

1. Portrait of Morgan.

2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.

3. Fine picture of the Monument.

4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.

5. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.

6. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. R. J. Bailey, on the "Freemasonry and Secret Societies" by H. H. Rogers, and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

READ ABOUT THIS GREAT HISTORICAL EVENT.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—President Cleveland on Tuesday sent to the Senate the name of Lieutenant Greely, of Arctic-exploring fame, to be Chief Signal officer, vice General Hazen, deceased. Greely thus jumps from a lieutenant's to a major general's rank. He is a Freemason.

—The President has allowed the act appropriating $400,000 a year to provide arms and equipments for the militia to become a law without his signature.

—Secretary Manning called at the White House Monday afternoon and placed his resignation in the hands of the President. The letter of resignation or the name of Mr. Manning's successor will not be made public for some days.

COUNTRY.

—The country about Fredericktown (Mo.) was disturbed Thursday night by a heavy shock of earthquake.

—At a religious meeting in Erie county, Pa., Thursday night, John Lewis, aged 17, was suddenly attacked with hydrophobia, and began snarling and biting at persons in his vicinity. Lewis, who was bitten five years ago, was secured with difficulty.

—The smoke-stack of the Antrim furnace at Marcelona, Mich., was blown down by a storm Thursday night, endangering the lives of many men, who narrowly escaped being suffocated by gas.

—A cave has been discovered in Marshall county, Kentucky, in which are many rooms of great extent. Two skeletons, $600 in gold and silver, and a quantity of silverware were found in one of the chambers. It is believed to have been the hiding-place of "Bloody Bill Brady's Gang" of guerrillas during the war.

—A band of Mormons, under command of the notorious Lot Smith, have taken possession of the store and ranch of Edward Stone, near Tulsa City, Arizona, and driven out the owner and his family. The aid of the Governor has been invoked to dispossess the invaders.

—At Dalton, Ohio, Friday morning, John Baughman, aged 87, perished by asphyxiation in his burning house, and his wife, 85 years old, was rescued in a dying condition and cannot recover.

—Five sons of J. C. Pendergrass, of Roseville, Ark., were burned to death early on Friday morning, in a fire which destroyed their father's dwelling.

—The Missouri Senate Friday indefinitely postponed consideration of the resolution for the submission of a prohibitory amendment.

—Both houses of the Michigan Legislature Friday passed a resolution asking Congress to pass the dependent pension bill over the President's veto.

—The Public Charities committee of the Illinois House will report favorably on the bill appropriating $100,000 for an Industrial Home for the blind in Cook county.

—A car load of St. Louis beer was seized at Des Moines, Iowa, Thursday. There was a lively contest for possession of the stuff.

—Judge McLeary, of the Supreme Court of Montana, says that the lowest estimate of the Montana cattle loss for the season is 25 per cent., while many cattle men say 40 to 50 per cent. One Bozeman owner will lose 10,000 of a herd of 25,000.

—A hurricane prevailed in Colorado from 4 A. M. until 2 P. M. Thursday, doing heavy damage in Denver. At several points in the State trains were blown from the track and the passengers badly injured. The wind attained a velocity of sixty miles an hour.

—A band of Apaches recently left their reservation in Southern New Mexico, and at last accounts were heading for their old reservation in Southwestern Colorado. Trouble between the Indians and settlers is anticipated.

—W. J. Gallagher, the Chicago tax-receipt forger, was Tuesday night lodged in the penitentiary at Joliet, and placed at work as stoker in the wire shops, feeding the furnaces used in annealing the wire.

—Owing to a snow blockade on the Central Pacific no mails from the East were received at San Francisco for three days last week.

—While suffering from nightmare in a sleeping-berth on the limited express train on the Panhandle road, C. F. King, of Washington, attempted to jump through the window, and was with difficulty rescued by the porter. King imagined that the car was on fire and attempted to escape.

—John Stever, aged 70, jumped into the Niagara rapids, Tuesday, from the suspension bridge, falling 190 feet.

—The Governor of Kansas Wednesday approved and signed the bill conferring municipal suffrage upon women.

—The bill repealing the black laws and the statute providing for separate schools for colored children was passed Wednesday by the Ohio Senate.

—The Governor of Iowa issued a proclamation Tuesday forbidding the importation of cattle from Illinois.

—States Attorney Grinnell of this city is working up a bad case of Tweedism against the Commissioners of the county. Their frauds have been notorious for some time, but immunity has made them bold. It is reported that their conviction will take them to the penitentiary.

FOREIGN.

—Prince Bismarck's organ, the North German Gazette, says the Reichstag will be again dissolved unless the government secures a majority in the coming elections.

—A letter from Mr. Gladstone appealing to Irish Protestants to favor home rule has been made public.

—Dr. Pebal, professor of chemistry in Gratz University, Vienna, was stabbed to death on Friday by a valet whom he had dismissed. The murderer committed suicide by poison.

—Dispatches received at London Thursday announce that Russia has notified the Bulgarian delegates at Constantinople that she has decided to occupy Bulgaria. Austria, deserted by Germany, is reported as yielding to the occupation. If resistance is offered it must come from the Bulgarians or Turks, the three powers having arrived, as reported, at a complete understanding. If the report should turn out to be well founded it will be accepted as proof of Russia's pledge to Germany to stand aside in the event of a Franco-German war, and that Austria is to receive territorial compensation elsewhere, sooner or later, at the expense of Turkey.

—Dispatches from the Sudan state that a prolonged war between the Italians and Abyssinians is expected.

Twenty-five thousand of the 75,000 prisoners confined in jails throughout India will be released to day as an act of clemency to commemorate the jubilee of Queen Victoria.

—In the House of Commons on Monday evening an amendment to the address in reply to the Queen's speech offered by a Liberal member in favor of an inquiry into the condition of farm laborers in Scotland was rejected by a vote of 198 to 96.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Paper covers, 30c. Cloth, 40c. The aim of this book is to show the great difference between true and false religion. It is heart searching. God is blessing this book to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

Self Deception, Its Nature, Evils and Remedy. By Rev. Jacob Hollander. Paper cover, 15c. This book goes to the very bottom of the subject, and searches out the sandy foundation of the deceived profane. The religious of lies behind which many are hiding, and the false hopes of thousands are here set forth in plain and powerful words. It will meet a felt want among Christian workers, and is eminently suitable for circulation among all church members.

How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 10c. This little book points out that there are certain practical means within the reach of every child of God, in the use of which he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Stirring and encouraging.

Kansas is a great State, and yet greater in her possibilities, but her legislators are capable of doing some exceedingly small business: we would hardly think it possible of the children of the men of whom Senator Pomeroy is now writing so eloquently. One of the Kansas counties was named St. John, after one of the ablest and best governors of the State. But now that Logan has been canonized by the G. A. R. and the Masons, some trickster in legislation gets a vote to change the county to Logan. For personality, meanness and spite this is going far down. It must be the dying wiggle of the old liquor snake whose head St. John so thoroughly smashed.

Sioux City, Iowa, is a place of saloon sensations and tragedies. The liquor curse struck Haddock down and has for months stood threateningly across the pathway of justice, when she reached toward the men well known to be his assassins. But State law has triumphed in closing the saloons until but one remained last week, where for several days the defiant keeper with seven helpers were kept in perspiring exertion to supply the demand over their bar. But this performance must of necessity be very brief. Twenty-three informations for open violation of law were served on the owner of the place and he may yet find that the profit of even a very prosperous business will not meet the demand of a broken law.

The Commissioners of Cook county, whose maladministration of hospital, asylum and poor house interests is about to bring them into court in this city, are, as might well be expected, well known in Chicago lodge circles as we understand from the following in the Inter-Ocean: "Many of the hoodlums who are members of secret societies have been humiliated very deeply by their brothers in the orders. It is no secret that one of the Commissioners would have been at the head of an order that is second only to the Masons in this State, had it not been that his fellow members did not care to see him occupying that exalted position in the organization and at the same time be despised by all honest men. Others have felt the blighting effects of published and unchallenged charges of dishonesty and corruption. Their friends pass them by with a nod, when before a warm grasp of the hand testified to the feeling that then existed. The Commissioners have lost caste, they have lost friends, and they are liable to lose their liberty."

Among the questions of economy which should be considered by the working men of our cities, the expense of strikes is not one of the least importance. The study of such figures as are being given after the late New York affair should make men sober. The State Commissioner of Labor Statistics in New York, in his report to the legislature, says that in 1885 there were 222 strikes in the State, and that in 1886 the number was 1,900, showing an enormous increase of labor strikes as compared with the previous year. There were more than six labor disturbances of some sort for every working day during the year 1886. The Commissioner has been able in only fifty-eight of the 1,900 strikes to ascertain the cost of these strikes; and in these fifty-eight strikes he sets down the cost to employers and the employed at the round sum of $3,000,000, the greater part of which was the loss of wages on the part of workmen. One would think, says the Independent, that workmen would after awhile learn something, from their own sad experience, in regard to the unwisdom of labor strikes, as well as the inexpediency of surrendering their freedom of action to the arbitrary dictation of any labor "boss," or the executive committee of any labor organization.

The appalling earthquake visitation of the thickly settled district about the bay of Genoa will not soon cease to be a theme of public interest. It has come upon a people secure in their finely-built dwellings, and the fashionable winter resort of thousands of wealthy Europeans and Americans. Thousands of pathetic incidents will be related of wonderful escape and patient suffering and wretched death; and if the conjectures of scientists are correct, successive visitations will nearly depopulate a fertile and wealthy region. Of the remarkable scenes connected with the calamity, that at Nice, in France, is most singular and appalling. The festivities that precede the Lenten season were at their height, and after an all-night revel crowds of merry-makers and maskers in their fancy costumes were on their way home when the first shock struck terror to every heart. A rush was made for the churches, and confessionals were besieged by multitudes whose worship an hour before had been only of mirth and reckless pleasure. The ball-room costumes which thronged the streets at that dread hour were horribly ghastly in the presence of fearful death. Very suggestively the dispatches say, "To these the earthquake came with peculiar terror." Even thus will it be when the Son of Man cometh.

Last spring in Denver Joseph R. Buchanan was spoken of by good citizens as a labor agitator of unsafe character, whose principles were revolutionary and whose methods were not sufficiently scrupulous. Rev. De La Maty, formerly Representative in Congress from Indiana for the Greenback party, now pastor of the Lawrence St. M. E. church, Denver, had joined the Knights of Labor in order to counteract the influence of Buchanan and others like him. That his effort had little success appeared in the appointment last summer of Buchanan to an important national position in the order over the head even of a man of Mr. De La Maty's character and standing. Buchanan gravitated toward Chicago, where agitators have more following and principles such as he professes a wider field. He has been engaged in newspaper labors connected with his order, and last week began the issue of a new semi-weekly, the Labor Enquirer. Another significant movement in the section south of the Chicago limits is the proposal to make M. J. Butler a candidate for Supervisor, an office with an income of $20,000. Butler is head of the Knight of Labor District Assembly, and led the Stock Yards strike last fall. Butler is now holding a public office which is a sinecure with an $1800 salary. Butler is a good representative of the "walking delegate."

THE WORK OF SECRETISM IN THE KANSAS STRUGGLE.

REMINISCENCES BY HON. S. C. POMEROY.

The prompt and earnest efforts to settle Kansas from New England, and by men adopting Free State sentiments, kindled new hopes after the defeats in Congress by the passage of the Nebraska bill, and the election of James Buchanan. Mr. Thayer's system of "organized emigration" had many advantages. Men going together from the same locality will not deteriorate, or assimilate to other ways. They will maintain their consistency, and each sustains the other. They have and will maintain the same literature, the same ways and means to the same end; and be more likely to improve upon it than to abandon it. This is not so where individual emigrants settle in neighborhoods, where different ideas prevail; men easily assimilate to their surroundings.

The success of the settlement of Lawrence, Kansas, stimulated additional colonies from Massachusetts and other New England States, as well as from New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and other States then called Northwestern.

Gov. H. H. Reeder, a Democrat, appointed from Pennsylvania, having entered the Territory, being cordially received and welcomed at Lawrence, traveled on further westward, to Fort Riley, and soon began to organize a territorial government. He accepted and adopted the Democratic ideas of the party, and in good faith undertook to have a fair determination of the slavery question by an honest vote of the settlers.

This first election was to take place in the November following our settlement in September. In the meantime, a constant stream of emigrants came to the Territory, mostly from the free States; some, however, from the slave States, bringing a few slaves—a very few, not enough to be noticed. Property on legs, overtopped with some brains, with eyes that could see, and ears that could hear, was none too safe anywhere, and was particularly unsafe on the boundless prairies.

During this interval, before the November election, Dr. Robinson and others of us accompanied parties farther up the Kansas valley, selected, laid off, and founded another city, and called it Topeka, now the capital city of the State. We had named Lawrence in honor of Amos A. Lawrence, the man who championed our cause in Boston, and who gave us the first ten thousand dollars for public education. We named Topeka from the fact that at that place, upon the sandy bottoms near the river, the wild potato grew, which the Indians called "topeka." So the capital of a great State has the Indian name of potato.

While I am upon names, I ought to say that Ossawatimie, made memorable more for the settlement of old John Brown than for itself, was named in this way: While in camp one night under a big walnut tree with Mr. O. C. Brown, at the confluence of the Osage and Pottawatomie rivers, where we had decided to have a town, and were arranging to build a sawmill, the question arose, what shall we call this settlement? Various names were proposed. At last, as the two rivers joined their waters there, we said, "Let us blend the two names, Osage and Pottawatomie, and call it Oss-wat-omie." That was agreed to, and that has been the name ever since.

During the month of October of that year, I took a trip further up the Kansas valley and located a place, now called Manhattan. We called it "Blue Mont." But soon after a Cincinnati colony arrived, and they changed it to the old Dutch name, Manhattan, much to my disgust. But the men who first settled on that town site, were men of exemplary character and sturdy integrity. The names of Denison, Goodnow, Gillestury, Huntoon, with dozens of others, will be cherished and remembered in Manhattan, while man is honored or woman loved.

Leavenworth, too, was settled as early as any of the towns. It was a mixture of soldier and civilian, Free State and pro-slavery, but became a city of commanding influence and importance. The first blood was there shed for the Free State cause; and there the first Free State newspaper was thrown into the muddy Missouri. Brown's Herald of Freedom, in Lawrence, followed, being thrown into the Kaw river. Then were inaugurated those scenes of robbery, murder and assassination which characterized the efforts of those who would subdue Kansas to slavery.

Immediately after Gov. Reeder had made a trip over the settled portions of the Territory, he ordered a census to be taken, and an election to be held in the November following. And now commenced the first open and determined hostility to our efforts for a Free State. The Governor was preparing for an honest and fair vote, when bands of Missourians, by a concerted secret arrangement, under central dictation, and distributed at different points, appeared on election day, took possession of the ballot boxes, and held the election in their own way. The settlers, no less than the Governor, were astounded. The enforcement of this first fraud compelled the perpetrators to all the subsequent acts of violence and blood.

This so-called election resulted in a return of over three thousand votes, for J. W. Whitfield for delegate to Congress, when we did not have by the census fifteen hundred votes all told, in the new Territory at that date! No one would believe if it was not now accredited history, well proven, that leading public men could adopt and execute such a plan. But they had made it a law that slavery or no slavery should be settled upon the soil. This was denominated the "squatter sovereignty" of 1854, the new departure from the old compromise line.

David R. Atchison, in a public speech, said to the people of Platte City, Mo., as published in his own organ: "You reside within one day's journey of the Territory. Your peace, your quiet, and property, depend upon your action. Send five hundred of your young men, who will vote for your institutions. Should each county in Missouri do its duty, this question will be settled at the ballot box. I advise you, one and all, to enter the Territory at every election district, in defiance of Reeder and his myrmidons, and vote at the point of the bowie knife and revolver." All this and more was said by the leaders of the pro-slavery party. And that was said and published by a man who was the late Senator of the United States! This fact explains the greater facts embodied in the Kansas struggle, which was the first edition of the great struggle of 1861 to 1865.

Following this election came the "bogus Legislature," which passed a code of laws legislating for slavery, and offering prison doors to all who dared to say that slavery did not legally exist in Kansas. Thus the principle of the Nebraska bill, that the people should decide upon their institutions "when they came to form a State government," was forestalled and settled (if wrong can ever be settled) by the first election, controlled by a Missouri invasion in obedience to the dictates of "secret lodges," "Golden Circles," all Knights of Fraud, the slaves of slavery. Thus it was that the Free State settlers were deprived of their rights, offensive institutions forced upon them, and they had to fight. I do not stop to discuss the question of the right or wrong of war in general, or of this one in particular. All I say is, we had to fight off this yoke of bondage; and this we did.

I spent the winter following in trying to arouse the people of the free States, and for them to influence their members of Congress, so the great fraud upon Kansas might be annulled in Washington. At first we did not believe that such an outrage would be there sustained. Soon as I reached Boston, Faneuil Hall was thrown open, and fresh from the scenes of this effort by slavery to conquer Kansas, I depicted the outrage, and appealed for sympathy and support. On that platform, while the crowd stood, (for there are no seats on the floor of Faneuil Hall), most burning words were spoken, and the old hall seemed to echo what the fathers uttered for liberty three generations before. On each side of me there stood the men who made that period luminous and Boston glorious, by their eloquence and their action. On my right stood Starr King; on my left, Wendell Phillips; while back of us, beamed from the wall the faces of Adams and Otis. A sympathizing audience made the hall resound with applause, which all New England heard, and heeded.

I then plead our cause in every Eastern State. The legislatures of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Rhode Island invited me to address them. Halls and churches were opened, and a general campaign inaugurated. I took the names (and have them yet) of over two thousand men who enrolled for Kansas, and appeared there as soon as navigation opened in the spring. Noble fellows they were. "Some remain until this present, others have fallen on sleep."

All our eyes were then turned upon the XXXIVth Congress, which assembled Dec. 3, 1855. But this slavery struggle was there when they met; and the House of Representatives could not organize, and did not, until Hon. N. P. Banks was chosen speaker on the 3d day of February! The Kansas struggle had got into Congress, as I hoped, and sixty days of angry debate followed before the House could organize! When the second slaveholders' war came in 1861, I was there again. But the warriors for slavery had left, thank God! for their own chosen fields, and we had the organization of Congress all to ourselves.

Two years more of President Pierce's administration remained, and in his annual message, speaking of Kansas, he said nothing had occurred there which in his judgment required Federal interposition! But he took good care in the same message to condemn "associations organized in other States to agitate slavery there." He arraigned the administration of his own Governor (Reeder), endorsed in advance the action of the bogus legislature; then turned Gov. Reeder out of office, and appointed in his stead Wilson Shannon of Ohio.

On the 14th day of February, Gov. Reeder presented our memorial to the House of Representatives, remonstrating against the election of one Whitfield who claimed an election by this Missouri invasion of the November previous. In this Gov. Reeder said "that Whitfield's election was absolutely void, without law, as it was imposed upon Kansas by non-residents from the State of Missouri."

The President's message upon Kansas and the memorial of Gov. Reeder instigated that long debate in Congress upon Kansas affairs, which lasted over six months of that session. Slavery had a large majority in the Senate, but the House was about equally divided. Finally Reeder's case was referred to the Committee on Elections, and Hickman of Pennsylvania reported a resolution to investigate. After an angry debate Geo. G. Dunn of Indiana proposed a substitute, which was that the House send a committee to Kansas and take the testimony, which passed. This saved us. Howard of Michigan, Sherman of Ohio, and Oliver of Missouri were of the committee.

Then the public began to learn of what slavery had done. Their papers, up to this time, had cautioned the public not to believe our stories. I had been denounced by the New York Observer, to say nothing of secular papers, as an "agitator," a "falsifier," a "slanderer," etc., etc. But now "judgment was laid to the line." This committee would get at the truth. Concealment by secret oaths, under cover of darkness, by the pro-slavery men, could no longer hide their record. They had shot, in open day, William Dow, my own friend—and one Coleman did it. They permitted his body to lie from noon till after dark, before any notice was taken of it. The murderer escaped to Missouri at first, but soon after returned to Gov. Shannon and surrendered himself. The Governor bid him go free! He was never punished. But the good Samaritan, who came that way and took up the body to care for it, was arrested; and while Sheriff Jones had him, and was on the way to a place of confinement, S. F. Tappan, A. N. Wood and a few others of our men, met Jones and his posse, and they rescued Branson. Jones was indignant, and rushed for Gov. Shannon and demanded three thousand men "to aid in the execution of the laws." Few from Kansas responded, but on the 29th of November the Governor issued his famous proclamation. Then Missouri poured in her men (such as they were) and this inaugurated what was known as the "Wakarusa war." I was one of their prisoners, in their own camp, during six days and nights of that war; and I heard one Maj. Clark, an Indian agent, admit and boast to Gen. Richardson, who held me, that he (Clark) had shot and killed Thomas W. Barber while they were passing on the road near Lawrence. Shannon saw that lifeless body the next day at the "Free State Hotel" in Lawrence. This fact I reported to the President; but he retained Clark in office all the same, and he went his way, unwhipt of justice.

The Free State men of Kansas were not lawless, nor were they satisfied by simply protesting against "bogus laws," as we called the Shawnee Mission acts. Like all good citizens, we sought freedom under law, and good government. If there be, subordinate to the Deity, one thing above another to which men swear allegiance, it is law. To this we bow. At that altar we sacrifice. Here at morning, midday and evening, we worship. In subordination to law, we sought liberty—liberty for Kansas and liberty for man. To this end we early formed the "Topeka Constitution;" and on the 15th day of December we ratified it by an almost unanimous vote. Thirty days later, January 15th, we elected officers, and soon memorialized Congress for admission to the Union under it. In support of it several of our men lost their lives. Captain E. P. Brown was the most noted instance. This was accompanied by a brutality that would make savages blush.

After peace had been temporarily restored by a "Treaty," signed by Gov. Shannon, with Lane and Robinson as the representatives of our cause, Gen. Atchison, just from the Senate of the United States, wrote this appeal, which I preserved, and now in part copy, as follows:

"Men of the South... Difficulties have been adjusted; but I will never counsel peace again. Civil war is inevitable; it is near at hand. Twelve months will not elapse before war of the fiercest kind will be upon us. We are now arming and preparing for it. Indeed, we of the border counties are prepared. We must have the support of the South. We are fighting the battles of the South. We want men—armed men. We must have money. Let your young men come on in squads as fast as they can be raised and armed."

Then the Blue Lodges sent out their circulars. I copy from one:

"We have been heavily taxed in both money and time, in fighting the battles of the South in Kansas. Lafayette county alone has expended one hundred thousand dollars in maintaining the rights of the South. Come before the cause is lost."

This started Col. Buford with his regiment from South Carolina, and many others. All entered Kansas in the spring of 1856. Then began the grinding process, between this pro-slavery mob on one hand, and the pro-slavery Administration at Washington on the other.

This experience fastened upon me the conviction that the Slave Power was to rule or ruin this country; and their rule was, in my mind, its ruin. Through this medium I saw and weighed every movement. Those before, no less than those after the firing upon Sumter. That first gun I called the awakening of the Slaveholders' Rebellion; and I saw in it the madness of a suicide. I thanked God that the hour which I knew must come had arrived; and I had lived to see it. I protested against any more compromises, any more concessions, any more subserviency to the Slave Power. I was alarmed and surprised at Mr. Lincoln's pathetic appeal to "save the Union with or without slavery." I wanted no old Union. We had had a Union only in name, during all my manhood, and I wanted no more of it. I knew a man from the South, who said, "Give us a clean piece of paper on which to write the terms upon which we will remain in this Union, and we won't write them." "Good!" I heartily responded. "Nothing will do you any good but a most thorough whipping."

To-day I look down upon it from an eminence of a quarter of a century, and all is well, for it ended well. But I can never cease to mourn for cost of life and blood, by which all this was achieved. But great achievements always cost. The rescue of one race cost the blood and treasure of another. The just for the unjust has been the law of sacrifice. American history is a grand drama, enacted upon the grandest scale. Many of the actors did not understand the parts they were playing. It was no satisfaction to Joseph's brethren to be told, "Ye meant it for evil." "God meant it for good." The final triumph was glorious, though led by a way we knew not.

I can but repeat the verse, written and sent to me by Miss Caroline Briggs of Worcester, Mass., when life was in peril for this cause:

"Build thy great acts high and higher,
Build them on the conquered sod;
Where thy weakness first bled bleeding,
Where thy first prayer rose to God."

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

"It's a long time tryin' to git religion, but when I left off tryin' to do dat and got Jesus, den I found religion."

This speech of a colored sister at a prayer-meeting has drifted to me from the cotton-fields of Mississippi on the wings of a beloved friend's letter, and it haunts me with the persistency of truth—truth that so often wanders like a homeless angel while a falsehood is receiving entertainment under her name. In such a case it generally takes some simple soul like this poor ignorant colored woman, unspoiled by the logical conventionalities to detect the difference.

Religion is a rather vague term to the mass of humanity. To many it means reading a chapter in the Bible and going to church every Sunday; to others it is a restless craving after something, they know not what; to a few it is an infinite longing and yearning which nothing short of a sight of the King in his beauty can ever satisfy, that no floods of persecution can ever quench, and to which all the pleasures and riches and honors of this world are but fuel, kindling it to an intenser flame. How many in the ages past and present have repeated this colored sister's mistake, and spent weary days and nights "trying to get religion" instead of going to the Fountain head. It was Luther's error in those years when his great restless heart, like the mill-wheel of his own proverb with no grain in the hopper, turning round and round, wearily and blindly and dizzily, only ground itself. It was Madame Guyon's, and a host of nameless believers have wandered their forty years in the desert with its Sinai lightnings, its fiery serpents, its hostile tribes, its mirage gleams. And all the while the harvest fields of the land of promise ripened under the early and the latter rain, and the grapes of Eschol purpled its hillsides,—only they missed the way. Who was to blame?

In the life of sister Dora I find this memorable sentence: "When you want to point a soul to Christ, point, but don't stand in the way yourself." There would certainly be less trying to get religion and more trying to get Jesus if every teacher of spiritual truth would remember this. Great revivalists and preachers are perhaps more apt to commit this mistake than humbler workers. The position they hold before the eyes of the world renders it almost impossible not to do so unless they are signally endowed with that Spirit whose choicest gift is humility. The smallest iota of self is enough to hide Christ, as a bit of pasteboard less than an inch square is enough to hide the sun.

Madame De Gasparin tells us in one of her charming books that it takes the three theological virtues—nothing less to graft successfully. "If you graft in a sullen humor, you are unskillful and the graft does not take. If you graft full of an assurance bordering on the pride of life, the wind of the desert passes over your graft and burns it. If you graft without faith, persuaded of unsuccess in advance, you rush into ill-luck, the thorns tear you, the knife plays you false, the ligature loosens, the graft dies." But when we are trying to graft a human soul into the true Vine it surely demands no less. And may we remember, you and I, when we are trying to graft a spiritual scion which shall grow and bring forth fruit for the heavenly kingdom, that we are to graft it on Christ himself, not on what we believe about him, not on the dead word of our own religious opinions and theories, but on the Eternal Vine; and the heavenly Husbandman will send his dew and sunshine and cause the sap to circulate through every fibre, and make it a living branch.

WHAT'S IN THE WAY?

BY J. S. BIBBINS.

It is pitiable in the extreme to hear ministers complain as I heard one not long since, in his effort to promote a revival in his church, that "something is in the way." Of course there was, but he does not seem to see what the real hindrance is, or if he does he ignores it, or has not the moral courage to preach against it.

Let us look at some of the facts in this case. This pastor has charge of about 230 members, and among these are several Masons who are prominent members (including a D. D. who has charge of this part of the church's territory), besides a large number of other members belonging to various other secret societies, so that it is safe to conclude that this church is wholly controlled by the Satanic influence of the secret lodge. This minister has held revival services, so-called, preaching almost every evening for several weeks, about one-third of the members, on an average, being present each evening, and perhaps a half dozen taking part in the exercises; but no sinners converted yet, and no perceptible improvement in the spiritual condition of the church. Still this pastor continues the meetings, preaching and working with much zeal and flattering himself that the church is improving and that sinners will be converted.

Now the Word of God affirms that "one sinner destroyeth much good." How much more then where there are several. And if it be a fact, as some affirm, that "two Masons can control any church," and especially if we take into account that Masonry entirely ignores and rejects the Lord Jesus Christ as the only Saviour, and that all other similar secret societies teach a system of salvation contrary to the Christian, it is easy to see "what's in the way" in this and all similar cases. Now suppose sinners should be truly regenerated and unite with such a church as this, is it at all probable they would long retain their Christian character and experience, as at the beginning? How could they with such surroundings, such examples as Masonic and other lodge members usually exhibit? Sooner or later such converts will learn to their sorrow that "evil communications corrupt good manners."

But this is not an exceptional case. In the various churches where revival services are held, as is usual at this time of the year, the same religious farce is enacted of preaching a partial gospel, regardless of the real cause of such meager results. No account is taken of the fact that most, if not all, secret societies teach a plan of salvation wholly distinct and contrary to the Christian religion; all that is required of each member is that they should live in strict obedience to all the requirements of the order, and the reward after death will be eternal happiness in the "Grand Lodge above." What folly, then, if this be true, to insist that the Lord Jesus Christ is the only Saviour!

On the other hand, if it be true as the Bible teaches, that Christ is the only Saviour, "the way, the truth, and the life," then the teachings of these orders are blasphemously false. How strangely inconsistent and contradictory are the obligations which the professed Christian assumes when he unites with the lodge, and it is a most notorious and significant fact that, with rare exceptions, by some strange infatuation or Satanic influence, such members of the church practically regard their oath to the lodge as superior to their obligation to the church, and pay but little if any regard to its requirements.

Such is the sad condition of things in many of our churches. Ministers of all grades, bishops, presiding elders, and laymen, by their union with secret organizations are all alike involved in this terrible iniquity. How fearful and significant are the words of Isaiah and Ezekiel in regard to such ministers! "His watchmen are blind, they are all ignorant, they are all dumb dogs; they cannot bark: sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber. They are all shepherds that cannot understand," etc. These are the watchmen who do not "warn the wicked" when they see the "sword coming." Will not such "die in their iniquity," and will not God "require blood at their hands"? These are some of the reasons, it seems to me, why so few sinners are saved.

THE WORST TYRANNY

[From the Prairie Farmer.]

Endured by any class of men in this country, and in almost all others, is that now suffered by the great mass of ordinary members of the Knights of Labor, and of other kindred associations. The general object of such associations is a good one; but the management soon falls under the arbitrary direction of certain men having the gift of gab—men not really working-men, but labor demagogues, who climb into offices and good salaries by poisoning the minds of industrial society—men who pander to class passions and sentiments of wage-earners, and incite them to labor contests, so as to show their own authority, and make a show of earning the salaries they themselves receive. Their salaries never stop, no matter how long their dupes may be out of employment, and income needed to support themselves and families. These "Martin Irons," and "Butlers," and "Quinns," on some pretext, real or pretended, order their dupes to sacrifice their daily bread, for weeks and months, and then lose their good positions permanently.

Take the "strike" just closed in New York: A few men employed by a steamship company differed with their employers about 2½ cents per ton in handling coal, and struck, as they had a right to do if they wished. Other men were put in their places, as there were thousands glad to do the work at the prices paid. Thereupon these strutting satraps of officers forbade everybody from using the coal or having anything to do with the offending company, and because they were not instantly obeyed, 80,000 men were ordered to quit work—men who had not a grievance of their own in the world, and their honestly earned wages were assessed to support others who were idle. The scandalous strikes lost the laborers over three million dollars they would have earned while idle, besides disarranging the business of a whole city, discommoding many millions of people, and causing a large advance in the cost of coal, mainly to people least able to pay it, as those who could best pay the advance were already supplied with their stocks laid in for the winter. On the pretense that there had been a slight yielding to their authority by a single company, these Quinns and other pestiferous disturbers ordered the strike "off," but thousands of their dupes find their places filled, and they are all aloft. The salaries of the "walking delegates" and those responsible for the strike go right on, though doing no labor with their own hands.

Take all the strikes that have occurred in twenty years past, and in the aggregate, for every one single dollar gained by the strikers, in increase of wages, or otherwise, two hundred dollars have been lost by the men engaged in them. And this will always be the case, in the very nature of things. Goods, property, stocks, bonds, labor, skilled or unskilled, will follow the unchangeable law that supply and demand regulate prices, in the long run. Every man has a perfect right to set his own price upon his products, his skill, his time, his labor; but he has no right to do this for any other man, nor has he right or power to compel others to take his products or his labor at his own price. Suppose, for illustration, that the farmers of this country should resolve that their grain, which represents their labor, is too low, and that they would not sell a bushel, except at certain figures, and that they would boycott everybody who sold lower than their set prices, and boycott all who bought of anybody who did sell lower. Would they succeed, when the rest of the world has wheat to sell at what can be got for it? No more can their helpers, who have labor to sell, control its price. Its price is the highest rate it will bring. We work upon the Prairie Farmer more hours per day, and do harder service, than Irons, or Butler, or Quinn, were ever accused of laboring. But if anybody else makes as good or a better paper, and offers it at a lower price, can we expect or command that subscribers shall continue to take our paper at our price? It would be nonsense; and equally nonsensical is it for those who have skill, or goods, or labor to sell, to expect to control the market, and compel others to pay their price.

FROM THE FLY-LEAF OF D. L. MOODY'S BIBLE.

It will greatly help you to understand Scripture if you mark not only what is written, but of whom and to whom; with what words, at what time, where to, with what intent, under what circumstances; considering that which goes before, and that which follows.—Preface to Miles Coverdale's Bible, 1535.

The Bible sets forth two things—the cross and the throne.

The Old Testament points toward the cross.

The Gospels tell the story of the cross.

The Epistles point toward the throne.

The Revelation tells the story of the throne.

The Old Testament tells us what sin leads to, and ends with the words, "Lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."—Malachi 4: 6. The New Testament shows us the way out of sin, and ends thus: "The grace of our Lord Jesus be with you all."—Rev. 22: 21.—Sel.

REFORM NEWS.

OUR REFORM IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Feb. 18, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—My appointment at the Town Hall at Gastonia, N. C., was attended with difficulties. The night was very dark and a heavy rain was freezing as it fell. There was no arrangement for lighting the hall, and only a fire place without fuel to warm it. Nevertheless there was a good congregation, including the leading Masons and Anti-masons, and lamps and fuel were provided. I spoke nearly an hour, confining myself to Freemasonry as related to Christianity. I was listened to with careful attention, and in conclusion I asked for remarks or questions from those who dissented. An M. E. minister, who said he was a Mason, assayed a defence. He held first that since I was not a Mason I could not testify in reference to the lodge, and that many good men belonged to the order, which would not be true if it was evil. But he was compelled to admit that Masonry did exclude Christ from its prayers and Scripture readings, and this he said was necessary on account of the Jews who are members of the order. This he held was justifiable because the object was not to teach religion, but only to inculcate morality. There were two other ministers present and his admissions had more weight than my lecture. Among some who were present there was considerable bitterness, but the general temper of the meeting was good. Most of those present had never imagined that the order could be opposed.

Leaving the pleasant and hospitable home of Rev. E. E. Boyce, I went south to Chester, S. C., where is a flourishing Presbyterian school under the management of Rev. Mr. Loomis, who received me kindly and invited me to remain with him, but for some unexplained reason was unwilling to have me address his students or distribute our literature. One professor is an Odd-fellow.

My next stop was at Winnsboro, county-seat of Fairfield county, S. C. Here the Presbyterians have a flourishing school known as Fairfield Normal Institute, for eighteen years under the care of Rev. W. Richardson. He received me into his family and expressed a hearty appreciation of my work. On consulting the pastor of the colored Presbyterian church I found that he was a graduate of Howard University, and heard me lecture in 1882. He has some tracts and a copy of "Finney on Masonry" which he brought from that institution. He said that he had been over-persuaded when he came to W— to join the Odd-fellows, but had seen his mistake and renounced them. He said he would do what he could to secure me a hearing. At night the large, new Presbyterian church was well filled. There were 150 students and at least as many more of citizens. Pres. Richardson offered prayer, and I spoke for more than an hour. A number came to me and expressed their earnest sympathy. The pastor, Rev. J. C. Watkins, said that there had been of late a decided decline in interest in secret societies in that town, though they were still numerous and strong. I called on the pastor of the A. M. E. church, a well educated man from Detroit, Mich. He said that he had never joined any secret order and had done what he could to oppose them. He had never seen the Cynosure nor any of our publications, but would do what he could to circulate them. The church to which he preaches has a fine house of worship and 400 or 500 members. My stay with Pres. Richardson was most pleasant. He and his excellent wife did much for my comfort, and I learned some things in methods of teaching that I had not known. In their primary department they adopt the word system, and very small children speedily learn to read and spell—much quicker than when they first learn their alphabet.

At 12 M. I left for this city and am being most kindly entertained at Benedict Institute, one of the large and excellent schools sustained by the Baptist Home Missionary Society. It has a classical, theological, normal and industrial department. Its five large buildings, one of which is new and elegant, are on the east side of the city. There are in its different departments five professors and eight teachers. By invitation of Pres. C. E. Becker I spoke to the assembled students in the chapel on the morning of the 18th, and was followed by Prof. Hopple, who has been a Freemason and has "renounced the hidden things of dishonesty." He warned his young friends to keep out of all such organizations.

After my lecture I was conducted by Mrs. Becker through the ladies' hall, and saw the admirable order in which everything is kept; after which she very kindly accompanied me to the Allen Institute, a large colored school under the patronage of the A. M. E. church. The president, Rev. J. W. Morris, is a graduate of Harvard University, a fine specimen of a pure African. He received me cordially and said he would call together his advanced classes and give me a hearing. About seventy-five met in a recitation room and listened attentively to my lecture. I was accorded a vote of thanks, and Pres. Morris and Mrs. Hurd, the music teacher, expressed most hearty concurrence in my remarks. Mrs. Hurd said that her husband, Rev. W. H. Hurd, was the pastor of a large church in Charleston, and they had been strongly impressed with the evil which the orders were doing to the church. She was very anxious I should go to Charleston and address the schools and churches. Benedict and Allen Institutes are on the same side of the city and have about the same number of students, 160 each. The former has the better buildings, and its students are of higher grade, but Allen has also a classical and theological department, and some fine looking young men and women. Allen Institute needs better buildings and is worthy of patronage and aid.

ORANGEBURG, S. C.

During my stay in Columbia I visited the State Capitol, which was commenced in 1855, but on account of "the late unpleasantness" and other reasons, remains unfinished. Even the walls are not yet completed, though portions of the building begin to bear marks of age. The work is now being rapidly prosecuted and when done it will be much like the new State Capitol at Hartford, Conn. There stands on the first floor a bronze statue of Washington. On one side in front is an iron palmetto tree, which looks very natural. Directly in front is "a monument to the Confederate dead of 1861-1865." The following are the inscriptions on the north and south sides:

(North side.) "This monument perpetuates the memory of those who, true to the instincts of their birth, faithful to the teachings of their fathers, constant in their love for the State, died in the performance of their duty. Who, having glorified a fallen cause by the simple manhood of their lives, the patient endurance of suffering and the heroism of death; and in the dark hour of imprisonment, in the hopelessness of the hospital, in the short, sharp agony of the field, found support and consolation in the belief that they would not be forgotten."

(On the South side.) "Let the stranger, who in the future may read this inscription, recognize that these were men that power could not corrupt, whom death could not terrify, whom defeat could not dishonor, and let their virtues plead for just judgment of the cause in which they perished. Let the South Carolinian of another generation remember that the State taught them how to live and how to die, and from her broken fortunes she has preserved for her children the priceless treasure of their memories, teaching all that claim the same birthright that truth, courage and patriotism remain forever."

This costly monument is doubtless gratifying to State pride, but in view of the unfinished State House (for thirty-two years a monument of State incapacity) and in view of the still more deplorable condition of her public school system, which has an existence only in name, this was a most unfortunate use of South Carolina's "broken fortunes." I respectfully suggest to the people of this State (and I am sure it will meet the approval of a majority) that the inscription be changed to read as follows: "This monument is erected to the memory of those brave men who, from a mistaken sense of duty and patriotism, sought to destroy a government that had been their shield in the hour of danger and their faithful friend and protector at all times. In obedience to leaders who were equally misguided, they sought to perpetuate the most infamous system of oppression the world has ever seen, and their signal failure is a matter of profound rejoicing. The State lost a vast number of valuable slaves; and it gained an equal number of more valuable freemen. It failed to establish a confederacy whose corner stone was to be human bondage, but secured a firmer and more enduring union under the aegis of universal liberty. We rejoice that the four millions that were, not without cause, the perpetual though powerless enemies of our country and its laws, are now our trusted fellow citizens and joint inheritors of our liberties. We mourn for the dead, but we rejoice that from our mistake there has resulted the emancipation of a great people and the overthrow of slavery in this and all Christian lands."

The day I visited Columbia was the twenty-second anniversary of its partial burning, it is claimed, by order of Gen. Sherman. Not a vestige of that conflagration remains. The broad, quiet streets are like those of all the Southern cities that have not added manufacturing to their industries. There is much of idleness and poverty. This is said to be one of the worst years since the war.

From Columbia I came here, fifty-two miles south, where I find a pleasant town, the county-seat of Orangeburg county. It is the seat of Claflin University, under the patronage of the M. E. church, and under the care of Pres. L. N. Dunton. It has one large fine building and a number of smaller ones and enrolls over 500 students. The president was formerly pastor of the largest colored church in Charleston, and has been here four years. He is in warm sympathy with our reform, and was very glad to have me address the students on the lodge system. On Sunday morning I preached to a full house in the Congregational church, Rev. J. L. Grice, pastor. He has formerly been a Mason, but has now no fellowship with this order or with any other. My subject was "Secret Societies and Christianity Contrasted." In the evening I spoke to the students of Claflin University on the same subject, from Eph. 5: 11. The president heartily endorsed what I said and urged them to keep out of all such societies. He and Mrs. Dunton pressed me to remain over night with them, and until I should leave the city. There is a farm of 80 acres connected with Claflin University which produced the following: Thirteen bales of cotton, 1,500 bushels of corn, 900 bushels of sweet potatoes, 200 bushels of cow peas, 200 bushels of grapes; besides vegetables of different kinds. This shows the capacity of Southern soil under judicious cultivation.

Next morning by invitation I addressed the students on Africa and its missions, after which I visited Rev. W. L. Johnson, pastor of the colored Presbyterian church, who with his excellent wife conduct a school. Scarcely anywhere have I found a more commodious and finely furnished home. Mr. Johnson is a graduate of a Pennsylvania college, and a native of New York city. He has been an Odd-fellow, but now abhors the whole system of secrecy, and is very anxious to have his people enlightened on this subject. In no town in the entire South have I found a better field and a more open door for the presentation of our reform than in this. I expect, D. V., to go to Charleston to-night and to return and spend next Sabbath in this place, preaching in the M. E. church.

Yours in Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

BETTER TO WHISTLE THAN WHINE.

NAVARE, O., Feb. 26, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I sometimes meet those who have read the agents' reports in the Cynosure who inquire how it is that I always get along so well, while others meet strong opposition. These friends are frequently mistaken. It is not my custom to speak of the dark side, but always try to look on the bright side. There are dark Februaries as well as bright Junes. One of the dark clouds which comes to the agent of reform is often the seeming indifference of those who claim to be friends. I constantly meet those who would be glad to talk to me by the hour, telling their belief of the terrible evil the secret societies are doing, but when asked to take a paper like the Cynosure, or in some practical way help the cause that is seeking their overthrow, they with one accord begin to make excuse. They will tell of all the tribulations they have had for the last ten years. Men worth thousands of dollars, spending every year for tobacco enough to pay for a dozen papers, will sit for hours spitting the juice of the weed into the grate, and talk as if they were afraid of going to the poorhouse the next day. I suppose Gabriel will find such people when he blows his trumpet.

The past week has been one of mingled sunshine and storm. I have spoken five times to attentive audiences. The pastors of the United Presbyterian churches at Mooretown, Scroggsfield, and Mechan-icetown, have made me very welcome and kindly assisted in arranging meetings. There are a number of the George family living at and near Mooretown. They are related to the N. C. A. president and our State secretary; and it is scarcely necessary to add that they are reformers. Quit a number added their names to the list of Cynosure readers. At Scroggsfield I received but one subscription; there should have been fifty. The country for three miles around is nearly all owned by United Presbyterians. At Mechanicstown a good interest prevailed. A number took the Cynosure. I had expected to have spent Sabbath at Boliver. As extra meetings are being held it was thought best by friends to postpone work there until some future time.

I take the train to Justus, where I expect to meet friends and arrange meetings. There was a fall of snow last night, and it is raining hard now.

W. B. STODDARD.

THE ILLINOIS AGENT IN MICHIGAN.

I have just closed a course of lectures at Dutton, a small village on the Michigan Central road, ten miles southeast of Grand Rapids, Mich. As it was rainy the first evening, the school-house easily accommodated all who came, but on the following evenings the crowds increased so that many remained at home, knowing they could not get in. The building seats about one hundred, but as the people kept coming more seats were brought in, and although fully two hundred and fifty people were packed into the room the best of order prevailed, and I had the closest attention throughout. One young man said to me the next day, "I learned many things last night that were new to me. I never heard it claimed before that Masonry is a religion; but it is plain enough. My relatives are many of them Masons, and I have just been on the turning point, not knowing whether to join or not." Quite a number of young gentlemen and ladies are attending school here, preparing for the ministry, and one of the young men said, "The good your lectures have accomplished will not stop here."

The Michigan Holiness school of Dutton was founded by Miss Lura Mains, who is the manager. There are about forty students, many of whom are orphans, and receive board and tuition free of charge. Those who are able to do so, pay $1.50 a week for board, and receive tuition free. The expenses of the school are met by voluntary contributions from those who are interested in the work. A church building is about half completed, which it is hoped will be finished in the spring. This is built entirely by donations. The influence of the school is good in the community, and students are converted almost as soon as they enter. Contributions for this work are worthily bestowed.

I began a course of lectures last evening in the U. B. church at Caledonia, Mich., with fair prospect of large audiences. Will begin work in Illinois next week.

I. R. B. ARNOLD.

MISS MAINS'S REPORT.

Bro. Arnold from Wheaton, Ill., with his sun pictures, has given us four lectures of much profit to the young. The two first on ancient Egypt and idol worship, prepared the way for the third on Freemasonry. On canvas the lodge appeared before the people, and the present system of Baal worship was clearly explained. Young men were warned, and I think by remarks made after the lecture some of them decided never to join a lodge. The last evening he lectured on Palestine. Bro. Arnold preached for us Sunday afternoon, leaving a good impression upon the people. The salvation work in Dutton has been going on since last April. It is anti-secret, anti-tobacco, anti-fashion, and anti-sin of every kind. The converts are radical and earnest workers. The young ministers are taught to be bold heralds of the truth, and without compromise to "march on to the sea," singing "Psalms of victory."

LURA A. MAINS.

A PAULINE MISSIONARY IN THE SOUTH.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am here struggling on for Jesus, our Redeemer. I preached Sunday night last in St. Luke's Baptist church, on the text: "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." The truth was strongly borne witness to by all present, though there were two secretist preachers present; but they admitted the truth. A prominent doctor and high Mason said to me last week that if I continued bothering Freemasons they would hang me higher than Haman. But, dear brethren, none of this will scare me. I am expecting to start out through the country next week (God permitting) to lecture and preach against the lodge.

Please pray for me all who read the Cynosure. "Behold, I send you as lambs among wolves." That is the position of every minister who preaches to-day against whisky and the lodge.

PLAQUEMINE, LA.—I left New Orleans last Thursday for this place. Plaquemine is the county-seat of Iberville, often called "Sweet Iberville." There are about 3,000 or 3,500 inhabitants in the city. On my arrival I was very cordially received and accommodated by Bro. Joseph A. Porter. In the afternoon, in company with brother and sister Porter, I attended the funeral of a Bro. Charles Antoine. There were at the burial about 500 people, but the deceased was a Freemason. The fraternity took charge of the body, and gathered round about the grave with their Masonic and pernicious signs of burial. I was introduced to Rev. A. Hubbs and G. Holmes, pastors respectively of St. Peter's and Macedonia Baptist churches. In conversation with Rev. Hubbs at the funeral, he said to me: "I want either to be altogether with God's people or altogether with the devil's. The performance of those Masons are the performance of devils, and I believe that preachers should preach against them." Bro. Hubbs is in accord with your work, and bids you God-speed. I called on Bro. George Holmes and found him very comfortably situated and owning two comfortable little dwellings. Bro. Holmes is a member of both the Odd-fellows and Female Tabernacle, but I found him very intelligent in speech and ready to accept God's Word as his guide. He spoke very freely on the question of secret societies, and acknowledged that they are invading the churches and corrupting Christians. After carefully pondering over God's Word he declared that he would leave the secretists and preach nothing but truth henceforth. He invited me to preach for his congregation, St. Peter's Baptist church, to-morrow evening at 3 o'clock.

I don't know just how long I will be here. I mean with God's own help to bear a strong testimony for truth. Plaquemine is very much under the lodge power. I am informed that a man was acquitted for a murder last week through lodge influence. Bro. Holmes assured me that he will do all he can to reject all societies from his church hereafter. He says he intends to set apart a special treasury for the purpose of attending to the sick and burying the dead of the church. I mean to leave here when I get sufficient means to travel further, as I have both to labor in the Word, and then work to pay my expenses wherever I travel. Please continue in prayer for the South. I learn that the Knights of Labor help some of the pastors' support here, and even our dear Bro. Holmes acknowledged that he thought it a good institution; but after I informed him that the Masons began as a labor union or guild, he accepted it as spiritually dead. I would like you to try and send the Cynosure to Revs. Ambrose Hubbs and George Holmes, Plaquemine, La.

The colored people are generally very poor here, and at present work is very scarce. The Sunday law generally meets the approval of the majority of the citizens.

I have found Rev. A. Hubbs very intelligent in speech, and also a seceding Mason. He denounces sin in whatever guise it may appear. He spoke most freely on the question of secrecy, and plainly sees the evils thereof. He promises to reprove sin in all of its forms. He also thought the Knights of Labor a good society for the negro, but before parting from him he acknowledged its unchristian features and received very gladly a copy of the Cynosure, and desires the paper regularly. He had read the Cynosure before and was convinced of its truthfulness. I am to preach for his congregation (God permitting) to-morrow (Sunday) evening at 7 p. m.

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CINCINNATI SUBURBS.

CINCINNATI, Ohio.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The enemy is rising in like a flood. The liquor traffic, Mormon polygamy, Sabbath desecration, licentiousness, profanity, anarchism, are making an assault all along the line. Shall we quietly permit them to take the field? Shall we lie supinely on our backs until they inflict "an incurable wound?" No; in the name of the high privileges we enjoy; in the name of this free land, purchased with the blood of our fathers; in the name of our national vocation, to lead the nations into the enjoyment of the Mediatorial reign; and in the name of the King of kings, whose we are and whom we serve, we answer, No. We have adopted the words of the Roman general, "I came, I saw, I conquered." We belong to a band on whose drum head never beats the hollow sound of retreat.

"They overcame by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony."

On Sabbath morning I preached in the Springdale Presbyterian church, Rev. W. H. James, pastor. He has 200 members. His is an old congregation. Their first church building served them from 1791 to 1833. Their second lasted from 1833 to 1886. They now occupy a brick house, built after the most modern fashion. Springdale is an interesting village off the railroad. Here Oliver P. Morton, the Indiana "war governor," was raised. Here Rev. Jos. P. Thompson, the missionary and author of "The Land and the Book," was reared; and it is the birthplace of Judge Cox and other luminaries. I took dinner with Mr. Thomas Duncan, a wholesale merchant in the city. He then drove out three miles to the Oak Hill school-house, where I preached at 2:30 p. m. The Presbyterians have been carrying on a mission Sabbath-school here for the last fifteen years. Bro. Duncan is now superintendent. We had a houseful of interested listeners.

At 6 p. m. I addressed the students of Glendale Female College on the subject of missions. This institution was founded by Drs. J. G. Monfort and L. D. Potter. The latter is its president and has now full charge. They have twelve teachers. There are 120 in attendance altogether. They have fifty boarders. Their building was put up originally for a hotel. I took tea with the Dr. and his family. Their order is complete.

At 7:30 I preached in the Glendale Presbyterian church, Rev. S. H. McMullin, D. D., pastor. This is a strong congregation. It is made up of business men from the city and their families. Glendale has 1800 hundred people, and they are almost all of that class. I stayed all night with Elder W. H. Hughes, a banker in the city. He has the largest theological library I ever saw owned by a layman. He has been a Sabbath-school teacher for years, and prepares himself as carefully for his class as a preacher for the pulpit.

On Monday morning the Evangelical Alliance of city ministers passed a resolution to the effect, that as the Post and Times Star do not issue "Sunday papers," the church notices shall hereafter be given to them. I am to preach in the Fourth Presbyterian church Friday evening. Two of our city principals have invited me to attend the meeting of their Principals' Association next Saturday morning, and address them on moral reforms as related to our public school system. Dr. Joyce tells me that he has engaged Harrison, the "boy preacher," to occupy his church the first two weeks in March, and Sam Jones the last two. He proposes to break down the throne of Satan in this city, who has so long been teaching our citizens to say, "Evil, be thou my good." May we soon be able to say to the saloons and theaters and low dives, as Caius Mucius said to the Roman mob: "Go, get you home, you fragments."

J. M. FOSTER.

THE NEW PARTY.

DARLINGTON, Mo., Feb. 21, 1887.

There is in some of our papers a suggestion that "the reform parties should unite." While I am a prohibitionist from the crown of my head to the soles of my feet, yet, with a large class of voters, I do not believe it wise to follow any movement whose leaders are in alliance with saloonocrats. In fact, there is an organized, active and wide-spread agitation against those anti-American, monarchying institutions, with their royal technique and high-sounding titles of nobility, transplanted from Continental Europe, that are productive of nothing but evil, and that continually. Oath-bound secret societies are at this hour causing no end of trouble in religion, business and politics.

Take Freemasonry, for instance. It has its odes, chants, prayers and funeral dirges; it has its chaplains, stewards, deacons, "worshipful masters," priests and "most excellent grand high priests;" then, to cap the climax, it has its horrible oaths and barbarous, mutilating, throat-cutting and tongue-pulling, breast-tearing and heart-plucking, body-severing and bowel-burning death penalties, enough to make a common cannibal shudder, yet God is called upon to witness the unlawful, forbidden compact, thus making it the blackest of blasphemy. It will astonish future generations that such miserable systems ever existed under our laws, selling so-called secrets that are no secrets and pledging candidates to keep "secrets" when the lodge has no secrets to keep, as hundreds of civil affidavits, with not a single one to the contrary, attest. A man takes three degrees in Freemasonry, and I place a sworn exposition under his nose, and will sell him for forty cents all the information that the lodge sold him for thirty dollars, just as near as the human mind can remember, thereby swindling him out of twenty-nine dollars and sixty cents on a square deal. No Freemason can make a lodge due guard or sign or see one given without bringing to his remembrance a blasphemous obligation or murderous death penalty.

Now, sir, can any man constantly familiarize his mind with murder and blasphemy and organized swindling and not come to look upon crime with complacency? To rid our fair land of these pernicious midnight cabals is a work that even angels might envy. No wonder men first and foremost in American statesmanship and jurisprudence have so bitterly denounced these orders, and sent a note of warning down to younger men to beware of these despotic systems with their Overseers, Noble Grands, Most Worshipful Grand Masters, Kings and Grand Kings. I propose to say that no negro in the palmett days of slavery ever addressed his owner as "Worshipful Massa!"

To liberate white men from the low-down subjugation of lodge thralldom and slavery, no less than from the rum power, is the highest mission of the Christian, the patriot and the philanthropist. Thousands of true Christians and genuine prohibitionists are slow to believe that prohibition or any other righteous law can be successfully enforced so long as officers and criminals are tied up in such sworn fraternity or life-and-death sympathy.

Let every believer in the Bible then read the following plain Scriptures bearing on this important matter: St. John 5: 29. 2 Tim. 3: 16, 17. 2 Pet. 1: 20. Deut. 29: 23. 1 John 1: 5, 6. St. John 18: 20. Matt. 24: 26. Prov. 6: 12. Gen. 49: 6. 1 John 2: 4. Prov. 4: 14-16. 2 Cor. 6: 17, 18. 1 Tim. 5: 22. 1 Thess. 5: 22. Eph. 5: 11, 12. St. John 3: 19, 20. 2 Cor. 4: 1, 2. 2 John 1: 10, 11. Luke 12: 2, 3. Matt. 24: 35.

While I am not a member of any of the churches, yet I am a firm believer in Bible Christianity and experimental religion—the kind that separates from evil. I do not admire the churches that are married to the world, the flesh and the devil. Neither do I care to emulate the man that talks and prays one way and acts and votes another. See 1 Tim. 4: 1, 2. Jer. 5: 26. Titus 1: 16. Matt. 15: 7, 8. 2 Tim. 4: 3, 4. 2 Thess. 2: 11, 12. Jer. 5: 30, 31. Ezek. 5: 11. Ezek. 22: 26. Matt. 6: 24. Lev. 5: 1, 4, 5. Matt. 5: 33-37. 2 John 1: 10, 11.

These are some of the things to be considered by every Christian and patriot when uniting with any party religiously or politically. What is politically wrong can never be religiously right, and what is morally wrong can never be politically right. Have written W. Jennings Demorest and other prominent prohibition leaders. By all means let reformers unite. The Bible and the Constitution of the United States furnish common ground for all Christian patriots. Every American worthy the name could unite on a platform in harmony therewith. Yours for right and good government,

M. N. BUTLER.

ARE MASONIC RITES HEATHENISH?

COLUMBUS, Miss.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It is well to be "zealously affected in every good work," but it is unwise to allow either pen or tongue to give utterance to extreme and untenable positions even in defence of the right. Referring to a letter from California in which horror was expressed at the abominations of the heathen in the Chinese quarters of San Francisco, connected with the celebration of the Chinese New Year, you say: "But if our scrupulous friend will take his stand almost any day on Montgomery street near Market, San Francisco, he will see the great Masonic temple illuminated and scores of young men on their way to scenes of religious debauch as base and unholy and unchristian as the heathen of Dupont street. But our Christian correspondent who is horror-struck with one, has only apologies for the other. Shame!"

You will pardon me if I echo your "shame!" I am no apologist for Masonry, indeed, I believe Christians should not belong to the order; but at the same time I respectfully and earnestly protest against the above statement concerning Masonic rites. Those rites may be wrong—they may even be in a sense non-Christian—but they certainly are not as "debauching" or "base" as the "abominations of the heathen." Let me not be misunderstood—I repeat, I am no apologist for Masonry. I severed my connection with the order a score of years ago, because I could not longer conscientiously affiliate, believing then as I do now, that Christians should do all their benevolent work in the name of the Lord Jesus. Masonry is confessedly non-Christian. The name of Jesus is out of place in its lodges—at least till the seventh degree is passed. The lodge is, therefore, no place for me, but I do not see that anything is gained by scrib-ing to the rites of the order a character which every Mason knows to be untrue. C. E. W. DOBBS.

NOTE.—Let us rejoice that this brother sees clearly such a part of the Masonic system as he does. Truly it is enough to decide the course of a Christian man. But as to the comparison of the Masonic and Chinese religious rites, let this brother first read what is said by others who have obeyed their conscience in leaving Masonry. Let him then study carefully the explanation and philosophical analysis of Masonic rites as given in Ronayne's "Master's Carpet." Let him also watch the Chinese at their worship, as the writer in the Cynosure above has done, personally comparing it with Masonry. After this he will, we are confident, agree that our language is neither extravagant nor unjust.

PITH AND POINT.

LET THIS NOBLE GALAXY SPREAD OVER THE WHOLE HEAVENS.

Allow me to express my delight in the series of articles you are publishing in the Cynosure. They are bringing to light the hidden virus of the lodge system not apparent to the minds of the masses generally. Such articles it seems to me are deserving of more than a casual reading. Am glad to know that there is a call for them in book form. The publishers may have my name as a subscriber. The same is true of the noble galaxy of names gracing the pages of the Cynosure for the past twelve months or more. Their fame should be held in everlasting remembrance by a grateful people.—E. L. HARRIS, Delaware, Wis.

FROM THE PASTOR OF CHAMBERS ST. PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, BOSTON.

There is no more important question before the public at the present time, neither is there any that is more certain of a righteous and speedy settlement. It is gratifying to every earnest Christian heart to see how evil is being engaged at every point by some distinctively Christian force and vigorously combated. No one reform is vastly ahead of the rest, but they are all marching forward like a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots and the victory is inevitable and will be almost simultaneous at all points. I see in this the controlling hand of our Master, and rejoice with all my heart in the evidence it gives that he will soon come and take to him his great power and reign.—D. McFALL.

THE SISTER IS RIGHT: WHO WILL GAINSAID?

I would like to see an article in your columns by some of your able writers on the question, "Has Odd fellowship ever done any good?" I have been having a little controversy on the question, and am accused of willfully trying to support a point I know to be false. I hold that the order is of no use, because all the good Odd fellows have done could have been done just as well without their being Odd fellows, therefore Odd-fellowship is not a necessary means to the end and for that reason deserves no credit for the good done by those who may be Odd-fellows. I read your paper with interest and may our good Father hasten the day when its teachings may be read and supported all over our land.—Mrs. W. V. HUNT, Delta, Iowa.

REMEMBER CHAMPAIGN, ILL.

Give my sincere regards to Bro. Disette and say I was in attendance at the week of prayer at the same room in the Baptist church of this city, where they (the Presbyterian and Congregational ministers) abused him so unkindly one year ago. The same men at the same place practiced their same trickery to prevent me from talking or praying. May all these persecutions but drive us nearer to the dear Master, and to be more like him, in obedient loving faith and work to oppose the works of darkness.—A. D. HOWELL, Champaign, Ill.

THANK GOD FOR THE N. C. A.

I wish to congratulate you for your good work in the publication of so many good tracts and books that so justly condemn secret associations, and especially Freemasonry, and for the great work you are doing all over the United States by your conventions. I thank God for your boldness and courage to stand up against so high a tide of malignant opposition. The good Lord bless and speed the work, and give you much success. I thank God for the good already done.—SAMUEL MATHEW, Cany, Oreg.

THE NEED OF THE CONGRESS OF MAR. 30TH.

My husband and I have been reading the Cynosure for the past few years, and we feel that there is no periodical that comes to our home in which we are more interested. We think there is reason for abundant thanksgiving to God that he has inspired so many with the spirit to investigate and expose the terrible evils of secretism. Though much has been done, yet it seems the number of secret societies has been increasing until their name is legion, and like the frogs of Egypt, they have come up to fill the whole land. The Scripture says, "When the enemy comes in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against them." How then can the conditions be better met than by a Christian congress meeting for prayer and consultation. In view of the interests involved, no Christian can consider the call premature. My first choice would be to attend the convention, but some of us are feeling that there is much to be done in Michigan before the spring elections which occur soon after.—E. H. CANDEE, S. Whitford, Mich.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON XI.—March 13, 1887.—Jacob at Bethel.—Gen. 28: 10-22.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Surely the Lord is in this place.—Gen. 28: 16.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

From Peloubet's Notes.

Good things obtained in a wrong way. It seemed to Rebekah and Jacob as if God's promises were about to fail, and they must do something to bring the right thing to pass, even if they did a wrong in accomplishing it. But did God need Jacob's sin in order to carry out his plans? God forbid! The work would have been done infinitely better if Jacob had gained his birthright in God's way and God's time. His sin arose not from faith, but from the imperfection of his faith. And behold the result. Instead of a clean, un tarnished blessing from God he gained a curse with the blessing. And it is always so. Whenever we use wrong methods to gain God's blessings, the curse always clings to us.—P.

Pillows of stone were but an outward expression of Jacob's feelings at this time. He was alone, poor, banished, undefended, with a long and dangerous journey before him among hostile tribes, and with an uneasy conscience. But all this was leading him to God, for in this night of darkness he "called upon God in his distress." The valley of humiliation and of the shadow of death was the way to the land of Beulah and the Delectable Mountains. Often from a pillow of stones come the brightest visions of the soul. From weariness and pain and trouble arise the steps that lead to heaven. Stephen when stoned by a mob saw the heaven opened, and Jesus on the right hand of God. Paul from a Roman prison saw his crown of righteousness. Life's Pisgah's and mounts of transfiguration are built of the hard rocks of affliction and trial. This is finely expressed in the hymn, "Nearer my God to thee."—P.

"The angels of God ascending and descending." God would teach him the connecting and living intercourse between heaven and earth. The angels descending from heaven to earth designate the revelations, the words and promises of God; the ascending angels indicate faith, sighs, confession and prayer.—Lange.

The Ladder a Type of Christ. To us the ladder is Christ, and that in two ways: Christ bridges over heaven and earth by union of the human with the divine, and by him we have access to the Father. I say not, Jacob saw this; but it is so to us: the ladder to us is Christ. Again, to us the angels descending are the intimations God gives us of his Spirit; the angels ascending are our prayers. Again, there is the voice speaking of fatherly protection, of hope, assurance to the end. This is made still clearer to us, for it is in Christ that we are made sons of God.—F. W. Robertson. (1) It is a type of the person of Christ. (2) It is a type of the work of Christ.—Dr. Robinson.

"Behold I am with thee and will keep thee," etc. I will direct, help, and support thee in a peculiar manner. The Lord assures him that, however he might be an alien from his father's house, he should not be cast away from his presence, and that he would be his guide and guardian wherever he should go. Why should we not, as the spiritual seed of Jacob, catch a gleam of refreshing light from this assurance as we pass along? If God will be with us, if he will keep us in all places and circumstances, as if he will never leave us nor forsake us, and if he will bring us at last to our promised and hoped-for land of rest, then may we go on our way with confidence and joy.—Bush. Against his fourfold cross here is a fore-ford comfort. (1) Against the loss of his friends, "I will be with thee." (2) Of his country, "I will give thee this land." (3) Against his poverty, "Thou shalt spread abroad to the east, west," etc. (4) His solitariness; angels shall attend thee, and "thy seed shall be as the dust," etc.—Trapp.

"And this is the gate of heaven." Alluding to the ladder or stairway opening to him access to the heavenly world. If it was a ladder for angels to traverse it was also a ladder for men, the poor, humble, distressed sinner like himself. If it was a ladder for God to come down in the flesh, it was a ladder for men to go up to God.—Jacobus. Every true house of God is a gate of heaven to every true worshiper. His soul rises toward heaven in worship and love, and heaven comes down into his soul.

"And poured oil upon the top of it." Because oil was the symbol of the dedication of a thing to holy uses.—Ellicott. Herein is the value of forms: impressions, feelings, will pass away unless we have some memorial. If we were merely spiritual beings, then we might do without forms; but we are still mixed up with matter, and unless we have a form, the spirit will die. Resolve, then, like Jacob, to keep religion in mind by the use of religious rites. Church-going, the keeping of the Sabbath are not religion; but religion hardly lives without them.—F. W. Robertson.

"And this stone... shall be God's house." He would dedicate this place to God's worship, and afterwards erect there an altar for the celebration of divine worship, a resolution which was subsequently carried out (see chap. 35:1, 15).—Pulpit Com.

"And... I will surely give the tenth unto thee." This was one share of all his earnings, given to God in acknowledgment of his allegiance, just as men pay taxes to the government to which they belong. God's kingdom needs money, as do earthly kingdoms. The taxes not only show allegiance, but bind the people closer to their country. They have a part in all that is done. The same is true of what we give to God. We do not know in what way Jacob gave it to God, but probably in sacrifices, altars, and to the poor.

OBITUARY.

ENOCH HONEYWELL of Altay, N. Y., died at the residence of his daughter on the 13th inst. in the 90th year of his age. He had been for a year or more an invalid from the fracture of his hip. This, with a severe cold and old age, carried him off. He was born in 1788 in Westchester county, near New York city and lived, with the exception of some three or four years, his whole life in that State, the last fifty years at the place where he died. In early life he was married to Miss Eliza Dye of Lawrence county, N. Y., who preceded him in death near twenty years ago. He was the father of three children, all living—Alba of Hoopston, Illinois, Gilbert and Emma of Altay, N. Y., the latter the wife of William Fenno, and mother of Prof. Frank H. Fenno, the author of several works on elocution and kindred subjects.

About 1816 Mr. H. came to southern Ohio and Indiana, being one of the first settlers of Terre Haute, on the site of which present city he then owned 160 acres of land. He traveled quite extensively through the then wild west, generally by horseback on land and by canoe on the rivers. His record of adventures, events, and descriptions of men and places as then existing are extremely interesting. He engaged for a time in pork-packing, shipping his products to New York by way of New Orleans, the Gulf of Mexico and Atlantic Ocean, sometimes accompanying the shipments himself. Sickness, however, finally drove him back to his native State, where he engaged in mechanical and agricultural pursuits, until in old age he retired from active life and lived mostly with his daughter upon the old home farm till death.

About 1830 he became a member of the Baptist church under the preaching of Elder Jacob Knapp, a noted evangelist of that time. Subsequently, owing to conflicting opinions in the church upon the slavery question, he joined with the Wesleyan Methodists, remaining a nominal member of that church while he lived. His views of religious profession and duty, however, were quite liberal. He valued a conscientious, godly life far above the most rigid adherence to church creeds. He was one of the original liberty party Abolitionists, and his was the first, and for several years the only vote cast with that party in the town where he lived. Subsequently, as the party became larger, he was often made a delegate to the State and National anti-slavery conventions of that period. Upon the great questions of slavery, temperance, and others of a reformatory character, he was far in advance of his age. His tendency of radical thought and action usually placed him in the minority of public and popular sentiment. His mental powers were strong and vigorous, and his writings, of which a number have been published, were forcible, pungent and aggressive, his zeal carrying him often, as many thought, somewhat beyond the limits of discretion. He was, however, true to his own convictions of duty, perhaps too much so for the convictions of others. It is possible that the memoirs of his life and a collection of his more important writings will be published. At his funeral exercises a lengthy paper written years before in anticipation of his final departure, was read by the officiating minister, embracing his views upon the leading reformatory topics of the day, and his last words to his relatives and many friends left behind.

A firm believer in the justice and mercy of the all-wise Father through the saving atonement of his Son, he was at all times ready to go to his final reward, in the strong and ever-abiding hope that his long and eventful life had not been lived in vain.

Died at Fredonia, N. Y., Jan 23rd, 1887, ABEL L. BLOWERS, aged 88 years, 6 months.

The deceased was born at Pompey, N. Y., Aug. 6th, 1798. He was one of the pioneers of western New York, settling at Cuba, Allegany county, in 1823. He cleared, unsaid, the farm where the most of his life was spent, enduring hardships and privations of which the present generation have little conception. The last few years of his life were happily past in his home at Fredonia.

In early manhood Mr. Blowers embraced Christianity and united with the Baptist church, ever leading a useful, consistent, Christian life until the end. He gave to all reformatory movements a ready sympathy and support, discountenancing by his own upright life all forms of evil. Since Morgan's time he has been a staunch Anti-mason, working with great zeal in the cause, especially during the later years of his life. His most prominent characteristics were a love of truth and an unwavering conscientiousness in the performance of duty. Strong in his opinions, he ever stood firmly by his convictions regardless of public comment. But words are weak. The record of a noble, useful life, such as his has been, speaks with an eloquence greater than any eulogy.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

The American Party.

FIRST NOMINATION for President at Oberlin, Ohio, May 23, 1872.

PLATFORM ADOPTED at Chicago, June 28, 1872.

NAME ADOPTED at Syracuse, N. Y., June 3, 1874.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES:

1872—Charles Francis Adams and Joseph L. Barlow.

1876—James B. Walker and Donald Kirkpatrick.

1880—J. W. Phelps and Samuel C. Pomeroy.

1884—J. Blanchard and J. A. Conant, nominated; the former withdrawing, Samuel C. Pomeroy was nominated. Both nominees withdrawing, the support of the party was generally given to John F. St. John and William Daniel, candidates of the Prohibition party.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clanishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political revolution, and directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable: We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fact that the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but tyrannical and despotic, and of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we cannot govern without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religious and worship invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; and we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their deeds, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Bible and Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as possible, and that revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 3, 1887

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS OF CHURCHES AND CHRISTIANS.

OFFICIAL CALL.

Pursuant to instructions, and in humble reliance upon Almighty God for wisdom, and upon the Christian patriotism of our fellow citizens for co-operation and support, we have secured Hershey Music Hall, Chicago, Ill., and hereby announce that a Congress of Churches and Christians will assemble at 9:30 A. M., on the 30th day of March, 1887, and continue its sessions two days and evenings, to consider the nature and principles of the secret lodge system and its influence on the Christian religion and civil liberty, and to take what steps may seem proper, after prayer and due consideration.

The committee have learned with satisfaction of the action of several sympathizing bodies in appointing representatives, and are in receipt of the names of over fifty delegates already chosen.

Every Conference, Presbytery, Association, Council, Church, Educational Institution, or other body favoring this Congress, is respectfully urged to at once provide for a representation in its meeting. Let the names of delegates appointed, or who shall be chosen, and the names of all persons intending to be present be forwarded at once to Rev. L. N. Stratton, West Division post-office, Chicago, Ill., so that entertainment may be provided for those who desire, and a roll of members begun.

L. N. STRATTON, Secretary.

THE SWEDISH LUTHERAN CONFERENCE of Illinois met in this city on the 16th ult. and continued its sessions over the following Sabbath. This body represents a membership of 32,318, and every church in the bounds of the conference except one was represented by its pastor on the floor. Rev. M. C. Ranssen is its president, whose position of opposition to the lodge is well known to our readers. Pres. L. N. Stratton visited his conference in behalf of the approaching Congress of Churches and Christians, and was listened to with marked attention. The matter was taken up and endorsed, and Rev. L. A. Johnson, pastor of the First Swedish Lutheran church in Rockford, Ill., appointed to speak for the conference. Rev. C. A. Evald, Chicago; Rev. S. P. A. Lindahl, Moline, Ill., and Mr. J. A. Enander, editor of the Hemlandt, Chicago, were appointed delegates.

THE MILLENNIUM.—In one hundred and thirteen years, we shall reach, if the world stands, the beginning of the seventh thousand years from creation, by the ordinary Bible chronology. Will some one skilled in such studies, tell us how extensively the opinion prevailed in Cowper's day, that the seventh thousand is the Millennium? He says:

The time of rest, the promised Sabbath comes;
Six thousand years of sorrow have well nigh
Fulfilled their tardy and disastrous course
O'er a sinful world: and what remains,
Of this tempestuous scene of human things,
Is merely as the working of the sea
Before a calm, which rocks itself to rest.

D WIGHT L. MOODY.

To attempt here a sketch of the life and work of the great evangelist, would be like introducing Mr. Wentworth, the 'Long John' of Chicago, to the people of this city, than whom there are probably few men better known to our citizens. Mr. Moody himself might, perhaps, be an exception; and it is certain that Chicago has given no men to the world whose work she may regard with greater satisfaction. That work has answered the question of the right mode of interesting and educating the religious life of men in a practical way. D. L. Moody was born in Northfield, Mass., in 1837, and was left fatherless when four years old. The mother fought a brave battle with poverty until her children were old enough to care for her. When seventeen he went to Boston as clerk in a shoe store and was brought to Christ under the labors of Rev. Dr. Kirk of the Mount Vernon Congregational church, himself an eminent evangelist. He came to Chicago nearly thirty-one years ago, and his history here as Sabbath-school and mission worker, until his charge grew into a church; his work in the Y. M. C. A., extending to religious conventions and to revival work in churches; his journey to England in 1872 where he went, as he tells us, to learn how to study the Bible, and soon with Mr. Sankey began his remarkable career as an evangelist; the immense meetings in this country in 1875-6; and his subsequent journeyings over the United States and Great Britain—

these labors are a part of our American history, of which all men have known and read. In all this work the directness of business life has, under God, given a success which was hard to be understood by those who held to the methods of the schools. All have confessed that the mighty power of the Holy Spirit of God could alone use such means for such astonishing and glorious results. Mr. Moody himself gives all credit to the work of that Spirit whom it is the work of his life to honor.

Of late years Mr. Moody has turned to such efforts as, in a sense, give more permanency to his work. The establishment of the Northfield Schools for young men and women; and the present work which it is believed he will accomplish in Chicago, of organizing a great mission training school which shall at once be a center of light and beneficence to the wayward multitudes of a great city, and a model for other cities—these enterprises, either of which would be a life work for ordinary men, will embody in more permanent form the principles of evangelization on which he has acted, and perpetuate them when he shall have gone to his reward.

A LODGE MENACE.

Prohibitionists do well to be on their guard. Eternal vigilance is surely the price of their liberty, so long as the lodge has any influence in the councils of their party. Rev. M. A. Gault, district secretary of the National Reform Association, writes to the College Springs Crank: "A prominent Good Templar in Wisconsin told me last summer that 'Hon.' John B. Finch would almost certainly be the Prohibition candidate in 1892, when there would scarcely be a doubt of his election. The Good Templars, he said, were so thoroughly organized all over the country, that they can control the Prohibition party. It is at this point the danger lies. There is a large anti-secret element in that party who will bolt unless anti-secret men are nominated." This is the iniquitous management of the lodge, against which the Cynosure has ever warned the Prohibition leaders. It is next to impossible, human nature being as it is, that a secret organization working in connection with such a movement should not be used for manipulating, controlling and subverting, to secure supremacy,—and this simply; justice, right and honor being left out of the count entirely. To nominate John B. Finch to-day would nearly ruin the organization of the Prohibition movement. Do the Good Templars expect him to be a more worthy or honorable or capable man six years hence? Not a bit of it! He is only the head of the lodge. He stands for it, and so is to be foisted upon a noble movement. If the Prohibition party does not wish to repeat the story of Sinbad the sailor, let this backload of lodgery be thrown off, and let us all pray that Mr. Finch and all Good Templars may have their eyes opened by the grace of God, to see how unworthy of them as men, as Prohibitionists, as Christians, is this secret society business.

THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR MAKE AN OFFER.

An official organ of the Knights of Labor, as quoted by the American, commenting on the opposition of the Lutheran churches to their order, as represented in the late ejection at Oshkosh, says: "There is a desperate effort being made now to force an issue between the Lutheran church and the Knights of Labor on account of the secrecy of the order. The order has no secrets; its objects and purposes are published to the world daily. The only secret it has is in the names and persons of its members, and if the church will secure the abolition of the infernal black-listing system practiced by employers, and by which a known Knight of Labor is unable to get work, we will abolish the password, and make all our meetings open."

There is much matter for reflection in these few lines. It is doubtful if any "forcing" is being done to make a quarrel except by the order, which, by making it impossible, so far as it is able, for working men to live who are not sworn to them, is attacking, not only the religious vows, but the personal rights and the peace and happiness of the family of a vast majority of the Lutherans, for they are a laboring people. Does the order flatteringly think that nothing will be done in self-defence by the church?

It is a good and honest confession, that the order "has no secrets;" for the exposition first issued in this city by E. A. Cook, and afterward published in the public press far and near, is correct, as we have good evidence. But a society whose members are unknown to the world, is a standing temptation to vicious or unwise and ambitious men, and furnishes them a power they are sure to misuse to the damage of laborer and employer alike. If Mr. Powderly can speak for his order, and assure us that the lodge tactics will be abolished if black-listing shall be stopped, we believe that employers can be persuaded to do their part honorably and readily. But will the organization meet the case fairly? We may believe so when it appears that the object of its formation was to oppose black-listing.

—Enoch Honeywell, whose obituary appears on another page, was one of the most remarkable men connected with our work. Although already of extreme age when the cause of Anti-masonry revived in 1867-8, he entered into the work with the heartiness of youth. He was not a public speaker, but he knew the value of the printing press, and that he could through it speak to the million. He, therefore, prepared one or two appeals, especially to young men, and issued them in immense quantities. Only eternity can reveal the value of this work. Mr. Honeywell prepared a paper on his life and work to be read at his funeral. This has been kindly sent us by his daughter, and will soon be given our readers, if possible, in connection with a portrait.

—Our excellent and gifted Miss Flagg writes that she hopes to be at her post in the Cynosure after March 1st. She will come out from under her cloud of sorrow like the moon "walking in brightness." Many will hail her return.

—Some friend in Illinois has written to John Daly of Wilkesbarre, Pa., for some of his publications on Romanism, but very carelessly neglected to give name or postoffice. Mr. Daly is anxious to serve the brother so soon as he has a fair chance to do so.

—M. N. Butler of Darlington, Mo., writes a strong letter on another page. Mr. Butler began without experience and has struck heavy blows on the flinty ramparts of despotism and darkness. He has chosen a good companion, and as Henry Kirk White said of himself:

"'Tis his worst foes will confess him sincere."

If his life is spared the good seed he has sown will bear a large harvest.

—The Chicago papers have worked up a sensation over the County Hospital, an institution upon which the city has spent immense sums of money, much of it in "jobs." The abuse of patients by drunken and brutal nurses, and the proof that the stealing and cheating is limitless, is abundant. Not long since the hospital was suffering from the bad administration of the Freemason who succeeded Edmond Ronayne as master of Keystone Lodge. The present warden, McGarrigle, is also, we believe, a Mason.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. Dr. Wishart of Monmouth writes with great interest of the 30th of March congress, and will, if possible, attend. He is also preparing a contribution for the Cynosure, which our readers may anticipate with pleasure.

—Pres. J. Blanchard went to Galesburg, Ill., with Mrs. Blanchard, on Friday last to attend a semi-centennial reunion of the First Church of Christ in that city, of which he was for a time pastor while President of Knox College. He was to make an address on the occasion and will remain several days.

—The lumbermen's evangelist, William F. Davis, has been so busily engaged in his work in Wisconsin that he had not learned of the change in time of the national conference from February 22 to March 30. On his way to Manistee, Mich., he came via Chicago to attend the meeting, and regrets that his Eastern engagements in March will prevent his return.

—Mr. C. B. Knight of Worcester, Mass., after spending a few weeks in the West, has decided to settle in the thriving young city of Abilene, Kansas. He returned to Chicago last week from a journey of observation, highly pleased with the great and free State of Kansas, and went immediately East to remove his family. We regret that our great city could not hold out sufficient inducement to stop Mr. Knight here, but it is the legitimate result of prohibition to attract to Kansas the best class of our citizens.

—We regret to say that Elder J. L. Barlow preached his farewell sermon in the Baptist church, Wheaton, on the Sabbath. He has accepted a call to Grundy Center, Iowa, and goes on immediately to the new field. Elder Barlow, both in his own church and in conventions and other meetings in connection with the reform, has manfully and faithfully maintained the principle of separation from secretism, as commanded in the Word of God; and has been one of the most assiduous and faithful workers. He will be greatly missed both in Wheaton and this city; but in his new field his influence will be given for the same principles. We pray that God and good men may stand by him there, as he does by the truth.

THE CONGRESS OF CHURCHES.

I am not authorized to speak for the committee of arrangements, but I am in a position to know much of the progress they are making. Nine able speakers have been already secured, and several others are yet to be heard from. The committee are diligently at work on details, and will report officially in due time, on entertainment, railway fares, etc.

No meeting on the lodge system that has come to my knowledge for years, has awakened so much interest, or called out such hearty approvals, and every mail brings increasing evidence of a large and representative gathering. Existing troubles brought on and managed by secret lodges, have compelled all classes to consider the lodge as an element of power in the political and commercial movements of our time, and created a desire to know its principles and the secret of its power. Public attention is centering in this congress as promising clear and authentic utterances upon a question vital to both state and church. Notices in the press, including half a column in one of our leading city dailies, indicate the public interest in this meeting; and the endeavors of the opposition to cast suspicion on the authority of the call and its endorsement by eminent men are significant. The movement is fairly inaugurated and in the hands of a competent and experienced committee, and it only remains for the churches and individuals who believe in it, to come forward in aid of the committee, and make this one of the grandest meetings ever held in maintenance of the church of Christ and the free institutions of our civil government. Appoint representatives; send in names of parties purposing to attend, and pray without ceasing for the Spirit's presence.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The Senate for its week's work has given its consent to Capt. Eads's Ship Railway scheme across the isthmus of Tehuantepec, and wrangled, as it always does, over the appropriations for rivers and harbors, and voted away millions by passing a number of bills for the increase of the navy. The House of Representatives has devoted most of the time to discussion of the money bills which run the Government. These invariably provoke debate and must be disposed of before the 4th of March, otherwise an extra session would be necessary. Both the Senate and House again passed the anti-polygamy bill, this time as it came amended from conference, and the measure is now ready for the President to make it a law by affixing his name.

There was an interesting debate over this question. Senator Vest said that, as a matter of course, the bill would become a law, but he could not vote for it. He was well aware what the public sentiment of the country was, but no amount of criticism would affect the performance of his duties as a legislator. In his judgment it violated a principle of the Constitution, as to the rights of property. He considered its provision as to the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company, simple, naked, bold confiscation, and nothing else. It took money subscribed by individuals, and applied it to an object (public schools) not contemplated by the corporation. The same thing might be done in regard to any other religious corporation in this country. It was no answer to say that it applied only to the Mormon church. Another feature of the bill which he could not support was the test oath imposed upon voters and persons elected to office. He knew something about test oaths. He had gone through an era of proscription on account of them.

Senator Edmunds denied that any principle of the Constitution in respect to the rights of property were violated in this bill, and as to test oaths, he said they had been carefully incorporated into the Constitution of the United States. Every Senator had been obliged to take one. The President of the United States and every officer of the United States or of a State was compelled, and always had been, to take an oath, which, in effect, was like that required in this bill.

Senator Hoar here inquired whether the bill, in prescribing an oath or qualifications for office, anywhere attacked a mere opinion separate from a criminal act. Mr. Edmunds replied that it did not in the slightest degree. The most astute and ingenious sophist could find in it no hint of such a thing.

It had been carefully excluded. Senator Ingalls asserted that he had as much respect for the sincere opinion of a Mormon as that of an Episcopalian, Catholic, Congregationalist, Methodist or Baptist. All religious belief that was honestly entertained was respectable though it might be erroneous, and condemned by one's judgment. "But," said he, "it is not the Mormon religion that is attacked in this bill, it is the practice of polygamy, which is one of the tenets of a certain proportion of that church."

The Washington social season is about over now, and the gay world is ready for Lent. Mrs. Cleveland held her last public reception on Saturday afternoon, and the crowd was the largest she has ever had. It began to gather two hours before the doors were thrown open, and ere long it extended from the White House entrance to the Avenue gate and down the sidewalk for half a square, four or five abreast. To about every fifty women there was one man, and he invariably looked as though he felt out of place.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

"NO, NOT A REPUBLIC, BUT A DEMOCRAT!"

While crossing Broadway bridge, which connects the main thoroughfare of South Boston with the center of the city proper, I overheard one of a company of young Irish-Americans, leisurely sauntering just in advance of me, exclaim in theatrical tones, as he spread forth his hands:

"This is a republic!"

With quick Irish wit, and equally dramatic effect, another retorted:

"No, not a republic, but a Democrat!"

No one, certainly no one residing in this city, will deny the appositeness of the young man's jocular contradiction. Boston, figuratively at least, may well be designated a Democrat. Look about you here, and what will you observe? Democratic government, Democratic community, Democratic influences, Democratic police, Democratic employes, Democratic rum.

Democrat! Democrat! Democrat! All is Democrat! Democrats "to the right," Democrats "to the left," Democrats "in front," Democrats hemming in, and Democrats penning in. Who will dare assert that there is no truth in the young Irishman's declaration?

It is true, the Irish-Democratic element has failed in its attempt to remove the English lion and unicorn from the roof of the old State House, relics of pre-republic days, but the municipal red ink will soon be substituted by emerald green. It is rumored to have been already. One of the leading Democratic dailies has facetiously suggested the naming of the city, cognominally, after the present mayor. How would City of O'Brien sound?

"There was a time," said a prosperous Irish merchant, his tones indicating a period inconceivably remote, "when an Irish name was enough to bring reproach upon its bearer. That day has passed away forever. Even so Celtic a name as Flanagan is considered as nice as any."

"That is so," some one will say. "What's in a name?"

Nothing in the name itself, a great deal in what the name represents. Why should any foreigner's name, a simple proper noun, bring reproach upon him? Does the name harm the object, or the object the name? No foreigner has ever been the recipient of reproach in this country because his name was simply O'Brien, or Snyder. Why has the name been stigmatized? The character of the foreigner, alone, has brought stigma upon his name. Now, what has caused the marked change in the Bostonian's opinion of a foreign cognomen? Has the name changed? has the object changed? or has the number of objects bearing the name changed—increased, and thus, because the majority rules, the name has naturally lost its alleged derogatory reputation?

The once common advertisement for help, "Americans only need apply," is almost a curiosity. Future notices of the kind will be more likely to read reversely. The value of an Irish name in enhancing one's chance in securing a situation now-a-days, is recognized by even our Mongolian visitors, as the following extract from an anecdote published in a recent number of the Youth's Companion shows. Applying for employment in a certain railroad, a Chinaman said:

"You heap likee me work?"

"What do you want to do?"

"I makee laiload. I keepee wash-house, allee same. I no care."

"What's your name?"

"My name Patrick O'Laffaty."

"Patrick O'Rafferty! Now, that is stealing a name."

"Welly goot name!"

"Oh, come, Hop Key, or whatever your name is, what did you give me an Irish name for?"

"If I no hab Patrick O'Laffaty for my name, I no ketchee contact! You see?"

The Democracy of this city is largely an importation of European offscouring-foreignism of the lowest type, which, terrible to contemplate, is rapidly spreading over all the sister States of New England, and probably it will not be long before the grand old Puritan name, which our forefathers loved so well, because of its Britanic derivation, will be usurped by that of New Ireland, or the appellation of some other European Fatherland.

The next time I meet in our streets the well-known form of the aged author of our national poem, "America," taking advantage of acquaintanceship, I may be tempted to request him to add another verse to his immortal lines, something after the substance of this:

My country, can it be,
Thy sons shall ever see
Anarchy dawn?
When cherished truths had fade,
And laws our fathers made,
By aliens lowly laid?
Let foes begone!

Ah! there may be more significance in that little utterance heard by the writer, than we imagine:

"No, not a republic, but a Democrat!"

COLORPHOBIA.

AN INCIDENT.

On Feb. 9, 1887, Rev. Lewis Johnston, an educated colored Presbyterian, minister and teacher in the public schools, and a perfect gentleman, took his friend, Geo. W. Clark, to a private boarding house in Pine Bluff, Arkansas, to call on Rev. Mr. Woodsmall, the Baptist missionary, who had that day arrived in town. The colored servant ushered them into the sitting room to await Mr. Woodsmall, as all were at supper. The servant announced the waiting gentleman; whereupon the lady of the house came in and was informed they wanted to see Mr. Woodsmall, and finding a black and white man together in her sitting room, rushed out and reported. When lo! in came the blustering furioso landlord, and the tempest at once began. For a few minutes it fairly howled. Mr. Clark coolly informed the irate animal that they had called to see Rev. Mr. Woodsmall, and not to encounter a thunder squall!

Bro. Woodsmall hurried in and tried to calm the raging billows, but the good brother's "oil" had no effect upon these troubled waters, and so the three missionaries shook the Arkansas dirt from their dirty boots and left this enraged colorphobist to his own sweet reflections! Bro. Clark had committed the unpardonable sin—had actually brought a "nigger" into this man's sitting room! The "lost cause" "dies hard!" This devilish "caste prejudice" enters and rangles like rusty iron in the souls of these poor people! Bro. Johnson went home from the above scene and wrote the following lines. G. W. C.

TO MY FRIEND, GEO. W. CLARK, AFTER THE AFFAIR ON THE NIGHT OF FEBRUARY 9TH, 1887.

Father Clark, are we yet free,
While such a spirit stalks the land?
This relic fires your soul to see
Of Slavery's hateful iron band!
How it does our peace destroy!
How its wrongs our lives annoy!
How it bows us into dust!
And stirs our souls with deep disgust!
From public places we're ejected:
Even in churches not respected,
By those who shout and praise the Lord!
Out on such a rebel horde!
Are we free while chains are clanking,
Though our limbs they do not press!
Shall we pause and God be thanking
Till we every wrong redress!
In our affliction Thou hast woe;
In wronging us they caused Thee grief;
Care they if bitter tears do flow;
Or do such tears afford relief!
Gray hairs by them are not respected,
Nor do they reverence men of God:
Charity is by them neglected,
Truth is trampled in the sod.
Are we faithful to our trust,
Are we waitall for the truth!
Right can triumph and right must.
Write thou and sing as in thy youth
You helped to slavery overthrow,
You joined in the victorious shout:
Give it now a final blow
Ere your lamp of life goes out.

THE HOME.

ALL THINGS.

"All things work together for good to them that love God."—Rom. 8:28.

Sometimes, dear Lord, my doubting heart,
Can scarce take in this world divine;
When far from thee my feet depart,
Or when I hopelessly repine.

When loving friend is laid below;
The soft brown mould far out of sight;
When my poor heart is filled with woe,
And life's bright day is turned to night.

Or worse, estranged from some loved friend,
Who ne'er before had stood aloof,
Whom fain we'd trust unto the end,
But who had fallen when put to proof.

Then, Lord, ah then, our hearts rebel,
And bitter, burning tears fast flow;
Life's sullen surges deeper swell,
And bitterness is crowned with woe.

The disappointment that will come,
The cares and worries of each day—
Are these but leading to one home?
Is this the path—the only way?

But there are times, dear Lord of mine,
When my soul grasps the promise sweet;
Accepts this blessed Word of thine,
And humbly lies at thy dear feet.

Willing to take from thy wise hand
Whatever thou mayest choose to give;
Lowly to serve, or to command;
To rest in death or weary life!

Could we but this sweet truth receive,
Our lives would flow in endless peace;
O help us, Lord, then to believe,
Bid our dark doubts forever cease.

Within my heart I hear a voice
That says, "Thy pain, thy loss and strife,
Will make thee all the more rejoice
When thou shalt enter into life."

At last my restless heart is stilled;
Whatever comes is for the best;
It could not come unless God willed,
And so I leave to him the rest.

—Mary G. Woodhull in The Presbyterian.

THE CONDEMNED SOLDIER.

During the Franco-German war, a clergyman was traveling abroad, and with him an old German, who devoted his life to going about and preaching the Gospel. One day, being near the outposts of the German army, they met several soldiers leading a man, manacled and despairing, away to execution. They ventured to ask the escort for what crime the man was condemned. "For robbing the dead," answered the soldier briefly. "And by our laws he is punished with death."

"Is he prepared to die?" asked the good clergyman pityingly.

"We do not know," they replied; but one of them, the leader of the party, turned to the clergyman and said: "You, sir, seem to be a minister of the Gospel; you may speak to yonder poor man, if you wish, of the hereafter."

The clergyman, glad of the opportunity, went and spoke solemnly to the unhappy prisoner; but he only shook his head and said:

"No, I am not ready to die, but that does not trouble me. My sorrow, and these tears, are for my wife and little children, left destitute and heart-broken; my thoughts are all of them; trouble me with naught else!"

As he continued in this strain, the old German, who had been attentively listening, stepped forward.

"My friend," he said, "I weep for you. I have no child—no wife. My heart was long ago made one with God, and death to me has no terror; it is only a welcome guest. I will die instead of you. I have naught to lose, but, oh, so much to gain! I will give you my life."

All around stood amazed at this strange proposal; but, as the officer in command saw that the German really was in earnest, he said: "I have no power to accept your offer; but let us return to the camp, and tell this strange circumstance to the general."

So they turned and went, the German walking beside the poor manacled prisoner, trying to comfort him, telling him of Jesus. The general, too, seemed strangely moved, and asked the German if he was really sincere in his offer.

"Certainly," answered the old man; "I tell you death is no dread to me; I am Christ's, and I shall only go to him; I will gladly lay down my life as a ransom for this poor man's. Surely, the law cannot require two to die. My life will suffice."

The general, still more astonished, referred the matter to the Crown Prince, who thought long over it. At last he said, "The law does not admit of your being accepted for him; but I can do one thing, I can pardon, and I give you this man's life instead of taking yours."

I leave you to imagine the sequel, and the prisoner's gratitude to his deliverer, while I would ask you to turn from this true story to an older one—the story of Him who meets the poor manacled sinner going forth to die, and who says in love and pity, "I will lay down my life for thee!" His was not only an offer but a bitter though blessed reality.

In Leviticus 1:4, when the sinner, conscious of his deserved death, brought a lamb's life and blood, it was accepted of God, instead of his own. But Christ, the Lamb of God, once and forever took away sin by the sacrifice of himself. Dear reader, if you believe not in Jesus, you are "condemned already" (John 3:18), and are only waiting for the execution of the sentence. Even now, on your way towards destruction, fast bound by sin, Jesus meets you and says, "I gave my life for you;" for "there is none other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved."—The Gleaner.

CHRISTIANITY AND SCIENTIFIC MEN.

I have been asked to give "A word of testimony from a scientific man." I do not know that the scientific men have been slow in their testimony for Christ altogether. To begin when Christ was in Bethlehem. The first who came to him were poor peasants; but the next were the scientific men of the age, traveling from afar, who had seen the star in the East. Not the priests of Jerusalem, not the leading politicians, but astronomers—wise men, who came bringing gold, frankincense, and myrrh. That was only the commencement of a long line of scientific men who have brought their homage to Christ in one way or another. I will not go through the whole line; it would be too long and complicated. There was not a great number that we should call scientific men in the early ages of the Church; but those that were generally influenced the current of Christianity to a considerable extent, though not always advantageously. Coming to later ages we find such men as Copernicus, Tycho Brahe, and Kepler, who were men of a Christian spirit, and ready to ascribe to God all their faculties and to give praise to him. Turning to our own country we find such men (I will only speak of those of the first rank) as Lord Bacon. I do not say that he was a godly man in every way, but we know not only that he was a believer in the Bible, but that he wrote as a Christian, and that his writings contain not only the highest philosophy, but a good deal of religious advice. Well, we go on and find Newton. No higher name could we mention—a name great in many departments of science, the greatest, perhaps; and at the same time, a devout Christian who was not ashamed to write religious works. I might proceed to such men as Robert Boyle, the "father of chemistry," or Cuvier, one of the greatest anatomists. Then again, there is Michael Faraday, a man who was a humble Christian, and who in various quiet ways endeavored to do acts of Christian kindness. And may I mention Herschell, Sir David Brewster, and the late Clark Maxwell, all men well known as Christians by their words and by their writings?

If you ask whose name stands the highest in physical science among living men, some will probably answer, Professor Stokes of Cambridge, and others, Sir William Thomson of Glasgow—both believers in Christianity. Some of you may have read Professor Stokes's paper at the recent Church Congress.

If we turn to the biological side of science, and ask which is the highest name, we shall probably be reminded of the veteran Richard Owen, whose contributions to the study of natural theology are well known. Some time ago, at the anniversary of the Royal Society, the four English savants to whom medals were distributed were Professor Flower, Captain Abney, Professor Cayley, and Lord Raleigh, no slight proof that among those who are taking a high place in science are to be found good disciples of Christ.

Let us look abroad to the French Academy; M. Dumas, the perpetual secretary, and M. Wurtz, the late president, are both personally known to me as Christian men, though belonging to different churches. These I have mentioned are leading men. It is difficult for me to remember a single man of the first rank in science who is opposed to Christianity, unless that charge can be truthfully brought against my friend, Professor Huxley. I could find several in the second or third ranks; but alongside of these could be found many who are believers. That has been the case in time past, and it is so at the present time.—Dr. J. H. Gladstone, F. R. S.

BUDDHISM AND THE VEDA.

The great oriental scholar, Monier Williams, Boden Professor of Sanscrit in Oxford University, while presiding over the Bible Society meeting at Oxford, gave certain reasons why he was sure that our own Bible was the only book of God. Contrasting it with other books he declared that Christians had no reason to shrink from a comparison with other religious systems, and said:

"To translate the Veda, or the Koran into other languages the Hindoos and the Mohammedans consider simply desecration. It is the sound and intonation of the sacred Sanscrit and of the sacred Arabic, which is of primary importance and primary efficacy; the sense is merely secondary. Millions and millions who know nothing of Sanscrit are obliged to hear and repeat the Veda in Sanscrit, and millions who are wholly ignorant of Arabic are obliged to hear and repeat the Koran in Arabic. Think of what would happen if no Christian in any part of the world were allowed to hear, read or repeat his Bible except in Hebrew or Greek!"

Further, he found no such revelation of our nature and needs in the Veda as in the Bible. Again, Sanctify this life and all its trials, says our Bible; Get rid of the troubles of life, says the Veda. Sanctify the body, says our Bible; Get rid of the body, says the Veda. Sanctify your daily work, says our Bible; Get rid of all action, says the Veda. Rest not on any merits of your own, says our Bible; Rest on your own merits alone, says the Veda. Get rid of sin, says our Bible; Get rid of misery, says the Veda. Moreover, the historical element is wholly wanting both in the Veda and the Koran. Then note one other very remarkable feature. Progressive development marks our Bible. The light of Revelation is gradually unfolded till the perfect illumination of the Epistles and the Revelation of St John is reached. The very reverse is the case in the Veda and the Koran. In these the earliest utterances contain the greatest light, the later become darker and darker. After a life-long study of the religious books of the Hindoos, Professor Williams said he felt compelled to express publicly his opinion of them. They begin with much promise amid scintillations of truth and light and occasional sublime thoughts from the source of all truth and light, but end in sad corruptions and lamentable impurities.—Sel.

KNOCKING.

BY MISS E. R. HOAR.

We have believed.
We've asked of Thee and have received;
We've sought of Thee and have found,
And still, though humbled to the ground,
We come for more, we come for more;
We're knocking at a bolted door.

We dare but give
One backward look, that only sees
The way was traveled on the knees,
And kneeling still our spirits bow,
For we are knocking, knocking now
And coming, coming, coming, Thou.

Upon the door
We lean our heads; Thy footfalls catch:
We feel Thy hand upon the latch.
So near to us sure Thou must know
We're knocking still, though faint and low:
So near to us sure Thou must know.

We lift our heads
In little strength: look up: receive:
Still keep Thy patience and believe.
We know the Voice we've heard before,
"I set for thee an open door
And no man shutteth evermore."

A CURE FOR WEARINESS.

The world is full of tired people; merchants tired of business; farmers tired of raising crops; mechanics tired of building houses; housekeepers tired of preparing food; operatives tired of the rushing wheels. Pass along the road or street and see how very tired three-fourths of the people look. How shall they get rested? Some say, "By fewer hours of work!" But some of them have no work at all. Others might prescribe easy sofas, and more arm-chairs and soft beds. But some of the people who have the weariest look, have plenty of good furniture and luxurious upholstery. Now we offer a pillow not curtained with goblin tapestry nor stuffed with the down of angels' wings; but a man who puts his head on it gets rid of his cares and anxieties. It is a pillow stuffed with promises. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest." "Cast thy burden on the Lord and he will sustain thee." We have friends who, because they cannot sleep well, put under their head at night a pillow of hops; but they have never tried the better pillow filled with the myrrh and frankincense from the Lord's garden. Men and women tired out with the world, try it.—Christian at Work.

BETTER WHISTLE THAN WHINE.

As I was taking a walk, I noticed two little boys on their way to school. The small one stumbled and fell, and though not very much hurt, he began to whine in a babyish way. The older boy took his hand in a kind, fatherly way, and said, "O never mind, Jimmy; don't whine. It is a great deal better to whistle," and he began in the merriest way a cheerful boy whistle. Jimmy tried to join the whistle.

"I can't whistle as nice as you, Charlie," said he; "my lips don't pucker up good."

"O that is because you have not got all the whine out yet," said Charlie; "but you try a minute, and the whistle will drive the whine away."

So he did, and the last I saw or heard of the little fellows, they were whistling away as earnestly as though that was the chief end of life.—Early Dawn.

HE KNEW THE BOY.

Once upon a time there was a schoolmaster who had been placed over a new school. His pride was aroused, and he wanted to make that just the best school that ever was. He pondered over it a good while, and then he concluded that the best way to get at his object was to arouse a spirit of self-respect and self-improvement in the pupils. So one day he talked to them quite earnestly, and finally he said, thinking he made the subject very plain to them all: "Now, boys, I believe there's just one way to do this thing. If each one of you will make up his mind to mend one boy of his faults, the whole school will be improved in a very short time."

"All right, sir," spoke up little Jimmy Eaton, who had been very much interested in the discussion, "I'll mend Jack Wyeth." The whole school laughed aloud, for it seemed funny that the only boy who had not understood what the teacher meant was the one to be so eager to answer.

But, boys, I wonder how many of you, if your name had been Jimmy Eaton, would have made up your mind to mend Jimmy Eaton instead of Jack Wyeth? It is so easy to try to mend other people's faults instead of our own. If you see faults in your schoolmates, don't talk about it or them, but just say to yourself, "That looks pretty bad in Jack. I wonder if I do anything like that?" If on self-examination you find that you do, just struggle your best to mend it. Or if you find you haven't that particular fault, pick out some other from your own, and the chances are ten to one that by the time you have corrected yours, he will have corrected his, especially if he notices you trying to break yourself of the habit, whatever it may be.—Golden Days.

ADVANTAGES OF EARLY POVERTY.

It is far from being always a disadvantage to young men to commence life in poverty. In fact the worst thing that can happen to a young man at college is to have a father or mother so injudicious as to keep him amply supplied with pocket money. It is fatal to studious habits, and, in the end, generally fatal to good morals. This is equally the case with a young man in business, who is made to feel that to him "salary is no object"—that a wealthy father's purse is always open to his most extravagant demands. Nothing develops a young man like fighting his own way in the world. Some spur of necessity; some bracing of adverse surroundings is needful to most men, if they are to put forth their whole power. The rich man's heir, nursed and petted in infancy, and shielded from battling with the world, never fairly learns to stand erect and walk alone. If by any chance he is stripped of his inherited wealth and has to learn to take and give hard knocks like others, he nearly always goes under in the struggle—at any rate, he seldom regains by his own efforts the fortune he has lost. Nearly all the wealthy and successful men of this country are poor men's sons. Nearly all of the scholars, poets, orators, statesmen, are poor men's sons. Wealth has its advantages, it is true, but, after all, the son of a rich man begins life with odds against him. The poor man's son has all the odds in his favor. He must work or starve. He has nothing to lose and everything to gain. The rich man's son has already social position, and everything that money can give him. There is much less to strive for, and infinitely less inducement to strive.

TEMPERANCE.

"NUMBER 25."

"Number 25!"

"Bring on number 25!"

"The court is waiting for number 25!"

There was a little hanging back on the part of the usual prompt official, but in a moment more a tall, fine-looking woman strode defiantly up, and, placing herself before the judge, awaited the usual questioning.

There was something so piteously desperate in the prisoner's appearance, and her great hunted eyes had a look of such anguish in their fierce depths, that the judge, accustomed to all kinds of sad sights and sounds, yet hesitated a moment before asking, with unwonted gentleness:

"What is your name, my woman, and where were you born?"

"Me name is Aleen Byrne, yer honor, an' I were born in Aberdeen, off the Scottish coastland."

"And you are charged with striking a man?"

"I am, yer honor, an' I ken weel I stricht the mon."

"And you meant to?"

"I did, indeed, yer honor. I only wish I might a kilt him!"

"That would hardly have been for your good, Aleen."

"He's kilt me, yer honor."

The woman spoke with a low, impassioned wail, which caused respectful silence even in the lower court, where touching tones were often unheeded.

"McGinnis testifies that he never laid a hand on you," returned the judge.

"He stabbed me to the heart, yer honor, an' the mon kens it well!"

"Stabbed you? Suppose you tell us about it."

"I will, an' me voice will sarve me. Ye might no ken wha' it is, yer honor, to hev one bonnie laddie, an' none else ye could yer ain. I left the gude father o' me lad a-sleepin' in the kirkyard when I brought me wee sonnie to this land. They say this be a countrie flowin' wi' milk an' honey, but oh, yer honor, it flows wi' milk an' honey for some, an' for others, I mind me, it flows wi' a very sea o' poison."

"For mony a year after I reacht these shores I toiled in sun an' shade, but wha' greeted mesel' for a' the toil so long as me winsome Robbie were thrivin' an' gettin' a muckle o' learnin' fra' his books! He grewed so fine an' tall that soon he were ta'en to a gentleman's store to help wi' the errands an' to mind the counter betimes. Then the mon McGinnis set his evil eye on the lad. I was forced to pass his den on me way to 'an fra' the bread store, an' he minded 't was mesel' hated the uncanny look o' the place. An' one morn as I paset by, he said I needn't be so gran' aboot me b'y, he were no above ta'en a sup o' the liquor wi' the rest of an e'en. I begged me childt for the love o' God to let the stoof alane. Me Robbie doin' no ill, an' promised to bide by me will an' wishes, but the mon McGinnis watchet o' night when't were could an' stormin', an' he gave the lad many a cup o' his dretful drinkies, to warm him, he would say. I got upon my knees to mein childt, an' prayed him to pass the place no more, but to gang hame by some ither road. Then I went mesel' to the mon wi'out a soul in his body, an' p'raps ye ken, yer honor, a mither would beg an' pray for the bone o' her bone an' the flesh o' her flesh. But he laughet in my face, an' I runned from his sight afore I did him ill."

"Las' night, yer honor, the noise at me door frightenet me; I runned wi' all me might to see wha' were the trouble, an' me Robbie swayet into the room an' fell at me feet—he were drunk, yer honor! Then McGinnis pokes his face in at me door, an' asket, 'Wha' think ye now, Mistress Byrne?' Did I mean to strike the mon, yer honor? An' could I, I'd a-struck the breath fra' his body! Ye'd better keep me wi' lock an' key the nicht till me gloom dies out; but, oh, jedge, jedgel there's naught to kill the gnawin' in me heart, an' wisht mesel' an' me lad were in the kirkyard aside the gude father!"

The woman at the bar extended a clenched hand as she added with bitter vehemence:

"They telled me, an' I could prove the mon sold liquor to the bairn under age, the law could stoop him. It's mesel' wud like to see the law stoop one o' the mis'rable rum-sellers o' the land! I tell ye, jedge, there's naught but God's gruesome vengeance can stoop his ilk, an' when that falls it'll crush ye all! It's a' weel enough to 'rest the mither as she strikes the mon as ruins her sin childt, but wait ye, till the Lord Almighty strikes—aye—wait ye for that, an' ye dare!"

As the threatening voice stilled, the woman was pronounced discharged, and after his re-appearance in court, McGinnis was lodged in the county jail on a charge of having wilfully sold or given intoxicating drink to a minor. His comrades declared the evidence on which he was convicted to have been illegally slight and uncertain. But the clerk of the court was heard to remark that he believed from his soul the judge was afraid to disregard the old witch's warning, and dare not wait for the Lord Almighty to strike back with gruesome vengeance at them all. Then the clerk added:

"But she did have a knell of fiery doom, did that No. 25!"—Christian at Work.

LOCAL WORK IN MASSACHUSETTS.

At Whately, too, says a correspondent of the Springfield Republican, there is a lively waking up on this issue, and some of the staid old farmers don't propose to be dictated in their voting by the rum power any longer. A local preacher, a few nights ago, gave some startling statistics on the drinking habits of Whately people, which have set the villagers to thinking, and many have been busy with pencils trying to see just how the town was benefited by so much guzzling. During 1886, not including beer or cider, there were drunk in Whately of whisky, rum and such stuff, over 25,000 drinks or glasses,—reckoning but five glasses to the pint, an expenditure of $2,500 at ten cents a glass; of beer, over 20,000 drinks, or about 46 to every man, woman and child in the town during the year, at five cents a glass, making $1,000; of cider 450 barrels, over 20,000 gallons, or equal to 2,000 gallons of alcohol; or counting the cider at the price of vinegar, 15 cents a gallon, and $3,000 more would be added, making a total of $6,500 in that little town, and this is a very low estimate. Cider, which is drunk so freely in the homes of country people, is the curse of some of these rural communities. Consisting of rotten apples, worms, boot dressing and old straw, cider is drunk because of the alcohol in it. Evaporate the alcohol from the cider by boiling for a short time in an open vessel, and how many of the grangers would drink the liquid? It is a low estimate which holds that one-half of the drunkards of this county began on cider. Other towns are alive on this vital topic, and not more than two towns in the whole county will vote in favor of license at the approaching annual meetings, judging from the practical way in which friends of this needed reform have gone to work.

A STRONG VOTE FOR PROHIBITION.

Sir Charles Tupper, Canadian Finance Minister, and who, it is generally supposed, will succeed Sir John A. Macdonald as leader of the Liberal-conservative Party, has just made a very important declaration on the prohibition question. He is opposed, among others, by a third-party prohibition candidate, notwithstanding his life-long record as a temperance man. In his speech he pointed out that he had carried through Parliament a law giving absolute prohibition in the Northwest Territories, covering an area of 2,500,000 square miles; that he had made total abstinence compulsory among employes on the government railways all over Canada, and that to-day he regarded prohibition as the most vital question before the people. He declared that if the resignation of his position as financial minister and by going to the opposition to the government he could secure legislation that would prevent the manufacture, importation, sale, and use of intoxicating liquor he would not hesitate one moment about doing it. Sir Charles is opposed to a third-party prohibition candidate.

THE WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE CRUSADE.—For weary, despairing years they have waited to see the reform that should protect them from further harm. The politicians have played them false; the officers of the law are unfaithful; the government revenue thrives on the thriftiness of their curse; multitudes of the clergy are not only apathetic in their pulpits, but self-indulgent in their social habits; newspapers do not help, but rather hinder them; the liquor interest armed with the money that should have brought them prosperity, organizes against them; and losing all faith in men, what can they do? There is but one direction in which they can look, and that is upward!..... We bow to this movement with reverence. We say to the glorious women engaged in this marvelous crusade, "May God help and prosper you, and give you the desire of your hearts in the fruit of your efforts."—J. G. Holland.

LITERATURE.

NATURAL LAW IN THE SPIRITUAL WORLD. By Henry Drummond, F. R. S. E. Pp. 300. Price 40c. John B. Alden, New York.

This is the title of a work by one of the professors in Edinburgh University. He is a young or middle aged man, a scientist by profession, and a wide awake Christian. The book is the result of his labors as a Bible teacher and an instructor in the University. He says that he found his Sabbath instructions taking on more and more the form of scientific statements, and that he was finally led to ask whether or not it were true that the laws of the natural and spiritual world were identical. He concluded that the regulations for the two worlds were the same, and hence his title, NATURAL LAW IN THE SPIRITUAL WORLD. The work is in reality Butler's "Analogy" brought down to date, and is a most convincing and helpful book. The chapters on Biogenesis, Mortification, Degradation and Classification are perhaps not more helpful than others, but are certainly very inspiring. The similarity between the laws of the two worlds is put in a most startling and realistic way. As the mineral cannot become vegetable except some vegetable life reach down and transmute it, so the natural man can never become the spiritual man unless he be born from above. As the organ unused wastes away and dies, so the spiritual faculties of man undeveloped will diminish until their power is gone and the man is spiritually blind, deaf, crippled, dead. As the excessive growth of plants must be restrained, limited, so men must mortify their members which are upon the earth. As the crystal may be as beautiful as the living plant or animal but still is dead, so the mere moralist may be outwardly as beautiful as the Christian, but the one has life and the other is dead.

These are but hints as to the mode of treatment, which is thought-provoking and helpful throughout. The author is criticised as fatalistic in his tendencies. If this is true, it did not so appear to us. The grand characteristic of the work seems to be its absolute truth to nature and revelation. It costs but a trifle and is worth many times as much to the thoughtful reader.

The first article of Scribner's Magazine for March, "The Stability of the Earth," by Prof. N. S. Shaler, is a full comprehensive discussion of the whole subject of earthquakes and kindred phenomena. Professor Shaler writes in a clear and interesting manner of their causes, distribution and effects, and pays particular attention to the probability of severe shocks occurring in this country, and to the best method of preparing for and of avoiding their dangers. The illustrations, which are very numerous, are mainly taken from photographs which have been collected by Professor Shaler, and cover a very wide area. They include several interesting views of the effects of the recent Charleston earthquakes. The third installment of ex-Minister Washburne's "Reminiscences of the Siege and Commune of Paris" describes the establishment of the Commune, and many of the exciting and terrible incidents that occurred during its reign. The value of the article is greatly increased by the descriptions of prominent leaders of both parties. The frontispiece is a strong and dignified portrait of M. Thiers, engraved from the painting by Healy, which has not before been reproduced.

Mr. Charles F. Benjamin, who was formerly a clerk in the War Department, under Edwin M. Stanton, will contribute to the March Century his personal recollections of the Secretary, with much anecdote setting forth his characteristics, his relations with Lincoln and others, etc. A frontispiece portrait of Stanton will be given.

A CARD OF THANKS.

COLUMBUS, Miss., Feb. 17, 1887.

Our hearty thanks are returned to Miss E. E. Flagg, the Misses Eastman and other friends in and around Boston, Wellesley and Natick, Mass., for a barrel and box of missionary supplies, valued at $75.00. Friends, your offering is very highly appreciated. It has strengthened our hands in God, and we are so thankful that we can say that the dear Lord does not forget us while we struggle through many difficulties to spread the Gospel and give warning against "the unfruitful works of darkness." Mr. Tapley suffers often intensely with pain in one of his eyes. Christian friends, will you not pray for God's blessing upon the work and workers here? Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he send more laborers into his harvest.

M. A. F. TAPLEY.

We fully agree with a correspondent who refers to an recent article in this paper in regard to the treatment of secretists, that the best way to bear testimony against the lodge, so far as funerals are concerned, is to have nothing to do with such as are in charge of these fraternities. That is a more effective testimony than it would be to go and preach a sermon at the house and then leave. And that would also be more in harmony with our principles. If the lodge-priest is to officiate at the funeral, what can the minister of Christ have to do there? If the minister of Christ is to officiate, what can the lodge-priest have to do there? At a funeral, where the services of the Christian church are deemed insufficient, but the rites of some other religion are desired, a Christian minister has no calling and should perform no function. His testimony against lodgery should be unmistakable in acts as well as in words. —Lutheran Standard.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Dr. George F. Pentecost, in resuming his evangelistic work, has chosen Norwich, N. Y., as the place in which to begin the renewal of his old work. He will then go to Cleveland.

—The evangelist, Munhall, whose labors have been so manifestly blessed in Dr. Talmage's church, has been engaged by Dr. Gifford of the Second Baptist church, Boston, during March. Dr. Gifford writes to the committee of the conference of March 30th, this city, that this arrangement will prevent his attendance here.

—Rev. Dr. Meredith of Boston, the popular Bible-class instructor of Tremont Temple, Boston, has been called by the Tompkins Avenue church, Brooklyn, to succeed Dr. Pentecost.

—The Evangelist Needham is holding meetings in Philadelphia, where a general movement among all the denominations has been made in the way of a house-to-house canvass, inviting the people to the churches to hear the Gospel.

—Dr. Pentecost comes to Cleveland the 9th of March for a month's work in the center of the city in connection with seven of the churches. The present plan is to hold meetings in the several churches, one week in one then change to another, and so go from church to church.

—Rev. Dr. Wishard, the evangelist of Kentucky, has been holding revival meetings in Utah among the Mormons, for three months, and his labors have been blessed to the conversion of many souls. He is now back in Kentucky hard at work among the churches of that State.

—Bro. A. J. Phillips of Maquoketa, Iowa, gives this testimony: "The Salvation Army has, in the last two years of its work in Maquoketa, done more towards saving people from hell than all of the churches here have done for the last ten years."

—Dr. Munhall, the evangelist, has had, perhaps, the greatest work of his life in Talmage's church in Brooklyn, N. Y. Over 2,000 persons have been in the inquiry meetings seeking Christ. Wonderful success seems to go with this brother wherever he goes. May God continually bless him as he is faithful to proclaim the whole Gospel.

—The Cincinnati Y. M. C. A. has for several years occupied an old hotel at the corner of Sixth and Elm streets. It is now so unsuitable for their purpose that its officers are proposing to erect a building adapted to their requirements at a cost of $100,000.

—At the recent conference of the Mennonite Brethren at Reading, Pa., their preachers were prohibited from riding on railroads on Sunday. One minister walks eighteen miles every Sunday, going to and returning from his preaching appointment, nine miles from his home.

—The Lutheran Observer states that the Philological Society of Berlin favors retaining Luther's German version of the Bible for the German people in preference, we suppose, to a revised version.

—Mr. Moody Stuart, of Edinburgh, Scotland, will complete fifty years' ministry in June next, and Drs. Horatius Bonar and Macdonald, of North Leith, with Mr. Brown of Dean church, will also have their jubilee celebration in 1887.

—The Arkansas Legislature has passed a bill repealing the law punishing for engaging in secular pursuits on Sunday those who religiously observe one day each week as Sabbath. Under the existing law there have been numerous prosecutions of Second Adventists for working on Sunday.

—The labors of Mr. Ira D. Sankey and Rev. W. W. Clark, of Staten Island, at Albany, have resulted in rapidly-increasing interest. Their closing services at the First Reformed church were crowded.

—At a Philadelphia Conference of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod in that city, the use of fermented wine at the sacrament was discussed. The conference, while approving of the use of unfermented wine, decided that the fermented article is preferable, except in cases where it is likely to stimulate thirst for liquor.

—At the communion services on Sabbath morning, January 16, eighty-five new members were received into the First Presbyterian church of Los Angeles, California. The recent growth of this church has been phenomenal, a total of 316 having been added to its membership since the Rev. Mr. Chichester became pastor fourteen months ago. Its week-day meetings are crowded to overflowing, while its Sunday congregations occupy every seat in the recently enlarged auditorium, which will accommodate one thousand persons.

—It is conceded that 1886 was more than ordinarily a fruitful year in a spiritual sense in Scotland, and so strongly has this been felt, in the Free church especially, that a late Sunday was observed as a day of thanksgiving in all its congregations.

—Dr. Kerr, Rev. Mr. Fulton and wife and Miss Dr. Fulton, Presbyterian missionaries, have succeeded in renting and occupying a house in the city of Kwei Ping, some four hundred miles west of Canton, in the Province of Kwang Si. Hitherto all attempts to secure either chapels or places of residence in this province have failed. The people have been most bitterly hostile to all foreigners, and especially to Christian missionaries.

—The name of H. L. Hastings is well known to our readers, as he himself is well beloved for his work in the Gospel. He is now at work beyond the ocean in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, especially in the anti-indefel conflict. His work is telling. He's being heard. The Monthly Review for January, the organ of the Y. M. C. A., brings word that Elder Hastings lectured on "The Inspiration of the Bible" in Exeter Hall, London, on Dec. 13. He began a three weeks' lecture tour in Ireland on the 16th of January, 1887. Pray the Lord to anoint him with unusual power.—Bible Banner.

—An incident which occurred at Canton illustrates the power of the Gospel to convert men under circumstances most unfavorable to such a result. In September, 1884, six Chinese Christians were cast into prison simply because they were Christians. A man in the prison heard from them something of the Gospel, though that Gospel had brought these men to prison. The man became interested in it. When he got out of the prison, he went to the chapel to hear more about the way of salvation; and, by the Spirit of God, he was led to accept of Jesus as his Saviour, and at the last communion he was received into the church on the profession of his faith in Christ.

—Among our improvements in missionary management will be open sessions and an independent press. The ordinary business of the Executive Committee should be transacted in public, and our missionary publications should be in the charge of editors who are not officials. Our present method is as if Congress sat always with closed doors, and our newspapers were edited by the clerks of the Houses. A glance at the comparison is enough to show us that we have not yet quite reached the point where we serve our Lord as intelligently as we serve our country.—Rev. E. W. Hicks in Missionary Visitor.

THE TESTIMONY OF THE DUNKERS.

The principles of the Brethren church (Dunkers) are set forth in a tract by Daniel Vaniman of Virde, Illinois, of which the following is a portion:

SECRET SOCIETIES.

"The Brethren do not join secret, oath-bound societies. 1. Because in so doing they would violate the law of God to begin with, in taking an oath. Jesus says, 'Swear not at all, neither by heaven, for it is God's throne, neither by the earth, for it is his footstool, neither by Jerusalem, for it is the City of the Great King; neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black; but let your communication be yea, yea, nay, nay, for whatsoever is more than these, cometh of evil.' James says, 'Above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath; but let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay, lest ye fall into condemnation.'"

"2. Because the Bible being a perfect law, contains every obligation required; therefore, whatever other obligations the secret order enjoins upon the Christian, are necessarily human, schismatical and dangerous, for we may neither add to, nor diminish from the Bible.

"3. Because we have already pledged our fidelity to Christ's law, which embraces the whole duty of man; and it is, therefore, impossible for us to pledge our fidelity to another institution differing from the church of Christ, and enjoining duties not found in the Bible, and maintain our fidelity to both.

"4. Because, whatever time or money is spent by the Christian to do good, through the lodge, is credited to this worldly institution, instead of the church. 'Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers.'"

LODGE NOTES.

The Knights of Industry, which organized to take the place of the Knights of Labor, is virtually dead.

The "Non-Swearing Knights" is an organization started within the Knights of Labor in Chicago to discourage the habit of profanity.

The Journal of United Labor, heretofore the organ of the Knights of Labor, and obtainable only by assemblies, is now a public newspaper and may be subscribed for by any one.

Can any one show any constitutional authority for summarily ejecting good union men from assemblies of the Knights of Labor and from lucrative employment for the crime of belonging to the Cigarmakers' Union? In most organizations and under most governments even criminals are entitled to the formality of a trial, and an executive order, even though backed up by a resolution of the General Assembly, should not override the constitution and laws.—Ex.

The railway managers have informed the committee of arrangements for the G. A. R. National Encampment, to be held at St. Louis next September, that the interstate commerce bill will prevent the granting of reduced rates. Senator Cullom writes that the bill is not prohibitory in cases of this kind.

The Medina (N. Y.) Manufacturing company, which has always maintained a rule to employ no union men, discharged all those found to be connected with the Knights of Labor this morning. The lockout affects fifty men. There is no trouble regarding wages. Trouble is anticipated in another shop on account of the discharge of a union man.

In the case of Quinn, McKenna, and other leaders of the 'Longshoremen's Association at New York, held at the suit of the Old Dominion Company for $20,000 each, arising out of the recent strike and boycott, Judge Brown, in the United States Circuit Court, decided Friday that the company had legal cause for action and refused to discharge the defendants.

The Ancient Order of United Workmen of Chicago held a memorial meeting Friday at Central Music Hall, this city, in honor of the founder of the order, J. J. Upchurch. The address was delivered by John D. Vincelli, D. D., of St. Louis, a leading Mason of Missouri.

The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. Co. has published a Pronouncing Dictionary containing 320 pages, 32,000 words and 670 engravings. It teaches everybody how to pronounce correctly. Send sixteen cents in stamps to Paul Morton, G. P. and T. A., C. B. & Q. R. R., Chicago, Ill., and get a copy of the Dictionary—the cheapest book issued.

FARM AND GARDEN.

RAISING LARGE POTATOES.

A superb lot of potatoes which was lately exhibited at a French exposition, and considered worth a gold medal, attracted a great deal of attention. The cultivator gave the following as the method of increasing the size of the tuber: When the young stems have attained about four inches in height all of them excepting two of the central ones are cut away, and these two only allowed to grow. By means of this simple precaution the tubers become much larger than they are in ordinary cultivation.—Vick's Magazine.

EARLY POTATOES.

It pays to plant early potatoes quite close, as they do not usually make rank vines; and I would recommend the rows to be two and a half feet apart and the pieces of seed one foot in the row; this gives 17,424 hills to the acre; and a half pound of potatoes to each hill will give a yield of 145 bushels to the acre. It will pay to make the land very rich for early potatoes, because a second full crop can always be grown profitably on the land the same year, among which I name winter squashes, sweet corn, late cabbage, celery, turnips and tomatoes. I have known a truck farmer, by getting his potatoes early into market, to make $1 per square rod from a crop of several sorts; and even half this will pay for a large outlay for manure and labor, especially when we take into consideration the fact that much of the manure will be available for succeeding crops.—The Tribune.

GRASS INSTEAD OF WEEDS ALONG HIGHWAYS.

Some weeds along the highways are showy and beautiful when in blossom, like the Golden Rod and many asters, willow herb, and even Ox-eye daisies, and the humble Dandelion; but to the farmer's eye, nothing is so beautiful as grass. If all the space between the roadway and the fence on both sides along cultivated fields and fenced land could be mowed off close three times a year for a year or two there are comparatively few roads in districts where there is tolerably good soil, along which a good sward would not take the place of the tangle of briars, birches, alders, and weeds, which now are not only unsightly, but upon which weed seeds are produced in countless millions, and diffuse themselves over the adjacent land. After a year or two, a good crop of hay can be cut in June, and possibly again in August or September, and with a little pains to uproot weeds which are not killed by the mowing, the land will prove productive, and an ornament to the farm.—American Agriculturist.

A MILD VIEW OF THE ENGLISH SPARROW.—Ornithology shows few, if any, birds that are either strictly graminivorous or strictly insectivorous. Take, for instance, the common yellow bird, one of the worst depredators on seeds in the summer time, feeds wholly on small insects in the early part of the season. The various kinds of aphids are especially welcome to the yellow bird in spring time. The English sparrow is no exception. It will eat anything whatever that is most conveniently at hand. It does not propose to starve when there are few insects to be had, and it rejoices on a flesh diet when the seeds are scarce. It has been of immense use in some towns. American birds are too shy. They avoid close contact with humanity. The English sparrow remains among men. This is its only advantage. It will aid in clearing out insects from cities when other birds will not. But it will do damage as well as be useful.—Gardener.

The bluebird, in its primitive condition builds its nests in the hollows of trees, which probably explains why it so readily accepts the few houses which are provided for it. It also explains, I believe, why it is not more abundant in thickly settled districts. Plans to build a nest little bird cottage, paint tastefully and place in a suitable position near the dwelling. But especially make a number of plain boxes and put them up in the fields where the services of the birds are greatly needed. It is very probable that only a portion of the boxes would be occupied the first season, while the next season it is probable that the young reared in one of the houses would return the following spring with their parents to occupy one of the boxes.—Western Farmer.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The House of Representatives on Wednesday passed, with but one dissenting vote, the Senate fisheries retaliation bill, amended by the adoption of the substitute reported by Mr. Belmont from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Senator Sherman, of Ohio, on Tuesday resigned his position as President pro tempore of the Senate in order that a Senator may be chosen to preside whose term does not expire with the closing of the present Congress.

The House on Thursday refused (yeas 175, nays, 125) to pass the dependent pension bill over the President's veto, not but the constitutional two-thirds in the affirmative.

Senator Ingalls was on Friday chosen President pro tempore of the United States Senate, in place of Senator Sherman, resigned.

The President has signed the bill indemnifying the Chinese Government for the massacre of Mongolians at Rock Springs, W. T., in the summer of 1885. It was the honorable thing for this government to do, but it will be remembered that the assassins were never brought to punishment and there rests the disgrace.

COUNTRY.

The Ohio Supreme Court has decided that county treasurers must, according to law, expend sums collected under the Dow liquor tax law, and that the fact of the money being paid under protest is of no avail.

The Wisconsin Legislature has decided to investigate the extra expenditures of the Regents of the State University in the construction of Science Hall.

A bill defining anarchy and conspiracy and providing for the punishment of the same was introduced in the Illinois House Tuesday by Mr. Merritt.

The National Convention of the Law and Order League, in session at Albany, N. Y., on Tuesday elected the Hon. Charles C. Bonny, of Chicago, President, and Andrew Paxton, General Secretary. John R. Walsh represents Illinois in the Executive Committee.

An explosion of natural gas in the Black Diamond Steel works at Pittsburgh, Monday evening, fatally burned one man and seriously injured five others.

Benjamin Franklin Taylor, lecturer and literature, died Thursday morning at Cleveland, Ohio, aged 65.

Hannon & Son, proprietors of a free-love newspaper at Valley Falls, Kansas, were arrested Thursday for circulating obscene literature through the mails.

Hon. Jesse W. Fell, an enterprising citizen of Bloomington, Ill., expired Friday morning, aged 78. He was the first man, it is said, to propose and work for the domination of Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency.

General B. F. Butler has exchanged 27,000 acres of land in Polk county, Minnesota, for real estate in Chicago worth $121,500.

A deposit of hematite iron ore, sixteen feet thick, has been discovered near Tuscaloosa, Ala. It analyzes 62½ per cent of metallic iron.

In a room at Pittsburgh, occupied by Peter Eckert, who became a maniac recently, was found Thursday all the appliances for manufacturing nitro-glycerine, together with packages of gunpowder, bullets and bullet-molds, and a number of guns and revolvers. The police chief inclines to believe that Eckert is an anarchist, and became insane in trying to invent some terrible instrument of destruction.

The bill changing the name of St. John county to Logan county passed the Kansas Legislature Thursday and received the Governor's signature. The county was first named for the prohibitionist leader.

Saturday a hurricane swept over Illinois, Wisconsin and Michigan in some places accompanied with a foot of snow which was hurled into immense drifts, blocking all roads.

At the Chicago waterworks crib Saturday evening the wind blew steadily at the rate of seventy miles an hour.

The snow in the Sierra Nevada Mountains is said to be the deepest since the winter of 1873-74. It amounts to a complete blockade.

Judge Conrad decided Wednesday at Des Moines that the manufacture of intoxicating liquors, to be sold in other States, is a violation of the Iowa Prohibition law. The case will be carried to the highest court.

The people of Peconica, Ill., burned down the only saloon in the town last Saturday, first saturating it with oil.

A resident of Chicago has appealed to the Treasury Department for the redemption of a United States $1,000 bond which he swallowed to prevent its falling, as he believed, into the hands of burglars.

A severe storm prevailed in Northern New York and New England last week, stopping trains and suspending business generally. A regular blizzard prevailed in the Farmington, Me., section. Immense drifts blocked all roads and passenger trains were canceled, something which has not happened before for over twenty years.

An engine of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Road exploded Saturday evening at the Polk Street depot, this city. The engineer and fireman were instantly killed. The locomotive was scattered a hundred yards in every direction, and everybody in the vicinity was terribly shocked. Several persons were badly hurt.

Carl Schurz, former Secretary of the Interior, fell on a sidewalk in Sixth avenue, New York, and injured his left hip so severely that he had to be assisted to his home. The bone was broken. A similar accident happened to Gen. B. F. Butler in Philadelphia, the result being that his shoulder was badly wrenched.

FOREIGN.

Two severe earthquake shocks extended Wednesday over a large part of southern France and northern Italy. The first shock lasted fifteen seconds, the second, twelve. The cities of Genoa, Pavia, Nice, Avignon, Cannes, Geneva, Leghorn and Milan were in the shaker district. It is believed that some 2,000 people perished and there is a great and sudden departure of foreign visitors. Astronomers predict further earthquake shocks in Italy, but say the disturbances will be far less severe.

Gadban Pasha, the special agent of the Porte in Bulgaria, has informed the Grand Vizier that the only solution of the problem was the Russian occupation of Bulgaria and the Turkish occupation of Eastern Roumelia.

General Ignatieff declares himself as unwilling to accept the responsibilities of the foreign portfolio in the Russian Cabinet.

General Wolsley, British commander-in-chief, says that a great and appalling war is a certainty in the near future. He also says he has no patience with such a miserable squabble over a kettle of fish.

The Pall Mall Gazette announces that the views of Farnell, Chamberlain, Trevelyan and Gladstone are now harmonious.

Returns from the Canadian elections up to midnight indicate that the McDonald government will have from ten to fifteen majority in the new House. Their majority in the last House was seventy-six.

Dispatches from Rome assert that negotiations have been satisfactorily concluded for a renewal of the alliance between Italy, Germany, and Austria, which expires next May.

Prince Alexander, the deposed Bulgarian ruler, is ill of small-pox at his father's home in Darmstadt.

The unveiling of the statue of Louis Blanc in Paris Thursday was made the occasion for a violent demonstration by the anarchists who were present in large numbers. After the unveiling they hissed, shouted "Long live anarchy," and made a rush for the inclosure in which the statue stands. The police arrested several of the most prominent.

The German elections have resulted in returning to the Reichstag a majority of members who will support Bismarck's septennate measure providing for a compulsory service of seven years in the army.

Judge Blodgett of the United States district court in this city, has given a decision that will modify the vocabulary of our Pharisees. The Tribune called a certain lawyer a crank. Unused to being mentioned in connection with anything so useful, he sued for damages; and the judge told him it was no libel. The conservatives and hobby-phobists may now hold a convention for the invention of a new term of reproach.

A rule that is good for a railroad may be good for a farm or a factory as well. It surely is when it prohibits dram-drinking. The order of General Superintendent Lee of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway to all employees is: "No person addicted to the habitual use of intoxicating liquors will be retained in the service, and the use of the same, even in a single instance, while on duty will result in instant and final dismissal from the Company's service."

Dispatches from Rome intimate that the Knights of Labor are to be practically taken under the sheltering wing of the Romish church. Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore is in Rome to see to the matter. He has represented to the Vatican council that about one-third of the order in the United States are members of the Catholic church; that Powderly is a very devout and obedient Romanist; that the order is not a secret society in the sense condemned by the church; and that the amendments necessary to conform the order entirely to Romanist decrees will be made. If the order can be used to promote the temperance cause as Miss Willard fondly hopes, is it not most manifest that it may be much more easily used to promote the destructive designs of the Vatican.

A land-grabbing business of enormous proportions has developed in Kansas City. A syndicate has bought up old Mexican land grants and other realities, which it is safe to say are worth little in the market and have thus acquired a title to some 79,000,000 acres in Texas, New Mexico and Colorado, a tract equal in size to the British Islands or the Territory of New Mexico. Part of this land is already occupied by actual settlers who will be forced off, or to pay for a quit-claim deed, for no individual of them or probable organization will be able to fight the powerful syndicate in the courts. Business of this kind gives Henry George the best basis for his theories and drives thousands to accept them.

The Methodist churches and papers have had their black fever, as children have the measles, and have come out of the trouble with a new strength and godly vigor. The trustees of their Chattanooga University were somewhat ailing with negro-phobia, and one of the professors had the disease badly. The property of the University belongs to the Freedmen's Aid Society of the church, and between the Society and the directors there appeared a serious difference of opinion. The board of the General Conference has settled the question by requiring the resignation of Prof. Calkins, who would not shake hands with a black preacher brother, and that students shall be admitted without distinction of race or color. This righteous decision will help on the cause of righteousness all through the South.

If Charleston was not swallowed up of the earthquake it is of Masonry as our Southern lecturer has found. Let us join things that belong together: this power of the lodge in the center of secession and rebellion twenty-five years ago; the articles of Senator Pomeroy showing that the Kansas war was run by the lodge; and the remarkable testimony of Mrs. C. B. Miller in the Syracuse National convention in 1874, when in her account of her gifted father, Victory Birdseye, she said: "During a somewhat protracted residence at the South, I was struck with the remarkable vigor of the order there. . . . When the secession heresy began to spread before the war, and State after State either lapsed or was hounded into rebellion, I could not but recall one of my father's sayings, that Freemasonry eats out the heart of a man's patriotism till it is a mere shell that yields to the first approaches of treason. My father died in 1853. Had he lived to see the rebellion of 1861 I have no doubt that he would have said that Freemasonry in common with slavery should bear the responsibility of that terrible war."

The Daily News of this city is doing a good work by publishing the assessment lists of some of the wealthiest citizens of Chicago in connection with cuts of their elegant residences and some hint of the interior furnishings. The revelation has both a ludicrous and an alarming side. Property which is worth tens of thousands is reckoned among the hundreds with an astonishing uniformity; and among all the millionaires of Chicago, but one, Cyrus H. McCormick, Jr., has the honesty to give a fair valuation. Nearly one-half of the assessment on personal property in Chicago is returned upon the personal property of this young man and his manufacturing company. And yet the labor lodge bosses have abused him more roundly than any other man in Chicago,—because he dealt just as honorably with a few laborers who were backed only by their families, and not by a lodge. It is sorely to be regretted that John V. Farwell's name appears in this list of evaders of taxation. He could better afford to turn into the collector's hand part of the $100,000 he has pledged to help Mr. Moody's mission enterprise. Mr. Blatchford, a prince among the Congregationalists, is another. Would that these good men—for such they are in spite of this showing—could see that by evading just taxation, they only throw a heavier burden on the poor man, who cannot put off the tax officials so easily. The complaints of anarchists have a readier ear among the poor, because of such injustice.

LOOK UP.

BY CECIL HAMPTON HOWARD.

Look up, brave hearts, where bright stars shine,
Within the quiet, distant sky;
For victory shall yet be thine
If you but fight, as days go by.

Trust Him who every striving knows,
Through whom each victory is won;
Wage war with self, nor spare thy blows;
Each day thy Christian armor don.

He knows thy pain, thy quiet grief,
He knows what thou canst daily bear;
To those who ask He gives relief,
'Tis He alone that bears thy prayer.

Then rouse, brave hearts, be true to Him;
Cease gazing earthward, day by day;
Let not thy lamp each day grow dim;
Look upward, then, fight on and pray.

WE CAN DO NOTHING AGAINST THE TRUTH.

BY REV. B. CUNZ.

God is good, supremely good, and kind are all his ways. He loves the world. He is the Governor over all. There is no other treason so reasonless, so criminal, as disloyalty to him. And yet, does it not often appear that giving all honor and glory to God alone, "simply clinging to the cross" and depending upon the everlasting Word as the sole instructor and guide in evil days worketh tribulations—yes, reproaches, persecutions, distresses and impoverishment for Christ's sake? It certainly often seems so, but as we live by faith and not by sight, experiences of this nature must not intimidate us to betray the Lord and to forget that his mission must be the main purpose of our lives: to seek and to save the lost. "We can do nothing against the truth."

"Let no man think me a fool if otherwise, yet as a fool receive me that I may boast myself a little. Seeing that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also." To disarm the insinuations of unscrupulous enemies it is not out of the way to preface the illustrative episode of personal experience of the large-hearted "generosity" and "brotherly love" of the secret powers that I am about to disclose, with the statement that I have been for nine years in active membership on the clerical roll of the N. Y. Ministerium, a highly respectable Christian body of the Lutheran church, afterwards, on the invitation of a friend, with whom I was co-editor of a religious weekly, I accepted a commission from the American Home Missionary Society and at present am in connection with the General Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran church in the U. S. So much for the information of traducers, who eat the bread of wickedness and drink the wine of violence.

Heretofore I have not found myself fighting in the center of the enemy's camp, trying to capture that standard that is labeled, The Secret Abomination. True, the plague of the secret conspiracy has long been the burden of my heart. My observations have long led me to the conviction that the despotic dominance of the lodge-idea (that man's value must be measured after the degree of his willingness to conform to the absolutistic decrees of the lodge as to what constitutes "manhood," "liberality," "brotherly love," etc., meaning in their idiomatic phraseology the utmost indifference, and if needs be, terroristic boycotting and persecution of all efforts tending to establish the exclusive claim of the Lord Jesus and his eternal truth upon the human heart) is the one crying sin, the fatal promoter of the wide-spread infidelity in our land, the building up of a Christless structure, the true curse of the lodge-ridden so-called churches of modern innovation, the one pestilential "Krabbschaden" (as the Germans call it), blighting and fighting the true pastor every where.

German Christians as a rule, I am glad to say, do not take kindly to secret societies. Even the brilliant scholar, Dr. Beyerslag, otherwise an extremely liberal thinker and by no means an orthodox guide, though the most valiant champion of Protestantism against the aggressions of Ultramontaniam in Germany at the present date, the man on whose shoulders the mantle of the sainted Tholuck has fallen, gave us students in the University of Halle in his lectures on pastoral theology, the following bit of wholesome advice:

"Never entertain the idea to join the lodge for popularity's sake. It is utterly degrading to imagine pastors, men who have to deal with Christianity, the most universal and open thing in the world, wrapped up in the mummeries of Freemasonry."

The people in Germany at large place no confidence in a clergyman and regard him as unfit to be a leader of Israel's hosts who serves two masters in this respect, and this just feeling is by no means confined to the orthodox Lutheran clergy, but is shared by all religious circles alike. It is true the grand ninety-years old emperor is the Supreme Protector of Masonry; but he owes his stern, old-fashioned, unrelaxing piety and habits to his early religious training, certainly not from the inspirations drawn from the dark recesses of the mystic fraternity, consequently the "ex post hoc, ergo propter hoc" logic clearly can not apply to his case.

In a similar manner most of the German-American churches are keenly sensitive to the profound and material danger to all genuine church development arising from the pestilence that walketh in darkness. The Evangelical Synod of North America, numbering some 500 pastors, as well as the Wartburg Synod and the General Council, close their doors of reception to any minister in connection with any of the secret bodies, although they are inconsistently, we think, tolerated to some extent among the lay-membership. The General Council of the Evangelical Lutheran, church with its 1055 pastors and 1907 congregations, has repeatedly, in their delegate conventions as well as in district synods, lifted its voice of warning and passed its "condemnations" in official resolutions on the entire lodge system pointing out its unhealthy mixture and its undermining tendency to growth in Christian grace. Foremost of all, the Wisconsin and Minnesota Synods, comprising 257 congregations, the Ohio Synod, including 266 pastors serving 443 churches, and last but not least, the most influential of all of the strictly Lutheran bodies, the Missouri Synod, with a total membership of 935 ministers and 1272 congregations (as given in Stall's Historical Quarterly, February 1, 1887): these all practically unite, after discussing the matter time and again, that Christian flocks must be undivided in their obligation to the one Master, and only such ministers and congregations can be, and remain members of these synods, who fully agree with them in regard to the necessity of bearing witness against the secret conspiracy. The German Methodists apparently are the only ones among German churches held under by the Masonic thumb; their paper persistently closes its columns to arguments pertaining to the question, and one of their preachers complained to me that it was certain moral annihilation to any of them to dare to utter a single criticism unfavorable to secretism; the career of success was open only to those who stood highest in the estimation of the lodge-preachers, their prospects as to positions were largely determined from the pliability with which they could yield to this pressure, etc.

Turning to the small list of English-speaking organizations and churches formed on an Anti-masonic plan, we Germans certainly, it must be confessed, have been far in advance of them. However we may differ on methods in church work, Germans will not be apt to appreciate the radical temperance reform to any extent, many will look upon it as a meaningless farce, however noble the motives that prompt them, as long as American preachers persist in giving countenance, hearty approval and the sanction of superior sanctity to the lodge-idea, as long as they ostracize and help to persecute German pastors who are thoroughly honest and conscientious in their dislike to forfeit their rights as freemen on the secret society nuisance, by them considered a far greater evil than the saloon. For all sins may and will be forgiven but the sin against the Holy Ghost.

I am forced to ask: Why is not this precious cause properly presented; why are the men in sympathy with the Cynosure's stand traduced; why does this cause not enlist the support of all American ministers? Why do they not do their full duty and properly instruct and discipline, as a last resort, their people on the all important matter? Hinc illae lachrymae.

But ere I am conscious of it I am consolidating the two articles I meant to write into one and must return to my subject, giving an account of the damaging effects of secret agitation on church work entrusted to the writers' care. Had I been a member of the fraternity, why, I am very positive I should enjoy the reputation of being the most scholarly, prominent, a very good man, and all that throughout this section. Have they not told me so many a time before I ventured out on the skirmish line though I know it is not true, and am simply an unworthy, weak, imperfect servant of Him who is my one and all.

THE KANSAS STRUGGLE IN CONGRESS.

REMINISCENCES BY HON. S. C. POMEROY.

I have said that the Kansas struggle was a sort of pocket edition of the greater work which followed it only four years later. Our settlements there commenced in 1854, and the troubles began early in 1855. All the steps taken there by the Free State men were sustained by the free States generally, and denounced by the Administration and the Southern States. The effort to subdue Kansas occupied the last two years of Pierce's administration; entered into the canvass of 1856, called the "Free-mont Campaign;" and became a great disturbing element during the four years of Mr. Buchanan's administration.

But before that the Senate and House of Representatives had made a wide breach in public sentiment. Indeed, they were divided themselves. Mr. Douglas of Illinois was imperious, and in this matter for a time led the Democrats of the Senate; and did not desert them until it came to what was known as the "Lecompton Constitution." Here he hesitated, bolted, and defeated it. I remember Mr. Hale of New Hampshire offered a resolution, while I was in Washington, calling on the President (Pierce) for "information concerning the troubles in Kansas." And on the 7th day of January following, Henry Wilson offered a similar resolution, which he allowed me to write for him. This was more specific. The answer of the President was delayed. On the 4th day of February following, Mr. Jones of Tennessee presented resolutions "calling for copies of the laws and journals of the Kansas Legislative Assembly." On the 18th day of February the President responded, and all papers and correspondence were laid before the Senate.

This furnished the material for the great campaign which followed. Senators Hale, Wilson, and others championed our cause, refuted the charges made against the Emigrant Aid Company, and denounced the invasion of Kansas with merited indignation. John P. Hale got a copy of the Kansas Territorial Slave Code, and gave the party defending it a terrific lashing.

On the 1st of March, while this discussion was going on, the Legislature of Kansas, under the Topeka Constitution, met and organized a State government. Dr. Charles Robinson took the oath of office as Governor, and Andrew H. Reeder and James H. Lane were chosen United States Senators. They then adopted a memorial to Congress, asking to be admitted into the Union, and then they adjourned, to meet again on the 4th day of July. The reports from the Committee on Territories in the Senate were two, one championed by Stephen A. Douglas, the other by Mr. Collamer of Vermont.

The spring of 1856 looked gloomy for Kansas. All efforts to be admitted as a State, under the Topeka Constitution, had failed. Even General Sumner of the Regular Army appeared in Topeka with soldiers and cannon, and on that 4th of July to which the adjournment was had dispersed the Legislature, with loaded cannon and a fuse lighted. When he appeared before the Legislative body, composed of as brave men as ever stood in line of battle, to make his demand, he said: "Gentlemen, this is the most unpleasant and trying duty of my life. But I am a soldier. I am here under orders from the President of the United States." The presiding officer, General Schuyler, replied: "We are not fighting the United States, only the invasion of Border Ruffians from Missouri. We respect your feelings and your commission. We will adjourn."

Thus ended the efforts of the Free State men, under the Topeka Constitution; and Franklin Pierce got the credit of dispersing a Free State Legislature with sword, bayonet and cannon. This high-handed support of the pro-slavery party by the General Government was the greatest trial we had. To be loyal to the Union and to the old Flag was our full determination. Gov. Robinson, myself and some others took very strong ground against any collision with the General Government. Free State men differed in this policy. Some said, if the Government aids the Border Ruffians, let us fight the Government as well as the others. We said, No! by no means. It is our Government, though for the day in bad hands and under bad advisers. Robinson said, "No! But let us so conduct this border war that our friends can sustain us and their own positions until the change come, as come it will." So we resisted some of our own men, who were impatient at our surrender, and only resisted the Ruffians when we could.

For a time we incurred the displeasure of old John Brown, who would fight a nest of wild cats if he met them in his way. He could not understand why we would not fire upon the U. S. troops when they came to aid the Border Ruffians. And I came near losing what little character I had for courage, because I surrendered to the old Flag when it appeared on the hill just above Lawrence on the 21st of May, 1856, and allowed the town to be sacked and destroyed. But that was a temporary sorrow. The severe losses were bravely endured and we still survived. On that day I was made a prisoner, locked up and put under guard; but still was in full sight of the burning "Free State" hotel, printing offices, etc.

Those days—the 19th, 20th, 21st, and 22d days of May, 1856—are ever memorable. Freedom in Kansas and her great champion in Washington fell prostrate at the same time, though a thousand miles apart. The Hon. Charles Sumner on the 19th of May delivered that wonderful, ever-memorable speech, "The Crime against Kansas!" The poet Whittier said, "It was severe and awful truth, which the sharp agony of the national crisis demanded."

Sumner, with his blue eye upon Kansas, said, "Even now the black flag of the land pirates of Missouri waves over Kansas. In their laws ye hear the pirate yell, and see the flash of the pirate knife,—while, incredible to relate, the President testifies a private sympathy!" Then he added in eloquent words, "In the name of the Constitution outraged, of laws trampled down, of humanity degraded, of peace destroyed, of freedom crushed to earth,—and in the name of the Heavenly Father, whose service is perfect freedom, I make this last appeal." Then he turned full upon Senator Butler of South Carolina, saying, "The Senator dreams he can subdue the North. How little that Senator knows himself, or the strength of the cause he persecutes! He is but a mortal man; but against him is an immortal principle. With finite strength he wrestles with the Infinite, and he must fail. Against him are stronger battalions than any marshaled by mortal man,—the inborn, ineradicable, invincible sentiments of the human heart. Against him is Nature with all her subtle forces. Against him is Almighty God! Let him try to subdue these!"

That great speech was his last till Kansas triumphed. The second day following Preston S. Brooks, a nephew of Senator Butler, struck Sumner to the floor with a bludgeon! That blow came while Preston Brooks said, "You have libelled South Carolina," and with an oath which I cannot write, followed the blow. The great champion of Freedom and of Kansas fell stunned and bleeding to the floor of the Senate. He was taken to an anti-room; then his colleagues, Wilson and Buffington, carried him to his lodgings. Then followed long years of pain and suffering—at times, agony. He was treated by physicians in Washington, Philadelphia, Boston, and then Paris. He made two trips to Europe, where he submitted to the most painful treatment. It was four years before he was cured (if he ever was); and for four years that vacant chair in the Senate plead his cause. On that chair was inscribed Mr. Sumner's own words, "The barbarism of slavery." Sumner and Brooks were exponents of the two civilizations, then to wage their contests but a little longer—thank God!

On the evening of May 22, 1856, all the Republican members of Congress met at the house of Senator Seward. They then composed one-fifth only of the Senate. But they agreed that Mr. Wilson should call the attention of the Senate to this outrage the next day, which he did in well chosen words. He submitted no motion; but said, "I leave that to older Senators of this body." He took his seat. There was a long and dreadful silence. At last Mr. Seward moved that five Senators be appointed to investigate this case, and report their opinions to the Senate. Mason of Virginia moved to amend by having the committee chosen by the body. At last Pierce of Maryland, Cass of Michigan, Dodge of Wisconsin, Allen of Rhode Island, and Oger of Missouri, were selected. Not one Republican; not one man friendly to Mr. Sumner was put upon that committee! Hon. Lewis D. Campbell of Ohio had a resolution passed the House of Representatives the same day, which secured a fair committee, composed of Campbell, Pennington, Spinner, Cobb and Greenwood.

As Brooks was not a member of the Senate, the majority of that body claimed they had no jurisdiction over him. And while the House Committee were investigating the outrage, Brooks resigned his seat and left Washington for home. Several apologies were made the next day on the floor of the Senate, but one man, Toombs of Georgia, said, "I stated then to some of my friends, I approved of it; and that is my opinion now." This aroused the old "war-horse," Ben Wade of Ohio, who said, "It is impossible for me to sit still, and hear announced what I hear on this occasion. I am here in a pretty bare minority, but when I hear on the floor of this Senate that an assassin-like, cowardly attack has been made upon an unarmed man, and such attacks are approved by Senators, it becomes a question of interest to us all in the minority. A brave man may be overpowered by numbers on this floor; but, sir, overpowered or not, living or dying, I will vindicate the right and liberty of debate, and freedom of discussion upon this floor, so long as I live! So help me God!"

So the war began. Kansas had a severe blow at Lawrence. The Senate on the same day had one as severe; and then the mills of God began to grind, and it took just five years more of preparation, and the grand consummation was inaugurated, and Mrs. Howe exclaimed, "Our God is marching on." Let me now record that Brooks and Butler died within one year of this event, and Keith was killed in the war he inaugurated.

I am writing from a standpoint of thirty years from that date, and see that the blood shed in Kansas, and on the floor of the U. S. Senate, was like a drop in the bucket to what soon deluged all the land. But it shall never escape my memory that the very morning the telegraph gave us the burning words of Sumner's "crime against Kansas," the armed hosts of slavery were on "Mount Oread" just west of Lawrence, with armed men and cannon loaded, to plunder, burn and kill. And though a prisoner under a drunken guard of seven men, I saw our buildings burn; saw David R. Atchison when he ordered the torch applied to the cannon; saw the flash, and the holes their balls made in the stone walls of the hotel; and when he could not shoot the building down, he ordered a fire kindled upon the office floor, and the great structure, the pride of the new town, was soon enveloped in flames. So ended the "Free State hotel" of Lawrence—which had to be three times built before the war finally ended. But like truth itself, "though crushed to earth," it did rise again; and though the slave power had a temporary triumph, it was only for a day. I have lived long enough to see that there was wisdom, even patriotism, in bowing, for the time being, to National authority, though in wicked hands, rather than to resist the Government of the country with arms. Men who censured me on the 21st day of May, 1856, I hope also by this time agree with me. Of course we memorialized Congress, and the President issued a special proclamation, saying, "I propose to maintain the laws of the Territory, if necessary, by the whole power of the Government"; and so we bowed to the powers that be."

In April, a month previous, the Committee of the House of Representatives, Howard, Sherman and Oliver, arrived at Lawrence, and while they were in session, Marshal Fain summoned ex-Gov. Reeder to appear before the grand jury at Leocompton. Reeder knew what it meant, and appealed to the Committee for protection. Sherman and Howard sustained him; Oliver dissented. Then it was that the U. S. Marshal Fain repaired to Franklin where the pro-slavery army were stationed. Buford and his South Carolina invaders were there reinforced by two pieces of cannon and the Missouri gang, and marched upon the defenceless settlers; as they said to "wipe out the Abolition town of Lawrence."

Judge Le Compte instructed his grand jury to find bills for "constructive treason," against all who resisted them, or attempted to organize a Free State government. Gov. Robinson started to go East and arouse the free States to a sense of our danger, but was arrested at Lexington, Mo., brought back and imprisoned four months, guarded by U. S. soldiers! Gov. Reeder got down the Missouri river, disguised as a wood chopper, and escaped to Illinois by the way of Alton, leaving his boat before it reached St. Louis.

The Congressional Committee held some sessions also at Leavenworth, and saw some things which seemed to hasten their return to Washington. Gov. Shannon, too, left the Territory in a hurry. That made Secretary Woodson acting governor. This, for us, was a step from bad to worse. Then the Missouri river was closed to us. No more Free State men allowed to go that way to Kansas. On July 1 Mr. Howard of the Committee made a full and fair report. Mr. Oliver dissented in a minority report. On the 24th, Washburn of Maine, from the Committee on Elections, made a report "that our elections were so irregular that neither Whitefield or Reeder were entitled to a seat as delegates from Kansas." Mr. Stephens of Georgia dissented, of course. After this, however, by a vote of 99 to 97, the Free State Topeka Constitution was endorsed by the House of Representatives.

PRIESTS OF THE LOWEST OF THE PEOPLE.

BY REV. JAMES DONALDSON.

Many young men are tempted away from a good business position by the supposition that God intends them to study for the ministry, and to make "the best of both worlds," in a worldly sense. To carry out this idea they connect themselves with some deistic secret order whose patronage they think must ensure them success. They begin well as hopeful Christians. Soon they drop the story of the cross. The bald morality of the lodge pays better. They take to that in preference. "They teach for doctrines the commandments of men."

It is sad to hear a young minister tearing a text from its connections, and applying it to a secret order to which it has no possible application. What cares the orator? He wants to serve God and mammon. He appears to have admirably succeeded. "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." The words of Jesus to a faithful church, are thus made to do service to "a synagogue of Satan." They are lulled to sleep on the brink of hell, in the fatal delusion that the faithful performance of lodge duties will certainly ensure the possession of a better life in the world to come. They build up their hope upon "the sinking sand," and like the barren fig tree, there is nothing for Jesus but "withered leaves!"

From the religion of every deistic lodge, whatever be its professed object, the name of Jesus is carefully excluded. The whole tendency of the teaching given there is to draw away the mind from Jesus. Their prayers, from which Christ's name and merits are carefully excluded, are fearfully daring and dangerous. If they are ever answered it is only to their injury. Jesus answered the prayers of the demons, when he refused those of the maniac dispossessed by Jesus of them, who was sent home, while they were sent into the swine. But the swine would not be controlled even by the demons, for they ran immediately down a steep place into the sea and were choked. The one petition of these demons destroyed the other. They preferred the swine to the deep. But having got the swine, to the deep they soon carried them. So, in anger God may give wicked men answers to the prayers they offer to their speedy destruction.

It is sad to think that so many young men are being rushed through the theological seminaries without almost any warning of the fearful responsibility of concealing the truth from the blinded devotees of secret lodgery. "If the blind lead the blind shall they not both fall into the ditch?" Even in churches non-fellowshipping secret, deistic members constitutionally, there is no reproving of them, either from the pulpit or by special discipline. When the whole truth cannot be spoken in the house of God, and discipline is neglected, "the salt has lost its savor." The end, which is destruction, is next.

These remarks are applicable to the following case, as reported in the Dumfries Reformer:

PERSONAL:—Rev. James A. K. Walker, son of Rev. W. S. Walker, of the Galt Baptist church, left for Morgan Park Theological Seminary, near Chicago, on Monday, where he purposes taking a theological course.

SAMON TO ODD-FELLOWS.—There was a fair attendance in the Methodist church on Sabbath afternoon, to hear Rev. James A. K. Walker preach a special sermon to the Odd-fellows. The brethren were largely represented, some being present from a distance. Mr. Walker, who is himself a member of the order, and a clever and rising young minister, took for his text, "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." He dwelt upon the cardinal principles of Odd-fellowship, Friendship, Love and Truth, and exhorted the brethren to be faithful and steadfast in their attendance at the meetings of the order, etc., as well as in the higher duties which they were called upon to perform.

Have the Baptist churches a board of examiners to test the spiritual standing and piety of those they license? It is right the churches should be protected from the fatal consequences of being led to destruction by men "who preach another gospel" than that of the Son of God and his apostles.

WORDS FOR WORKINGMEN ON THEIR LODGES.

One fact is that the government of this country is a free, representative government. It is a government of laws enacted by the people through their representatives, chosen by a majority of voters in a free and fair election. The people are very jealous of this right, and will not tolerate an attempt by any organization to substitute another method, especially an attempt to order public affairs by a committee meeting secretly and not chosen at a public election.

The people are wonderfully long-suffering, because they know they have the remedy for usurpation in their own hands; but usurpation persisted in will arouse them in due time, when the usurpers will be swept away as chaff before the wind.

Another fact is that control based on force and intimidation has no endurance. Everywhere in the world and at all times such control has been overthrown and will be. It simply causes combinations to thwart and defeat it, and such efforts have and always will succeed in the end. Such control is overturned and destroyed much more rapidly in these times and in this country than in past times in other countries. But for intimidation, the fear of non-union men that they will be maltreated by the union men, the strike would not continue forty-eight hours.—Christian Intelligence.

What has struck me as strange is, that generally as soon as a man becomes the champion of the wage-earners, he stops working at his trade and goes into the "chin-moving" business for all that it is worth. Some whom I know have made well at it. I don't object to a man trying to better his condition, or to his quitting hard work for the stump or pen; but what I don't like is for a man who has done so to berate others who, like himself, live by their brains.

Not long since I was present at a meeting of toilers which was addressed by a man who looked more like a "dude" than a mechanic. He wore on his shirt-bosom something that looked like a diamond; a ring on one of his "lily-white fingers;" tight pants, Prince Albert coat, and a white neck-tie. It struck me that he was not the kind of a looking man that working-men should take as a leader. Of course he had a right to dress as he pleased for this is a free country; but if that man ever entered a factory as a workman, dressed in that style, he would be laughed out of it. What made it more ridiculous was, that he shed one or two crocodile tears for the "ground-down slaves of the workshop." As far as foppishness is concerned, I never but once saw his equal, and that was a young minister at Greenpoint, L. I. Both ought to have been hired by a clothing establishment to show off the latest fashions.

It is a well-known fact that many of those who were advocates of workmen's rights have discontinued their labors of love, having been put into good positions by "boss" politicians, who knew what they were about. Industrious common people should keep all such meddlers at arm's length. They care naught for the wives and children. To them an industrial disturbance is a picnic; they fatten on it; and the more trouble there is between the men and their employers the better they are pleased.

The workingmen have wrongs to be righted. The sight of beloved but wretched wives and children often makes sad hearts. A man is a fool who does not do his utmost, with his head as well as his hands, to improve his condition. But the average "people's leader" is not the one who will lead them into green pastures. On the contrary, there are hundreds of men to-day who rue the hour when they surrendered the right to think and act as they deemed best into the hands of such frauds.—Geo. R. Scott in the New York Witness.

CONGRESS PROVIDING FOR WAR.

Our national lawmakers are striving to lead the nation headlong in the race with other great powers in piling up munitions of war. A glance at the bills which are reported as pending in the two houses will astonish that portion of the Christian public who have imagined that our geographical position and, perhaps, a more enlightened and more Christian spirit dictating our policy, were to exempt us from the military burdens which are crushing the nations of the old world. Two bills which have passed the Senate appropriate an aggregate sum of twenty-one millions of dollars for the purchase of steel, the establishment of gun factories, and for beginning work on coast defences. Besides these bills, Senator Cameron introduced another on Friday, the 11th inst., and the committee to whom it was referred reported it back for action the very next day. It provides for building ten fast steel cruisers with a maximum speed of twenty knots an hour, and offers a liberal bonus to the builders for every knot in excess of this speed attained. With the armament the estimated cost of these vessels will be $21,500,000. Not to be outdone by the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Hale, of Maine, introduced at the same time, and the committee reported on the following day, a bill for the construction of heavily armored vessels and armored floating batteries to be used for coast and harbor defenses. This bill calls for $15,400,000. Besides all this, Senator Stanford introduced a bill on the same fateful day, to encourage the building of four private gun factories, one in South Boston, Mass., one in Pittsburg, Pa., one in Birmingham, Ala., and one in San Francisco. The aggregate amount he proposes to spend for this purpose is $40,000,000. Moreover, the five millions of dollars for coast defences, included in the first measure named above, is felt to be entirely inadequate. The Board ordered by the President to investigate and report on fortifications and other defenses present a scheme which if carried out will cost $126,000,000. And many Senators are in favor of increasing the provision in that bill to twenty-five millions of dollars.

In the House there are several independent propositions pending—one to appropriate a round fifty millions to be expended immediately in the construction, equipment and armament of new vessels of war. Mr. McAdoo, of New Jersey, has introduced a bill appropriating $20,000,000 for the manufacture of ordnance, and Mr. Herbert, of Alabama, proposes $6,000,000 for the purchase of steel.

All these preparations are proposed and discussed, and demanded by the majority of our people, without a word of protest, or even regret, in view of the waste and wickedness caused by war, and of the awful responsibility involved in the wholesale destruction of human life. The war policy is the accepted and settled policy of the United States, as well as of other nations, for the settlement of international disputes. While millions are voted for military preparations, not a dollar is proposed to promote among the nations a general disarmament and the establishment of courts of international arbitration. Yet how much more reasonable the latter policy than the former. We long to see one nation enlightened enough to say: "We will prepare for peace, not for war. If any question arises between us and our neighbors we will refer it to arbitrators, and will, in all cases, abide by their decision." Such a nation, in this age, would be secure from wanton attack. The cause of justice would be better served by such a course than by the arbitrament of battle, for war decides only who is strongest, not who is right. And is God's providence to go for nothing in such an argument? We have inscribed "In God we Trust" on our later coins. Do we trust him? Is his favor of no value? His displeasure not to be feared? What an opportunity for America to throw the weight of her great example and her growing influence on the side of the Peace, in the scales where the fate of millions hangs trembling on the decision of weak or angry princes! The whole war policy of the world to-day is wicked and suicidal. Immediate and complete disarmament, with a resort to arbitration in cases of dispute, is the unquestionable duty even of the European nations. Her favored position, and the improbability and needlessness of war in her case, make it far more imperatively the duty of the United States. For these reasons we condemn the proposed legislation as unchristian and barbarous, and deplore the sentiment which urges its passage.—Christian Statesman.

The structure of the human soul compels all men to seek a Deity, the mighty difference being this, that the heart of the righteous "as the hart after the water brooks, pants after the Living God," while conscious guilt in the soul of the wicked makes him desire a dead God. Like some of old, they wish to believe that "the Most High will not do good, neither will he do evil." Their soul is in torment without a God of some kind, and they are afraid of one who will punish the guilty.

REFORM NEWS.

IN THE EARTHQUAKE REGION.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Feb. 24, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Orangeburg to Charleston is a continuous plain mostly covered with pine forests, but with here and there a cotton or rice field. The meager villages look poverty-stricken, and the entire country is poor. Branchville and Summerville are exceptional places. Near the latter town much attention is paid to fruit-raising, and the peach and pear trees were in full bloom. As we approached this city the soil grows richer, rice fields were common, live oaks take the place of pines, and the long gray Spanish moss hangs from all the trees. Near the city are fine market gardens, and the long rows of growing peas and other vegetables were suggestive of spring and agreeable food.

I saw little of the effects of the earthquake until I got into the city. Though most of the buildings have been repaired, there are few of brick or stone but show some marks of destructive power. Most of the chimneys are new, and cracks in the brick walls are everywhere seen. A large old church near where I am staying is being entirely reconstructed. The Custom House, which is the finest structure in the city, was extensively damaged, and is being repaired. The postoffice is still propped up and stayed together and will have to be reconstructed. All along the Battery front are a large number of fine buildings that are partly thrown down and unfit for habitation. The greatest destruction was here and on Meeting street, where the wealthiest people lived. St. Michael's church is being extensively repaired, but its great tower will not be taken down.

The view from the Battery is very fine. The bay stretches out until it is lost in the ocean. Ft. Sumter and Sullivan's Island are seen in the distance, and the Ashley and Cooper rivers form natural boundaries on either side. Beautiful for situation and with a splendid harbor, Charleston ought to have been a great city. But for slavery and secession, it would have been such. Alas! alas! The great cyclone of a year ago, the earthquake, and worst of all the intensely bitter sectional feeling of the ruling class, have stopped her development, and well nigh paralyzed her energies. Her 40,000 colored people, many of them intelligent and efficient citizens, are without representation—literally counted out. Her only daily paper is sold at a price beyond the reach of the masses; and, unlike other cities, the voice of the newsboy is scarcely heard in her streets. The editor's great speech on the 22d, was a most foolish and criminal revival of all the animosities and bitterness of the war. It may be safely predicted that until Charleston changes her conduct and spirit the visitations of an avenging Providence may be expected. Yet there are some good things even in Charleston. Much effort has been made to give practical effect to the public school system, and the city has done kindly and wisely in its fine school buildings and well sustained schools for the colored.

From a time since which the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, Charleston has been a pre-eminently Masonic city. Those distinguished Masonic writers, Drs. Dalcho and Mackey, were Charlestonians.

I brought a letter of introduction from the president of a university to a pastor in this city. He listened to what I had to say and then told me that he was the second officer in the Grand Lodge of the A. F. and A. M. of South Carolina; that most of his members belonged to some secret order and that it would be very awkward for him to invite me to lecture in his church. I realized his position and went elsewhere. Rev. Geo. C. Rowe, pastor of the Plymouth Congregational church, invited me to accept his hospitalities. I have found a pleasant home with his interesting family. He arranged for me a meeting last night and took pains to invite all his members. After the prayer meeting, which was large and interesting, I spoke for forty-five minutes to a full house, including a goodly number of Freemasons. The strictest attention was paid, and at least one Mason seemed convinced. Others were offended and withstood me with the usual Masonic arguments. There was much excitement and an excellent impression.

My next call was on Rev. J. L. Dart, pastor of a large Baptist church. He said he was made a Mason in Washington, D. C.; had not joined a lodge since he came here, and did not expect to; would be glad to hear me, but declined to invite me to address his people. We returned to Bro. Rowe's and in a few minutes Bro. Dart called to say that he had seen several of his ministerial brethren and that they had arranged, if I consented, to have me address a ministers' meeting at the Congregational church, on Friday morning, promising to advertise it as far as practicable. This was better than I expected.

Next, we called on Rev. W. H. Hurd, pastor of the A. M. E. Zion church, who expressed his hearty approval of my work. Our next call was at a meeting of M. E. ministers, all of whom are, I think, Masons or Odd-fellows. They listened to me with patience and apparent candor, and promised to attend to-morrow's meeting. Considering the state of my health I have been remarkably favored, and thank the dear Lord for his loving kindness in using me to prosecute his work.

The Avery Institute, which has for so many years done excellent service in this city, had to be suspended on account of the earthquake. The repairs on the building have been nearly completed and the school will be opened, D. V., March 14. Rev. Geo. C. Rowe has done a most excellent work here and his church is prospering. Bro. Rowe lectures to-night "On the Race Problem," and expects to lecture in the North on "The Earthquake in Charleston." I hope he may visit the Northwest.

ORANGEBURG, S. C., Feb. 28, 1887.—Charleston, S. C., has as intelligent and cultured ministers as any other city of similar size, but in perhaps none is there a larger percentage of Freemasons. It is pre-eminently a Masonic city. The Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of the A. F. and A. M. (colored) is an officer in the Congregational church. The second officer is pastor of the largest M. E. church of the city. After my meeting in the Congregational church at which one Mason acknowledged himself convinced and two others were made angry, I met a number of M. E. ministers and conversed with them some time on the lodge question. They promised to attend the ministers' meeting, but most of them were Masons. Friday morning came and about fifteen ministers, nearly all Masons, representing four different denominations, met and listened most attentively for more than an hour. The Baptist pastor who called the meeting asked quite a number of questions, which helped me materially in making out my points. All admitted the authority of Dr. Mackey, who was well known in the city, and when it was shown beyond question that Freemasonry as he taught it excluded Christ from its prayers and Scripture readings, there was a united voice in its condemnation. They thanked me for my lecture and I am sure will profit by it. The Grand Master came to a church meeting in the evening, and after it had adjourned we discussed the subject for an hour or more, much to the benefit of those who remained.

Just before I left the city I was introduced to a Masonic minister, who mistook me for a Mason and conversed for a long time about the inside of the order. When he found that I was not a Mason he was much embarrassed, but admitted that I knew much about the order and said that I had called his attention to some things he had never thought of. I left at 5:10 p. m. and at 8 o'clock was in Orangeburg. I have been most kindly entertained at Clafflin University. I preached in the morning yesterday in the M. E. church, Rev. I. N. Cardozo, pastor, and at night lectured on "Secret Societies and Christianity Contrasted." I had the hearty endorsement of the pastor and an attentive hearing from large audiences. One of the members of this church, a Royal Arch Mason, said that when he was converted five years ago he abandoned the order, and that he was greatly rejoiced at my testimony against it. I go to-night to Augusta, Ga. Like the men who went after Oreb and Zeeb, I am "faint yet pursuing." May the Lord help. H. H. HINMAN.

SUN AND STORM IN OHIO.

ONTARIO, O., March 3, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—When I last wrote it was raining. To-day the sun is shining. People often change like the weather. The same crowd that one day cry "Hosannah" the next may cry "Crucify." While some silly and ignorant are still attracted by lodge shows of vanity, continued sunshine banishes clouds. Men and women who think for themselves are getting their eyes open. The papers show which way the wind is blowing.

I spent last Sabbath and Monday at Justus, Stark Co. Rev. LaMaster, United Brethren pastor, invited me to fill his pulpit Sabbath morning and evening. Owing to the prevailing storm the attendance was not large. Some two hundred were present at the Monday evening lecture. A good interest was manifested. I was kindly entertained while here at the home of Bro. A. Putman. He with his excellent wife are doing all in their power to maintain the present rule of their church (the United Brethren) in the exclusion of secretists.

Enroute for Mansfield I stopped over one train at Wooster. Rev. Wilson of the United Presbyterian church was not at home. I learned by members of his congregation that he recently preached against the lodge. At Mansfield I found Secretary George's family quite afflicted in the sickness of Mrs. George's sister and their little girl Blanche. The oldest daughter of James Reynolds, a very highly esteemed member of the Covenant church, died this morning after a brief illness of two days. So we are constantly reminded that in the midst of life we should be prepared for death. Mr. Reynolds has been sick for some time and is now confined to his bed. It is the earnest prayer of many that he may be spared to his family and the church.

I find "Uncle John Finney" (as he is familiarly called) enjoying usual health. Although nearly eighty-six years of age, his interest is not abated in the reforms of the day. He reads the Cynosure with great interest, having been a subscriber from the first. I expect to take the train this evening for Galion, from thence to Iberia, where I expect to spend Sabbath with Rev. Robb. I find that some of our friends who have kindly pledged their support to the State work are behind in their payment. We are aware that "times are hard." We trust, friends, you will be as prompt as possible. All contributions should be sent to Rev. S. A. George, Mansfield, Ohio. W. B. STODDARD.

A DEMORALIZED COUNTRY.

PINE BLUFF, Ark., Feb. 22, 1887.

DEAR BROTHERS:—I have had good audiences here in the Baptist churches, in Bro. Johnston's church and in his school, and to-day in the Branch Normal college. I am to be in the St. John's A. M. E. church this evening, and to-morrow go to Little Rock where I meet Bro. Woodsmall. This town is reeking with liquor, tobacco and secret societies, there being some thirty-two or more "lodges" in this little town of only some 4,000 inhabitants; and nearly all the ministers as well as the people are complicated with these gross evils and with card-playing and dancing as well. Even some church members run business establishments, and dealers open their liquor saloons on the Sabbath. An Episcopal minister, while at work "charging" his soda fountain on Sunday, got a "charge" himself and had one of his eyes blown out, and is now a walking monument about town of a ministerial Sabbath desecrator!

O ye teachers and temperance and Christian workers and missionaries, here is a field for your sympathies, your prayers, your money and your labors. Here you will find "AFRICA" in dark and dense grossness without going across the ocean, or having to learn a foreign language!

From Arkansas's rolling river,
Her rich cotton-growing plains,
"They call us to deliver,
Their land from error's chains.

GEO. W. CLARK.

OSKALOOSA, IOWA, HEARS ABOUT THE LODGE.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On Sabbath, the 20th of Feb., I preached to a good audience in the U. P. church of Oskaloosa, a city of eight thousand inhabitants and the county-seat of Mahaska county. Rev. Mr. Morrow, the pastor of this church, is a staunch Christian reformer. According to previous arrangement he announced that I would lecture in his church on Tuesday night, Feb. 22d. In the evening of that Sabbath I preached at the Free Methodist church, and on Monday night I preached in the colored M. E. church of Oskaloosa.

On Tuesday night I lectured in the U. P. church to a fine audience, larger even than that of Sabbath morning. This was the more gratifying from the fact that Oskaloosa is badly infested with secret lodges, and many of the church members and some of the pastors have been deceived by Satan into fellowshiping and supporting this "mystery of iniquity," the secret lodge system, of which Freemasonry is chief. There were also meetings the same night in several of the churches, and there was a citizens' mass meeting to devise ways and means for the construction of street railways and to produce a business boom by establishing manufacturing industries in the city. Notwithstanding this strong competition for public attention, a fine congregation, some of whom were Masons, were in attendance, curious to understand the Masonic plan and processes of salvation, and anxious to hear the Bible proof that a man cannot intelligently adhere to Ancient Craft Masonry and be a Christian. The attention was profound and the order excellent. "A nail," I trust, "was driven" that night "by the Master of Assemblies in a sure place." Leaven was put in the meal that will work, I believe, until the churches of that city are leavened.

The sad spectacle of men adhering to and defending Masonry, that antagonizes Christianity in principle and in practice while claiming to fit men for heaven by regenerating them and freeing them from sin, will, by and by, be a thing of the past, like the slave pens and auction blocks of slavery times that have gone; and the saloons and Mormon polygamy that must go. Masonry is now entrenched in the churches. But it must be driven from its strongholds. Its pagan and infidel character must be exposed, until those whose consciences are so dead that they cannot know its wickedness will be constrained to withdraw from Masonry to conserve their reputation as Christian men.

Three-fourths of the Masons of my conference have withdrawn from the lodge, said a prominent minister of the M. E. church. Many of them, he said, withdrew because they found they could not have the influence with the people, as Masons, that they could if they were not Masons; but some of them, he added, withdrew because they were convinced that Masonry is wicked, and they could not be Masons and be Christians.

Where the ministers have worshiped at false altars until they have fallen under the mesmeric power of Satan, and the light which was in them has become darkness, let the people be enlightened until the pressure of public sentiment shall crowd these clerical devotees of devil worship out of the lodge. It is a shame for the clergy to allow themselves to be used as stool pigeons by Satan to draw young men into these snares that are set for their souls. And yet it is said of a leading clergyman of Oskaloosa, that he is a high and active Mason.

FROM THE LOUISIANA MISSIONARY.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—At my last writing I spoke of the conversation between myself and Revs. George Holmes and Ambrose Hubbs which was very encouraging. But when the trying hour came for a sermon in St. Peter's Baptist church, instead of the sermon there was a lecture by a physician on medicines. Nevertheless brother Holmes invited me to preach last Friday night and so I did. There were present secretists as well as others, and notwithstanding Bro. Holmes's own words to me, when he beheld the secretists sitting in the church he arose after the sermon and gave me a sharp rebuke for preaching such a sermon. He said, "I don't think a minister has a right to come in another's house to instruct his congregation. Let a man preach the Gospel; that's enough. Never mind about secret societies. I belong to the Odd-fellows and Tabernacle too; but I put my church first. I don't believe in a man trying to preach all the Bible at once, for he never will get through all the Bible. Let people do to suit themselves. I am going to preach nothing but the Gospel. It's not my business to preach about secret societies."

After speaking thus the congregation in part yielded to what he said. But, thank God, Bro. J. A. Porter and a few others stood up for the truth amidst the confusion. I have since been denounced and some of the secretists say I shall not get along here, but, thank God, Bro. Hubbs cordially received me and accepted every word. Bro. Hubbs's church, the Macedonia, is pretty well cleansed of secretists.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SAVING THE GOVERNMENT FROM SECU-LARIZATION.

CINCINNATI, O.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Julian, the Roman Emperor, undertook to destroy Christianity and reinstate paganism. While engaged in his great campaign some one asked a Christian in Rome, "What is the Nazarene doing now?" He replied with triumphant faith, "Making a coffin for Julian." Immediately the news came that Julian had died, casting dust in the air and exclaiming, "Thou hast conquered, O Galilean!" Satan is mustering the liquor traffic, Sabbath-breaking corporations, secret oath-bound fraternities, anarchists, etc., to take possession of this land. But the Great Conqueror is coming forth to meet him. "And there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels and prevailed not." The right will prevail.

On last Sabbath, morning and evening, I preached in the Third Presbyterian church. This is a vacant charge. They have 720 members. There was a grand audience at both services. They are a devoted, earnest people. It is unfortunate that such a congregation should be without a pastor. They have hired Rev. S. S. Cryer to supply them for a year.

On Monday night Henry George lectured in Music Hall. Five thousand heard him. He maintained that land in its native state belongs to the race. "The earth hath he given to the sons of men." It should be free as air and water. Man should own nothing but the improvements. The increased value of land by improvements and environments should be taxable. It is an ingenious theory. Because Father McGlynn accepted of it he was deposed and ordered to Rome. The reason why such travesty can get a hearing is because the laboring classes are smarting under injustice. There must either be reformation or revolution. This judgment must first begin at the house of God. I know some professing Christians who go to the saloon every day. I know some who are so mean and cruel in their disposition that they can break their brother's heart and glory in it. What is the difference between them? "Just the difference between small-pox and fever. The one has it outside, the other inside. But in either case it will kill."

On Tuesday I went up to Bellefontaine. That evening my brother, Rev. F. M. Foster, drove with me to Rushsylvania, ten miles out, where I lectured in the town hall. The hall was filled, and they listened throughout with the deepest attention. My brother made this point: the character of the government is a powerful agent in determining that of the nation. When the kings of Israel were wicked the people became so, and when they were good the people became like them. Let our government remain secular, and it is only a question of time when this nation will be secularized. But Christianize the government, and it will ultimately transform the whole people. "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump."

On Wednesday evening I had expected to lecture in the Springfield United Presbyterian church, Rev. Joseph Kyle, pastor. Owing to a dropped link in the correspondence it was not announced. It was well enough, for the rain would have drowned it out. The U. P. congregation there is putting up a new church. They expect to be in it by the first of June. They realized $25,000 on the sale of their old property. Bro. Kyle is making his mark in Springfield. Said one, "You have no reason to be ashamed of him as a relative. He is a strong man and is doing a good work." We spent a pleasant afternoon at the home of Mr. James Carson, a wholesale groceryman, and one of Bro. Kyle's elders. Springfield is a manufacturing centre, and is making wonderful strides in the line of improvement. On Thursday evening I preached in the Bellefontaine R. P. church, Rev. F. M. Foster, pastor. This congregation was organized ten years ago by Prof. D. McAllister, L. L. D., of Beaver Falls, Pa. Mr. David Boyd, now of Kansas City, Mo., was the leading spirit in that enterprise. Possessed of a genial spirit, a clear head and a large heart, he is just the man to unite people of the same faith in an organization. It is to be hoped he will do in his new home such a work as he accomplished here. This congregation has been self-supporting from the beginning. They have a neat little church, free of encumbrance. The United Presbyterian congregation here is putting up a new brick church. They expect to have it ready for occupancy some time next month. Their pastor, Rev. John Williamson, is a popular man in these parts. He is frequently called away to deliver lectures on "The Plough," "Hobbies," etc.

On Saturday morning I am to address the students of the Lebanon Normal School. There are 700 in attendance. This is the great Normal of the West. It is a private enterprise. They have no endowment, own several buildings and make it pay its own way. The president, Dr. Alfred Holbrook, is a wide-awake, long-headed man. He devises liberal things.

J. M. FOSTER.

A TRUE AND A FALSE STANDARD.

BEACONSFIELD, IOWA.

"Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." This is according to the Bible, but we may abuse this standard and thus eventually destroy our government and prove a curse to posterity. If the governed are educated under the right standard, then we will be to a greater degree a Christian nation than we now are. It must be admitted that good and evil exist in the world, a good and a bad standard, a true and a false, for the good is only true, and evil is always false. Remove the Bible, the only standard of right, from the public schools and the governed would soon vote according to a wrongly educated conscience. Our constitution and laws are founded on divine law as far as they are right.

All Christians want men of God to administer the affairs of government, and they pray for righteous rulers. But many think the opinion of the ungodly must not be disturbed by having a government that recognizes Christ as king of nations. "Christ has of right all power in heaven and in earth." Where Satan rules it is by usurpation. The devil seems to rule to some degree in all nations.

In order to have righteous rulers, we should have a nation of voters that are Christian, for we elect righteous rulers to office only in the degree that we are Christian. We are not doing this well because Freemasonry, an infidel institution that rejects the Christian's God in Christ, manages to hold two-thirds of the offices of this Christian nation. Our fathers intended this to be a Christian nation. In spite of all the false standards in the whole lodge system causing two oaths in the jury box, the spirit of the Lord is raising up a standard of reform against them, according to his word. May the time soon come when the synagogue of Satan will be driven from church and state. When the church has "no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," the Bible will be restored to the schools and prohibition would flourish as never before. There would be so many Christian votes cast at a Presidential election that "a nation would be born in a day."

CYRUS SMITH.

WHY THEY CANNOT WORK TOGETHER.

SABETHA, Kans.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Secret societies being the bulwarks of the saloon and the strong hold of the whole whisky traffic and some of the leaders of the Prohibition party being connected with them, how can they carry out the law, if it was passed, with the lodge oath in the way, to stand by a brother right or wrong and warn him of his danger that he may escape punishment from the law. If the Republican or Democratic parties were to pass a prohibitory law it would be the same with them; they would also be disarmed by their connection with the secret empire and the same oaths would stand between them and their duty as officers of the law, therefore the law would be a dead letter.

Now it is a well known fact that nearly every saloonist, brewer and distiller is a member of the lodge, and our prohibition law in their hands would be a farce and worse, for it would be a complete victory for the devil. Dear friends, be not deceived. The devil is cunning and doing all he can to save his two strongest holds he has on our race from being destroyed by the power of truth. The devil often clothes himself as an angel of light to deceive if possible the very elect. Beware of the wiles of the devil. We do not believe he has any foreknowledge, but he knows that certain causes will produce certain effects, and if the Prohibition party can pass the prohibition law, and still keep it in the power of the secret empire to carry it into effect, it would be a complete failure. The liquor traffic and secret orders are inseparable; like the Siamese twins, if you separate them you kill them both. The secret lodge is not only the chief corner-stone of the rum traffic, but it is under the whole building of the rum traffic and bears it up, and it will take the American party that stands aloof from all secret societies to put it down.

Oh, the cunning of Satan! When woman suffrage was beginning to be agitated, he knew they would finally succeed, and then woe to his secret empire if he did not do something to entice them, as the lying spirit went out from the presence of the Lord to entice Ahab; and he began to organize secret side shows to shut their mouths and turn them to favor the secret empire; and now the thousands of those women that have been fooled, enticed into these secret side shows, will stand up and plead for Baal.

My communication may appear harsh. It is true the nearer any deception approaches the truth the more harm it does and the harder it is to put it out of the way. Now the principle the Prohibition party is advocating is all right, so far as temperance is concerned, and we say, Amen; but they do not go far enough, they do not attempt to remove the secret empire upon which the liquor traffic rests. I do not apprehend that it will take as hard a struggle to convert the Democratic and Republican parties to prohibition as to convert the Prohibition party to anti-secrecy, and this must come before prohibition can be made effectual.

JOHN THOMPSON.

REMEDY AND PREVENTIVE.

MENOMINIE, Wis.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Your statement of what the Oswego (N. Y.) man said about the burial of hundreds of workmen daily from Aspinwall, Panama, moves me to write what a man told me in Texas a few years since about a sure preventive and remedy for malarial diseases. The gentleman's name was Rogers; a Scotch Irishman, I should think, but for many years a citizen of these United States, and said he belonged to the "Covenanters."

Mr. Rogers was living in New York city during the prevalence of the cholera epidemic in 1849. He says that the physicians prescribed pulverized charcoal, such as is commonly sold at the drug stores, and proved a sovereign remedy whenever taken as directed. In one family and household of eighteen persons, all of whom were attacked with cholera, every one recovered except a girl who refused to take the charcoal. A teaspoonful mixed in cold water on going to bed and on getting up is the dose. It acts as a purifier and absorbs all poison in the stomach and alimentary canal. As it does not digest and assimilate, an occasional dose of pills will carry it from the system.

At another time Mr. Rogers was in a Southern city during the prevalence of cholera, and, though the doctors strictly forbade the use of fruits and vegetables, he ate both freely, using the charcoal meanwhile, his system moving with the regularity of clock-work. He declares that he would have no fears of living in the worst malarial district, with the use of this simple prescription: and it certainly is not unreasonable. Many a life might be preserved by a knowledge of this simple remedy, and so with your concurrence and I trust, God's approval, I pass it along.

W. W. AMES.

PITH AND POINT.

THREE TIMES WAS ENOUGH.

I have been a member of three lodges in my time: Odd-fellows, Brotherhood of the Union, and Good Templars; and as far as the last named order is concerned, I am a Good Templar yet, and always expect to be, but I don't belong to the order. I want to tell you that I have got my eyes open to such things. I see the wrongs in them now, and the night I was initiated into the Odd-fellows was one of the darkest I ever beheld. To make it still darker I had to be blindfolded, and was so excited that I did not know what kind of an oath I was taking. But they had my money and I thought I would go through and see it all, and when I got there I found nothing to see after all. I want you to know that there is one anti-secrecy man in Orbisonia, and I think I can get several subscribers to the Cynosure.—MILES KELLY, Orbisonia, Pennsylvania.

MORGANIZING.

In Bernard's pamphlet, entitled "Reminiscences of Masonic Veterans," he says, "The son of a Baptist clergyman of Utica, while in the house of God, put his fist in my face, saying with a vengeance, 'D— you, you ought to be sent after Morgan.'" This reminds me of an incident I witnessed a few years ago in a Western city. A tract was handed a respectable looking man, who stood a moment to read the title, and without raising his head turned his eyes to the giver, and glared as he slowly growled, "Hell has lots of such fellows as you!" It was like the ominous rumbling of thunder which told of the lightning that accompanied it. There are deaths by lightning. Ahem—there are "accidental" deaths—perhaps more numerous than they ought to be, if all the truth was told. So, reader, if you are a moral coward, say nothing against lodgery, and escape the honors of such heroes as John Brown and George C. Haddock.—T. H.

GOOD REASON FOR BELIEVING.

I find the testimony of seceding Masons so completely one thing, that I am bound to give full credit to it. Also I find in the general reading that Masonry is a hundred-fold worse than I had supposed it was; so I have been lifting up my voice against it, and will continue to do so in pulpit as well as elsewhere, God being my helper. Any amount of persecution will not stop me. I am richly and wonderfully baptized for the work. Success to the National Christian Association. The Lord is with us.—SAMUEL MATHEW, Canby, Oreg.

A GOOD DELEGATE.

By all means let's have the sayings and doings of the National Congress of Christians, soon to meet in Chicago, in book form. Boil down and get the best of all the speeches. It is what will do the work among the people. The finger of the Lord seems to point in the direction of the Congress of Christians. I shall try to be there and get others to go as well. Let us pray for a good meeting.—J. S. HICKMAN.

A BUSINESS OPENING.

An anti-secret-society man is desired to build up a business at Daggers Station, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, in Salem township, Carroll county, Illinois. The country is settled by German and Swedish Lutherans on the north and west, mostly German Methodist on the southeast, and Americans south and southwest. Secret societies get no foothold in this section of country; if we get a good business man to hold the center we will be able to keep them out.—B. APPLE, Mt. Carroll, Ill.

BIBLE LESSON.

STORIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON XII.—March 20, 1887.—Jacob's New Name.—Gen. 32:9-12, 24-30.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And he said, I will not let thee go, except thou bless me.—Gen. 32:26.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

From the Truth.

1. When Jacob was called to face the consequences of his meanness and treachery to Esau, true to his nature, for nature never changes, he went to planning. But planning does no good in the things of God. Prov. 28:26; Jer. 10:23; 17:9; Rom. 10:1-3; 8:7; 1 Cor. 1:20, 21.

2. The angels of God met him, Mahanaim, two hosts or camps of them, and this ought to have been sufficient to assure him of divine protection and deliverance. 2 Kings 6:17; Jer. 34:7; Matt. 26:53; Luke 22:43; Acts 5:19; 12:7; 27:23, 24; Heb. 1:14.

3. It is true that he went to praying, as well as planning, but his praying at first was only asking God to carry out his planning. There is too much of this kind of praying, making use of God's omnipotence to prosper our own plans. Instead of asking him to plan for us. Jas. 1:6-8; 4:3; Ps. 66:18; Prov. 15:8; Isa. 1:15; Jer. 11:14.

4. At the end of his planning "Jacob was left alone," and if we would have power, we must be much alone with God. Matt. 6:6; 2 Kings 4:38; Isa. 26:20; John 1:43; Acts 9:11, 40; 10:9, 30.

5. "And there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day," or "the ascending of the morning." This is not "the wrestling Jacob," as it is called, but the wrestling Christ. It was not the sinner who had an object to accomplish by wrestling, but the Saviour, as it so often is still, if there was grace to see him. 1 Cor. 10:30; Heb. 12:6-11; Jas. 1:12; Ps. 119:67, 71; Rev. 3:19.

6. But Jacob must have the pillar of his strength shattered before he would hang his whole weight upon the arm of omnipotence, for the power of Christ can tabernacle only upon the wreck and ruin of man's resources. 2 Cor. 12:9, 10; Ps. 8:2; Isa. 40:29-31; Eph. 3:16; Phil. 4:13; Col. 1:10, 11; Heb. 11:34.

7. Then he received the name of Israel, "a prince of God," and he called the name of the place Peniel, "the face of God;" and although he had to go halting upon his thigh, "as he passed over Peniel the sun rose upon him," Luz becoming Bethel, and Bethel Peniel in his increasing nearness unto God. Hos. 12:4; Rom. 8:15-17; John 1:18; 14:9; 2 Cor. 3:18; 6:4-18; Rev. 22:3-5; 18:8.

From Peloubet's Notes.

The answer to his prayer.—Vers. 27-29.

FIRST ANSWER.—A NEW NATURE. The experience which some have called second conversion, an uplifting of the character and life to a higher plane.

"And he (the Angel of the Covenant) said unto him, What is thy name?" Not as if requiring to be informed, but as directing attention to it, as representing his character hitherto.

"And he said, Jacob." i. e., Heel-catcher, or Supplanter (vide ch. 25:26).—Whitaker. Jacob had been his character, shrewd, tricky, crafty, self seeking, with none too much of the principle of love in his dealings; too ready to take advantage of others.

"And he said, Thy name shall be called no more Jacob." But especially to the ancient Hebrews, names were not mere distinguishing appellations; they expressed the essential qualities of the character or being of the person or thing named. Hence in the Bible, the word "name" is often used instead of the character or being expressed by it; thus, "His name shall be called," i. e., he shall be.—Todd.

"But Israel." That is, a prince of God, or one powerful with God. His name was changed, because he was an altered man. Hitherto there had been something subtle in his character,—a certain cunning and craft. Israel, a larger, more unselfish name,—a larger and more unselfish man.—Robertson. The real reason why Jacob is called Israel, is Jacob is vanished; Israel is born. So the after history of this patriarch shows that a great change has passed over him. God had taught him that his greatest enemy was not Esau, but himself. Let there be purity, and there will be peace. Even his descendants are called the children of Israel. Eventually the nation, as well as the land, were spoken of as Israelites and Israel.—Robinson. He was now fitted to receive the birthright blessing, and inherit the promises of faithful Abraham. So, "if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature," or, literally (since he is in italics), If any man be in Christ—a new creation.

SECOND ANSWER.—POWER WITH GOD. "For as a prince hast thou power with God," or, as in Revised, thou hast striven with God, and prevailed. Thus he had power with God. The blessing of God was given him (ver. 29). The birthright blessing was retained. He had been weak in the presence of men. Worldly and shrewd policy had failed to hold for him the blessing. The only result of his wrong policy was failure, for Esau could destroy him and his on account of the wrong. But now he receives it from the lips of God. He has now come into union with God by faith and obedience, so that the Lord himself is his sun and shield, the rock of his refuge, the host that encampeth about him as the mountains are round about Jerusalem. "Blessed is the man whose strength is in thee." It was now with Jacob as Christ promised long after that it should be with his disciples,—"he that abideth in me shall ask what he will, and it shall be given unto him." Jacob, abiding in God, in love and faith and obedience, can now claim God's protection and care and love.—P.

THIRD ANSWER.—POWER WITH MEN. This naturally follows from his power with God. "One with God is a majority." He that has God on his side is sustained by a wisdom and power that infinitely surpasses those of all his enemies combined. Power with God always means power with men.—P.

FOURTH ANSWER.—DEEPER KNOWLEDGE OF GOD. 29. "And Jacob... said, Tell me... thy name." That is, reveal to me more fully, with the certainty of positive assertion, who and what thou art; what is thy character and nature?—P.

"Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name?" Why do you ask, seeing that (1) I have been revealing myself to you all the past night, and all through your life. Read the providence in your life, and you will see who is dealing with you now. (2) You would not understand, if I should express my name in words. You would think you knew all, and yet it would be chiefly in an unknown tongue to you. You would know less of the depth of its meaning than you know of a star cluster when you call it Pleiades, or of literature when you read the alphabet. It is useless to tell you my name in words. (3) But I will reveal as fast as you are able. Only as you grow more like God can you comprehend God. And (4) I will give you all you can understand now, by giving you my blessing. You shall understand something of my goodness and power.—P.

"And he blessed him there." This blessing he was doubtless made to experience internally. His mind was sweetly tranquillized. His former fear departed from his soul, as did the shades of night at that very time before the breaking of the day. His heart is strengthened by the secret succors of the God of all grace, which are far more effectual than words or more literal promises. His question was answered in the state of his soul.—Bush. It was a new development of spiritual life, and a new capacity for bodily action.—Murphy.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

PASTOR FISCH, of Paris, 1873:—The church in America must stand as one man against Masonry or be destroyed.

REV. JOEL SWARTZ, D. D., a renouncing Mason:—Its (Freemasonry's) religion is anti-Christian... Its prayers are blasphemous... Its use of the Bible is sacrilegious... The whole is a compound of Judaism and paganism.

MOSES STUART, Professor in Andover Theological Seminary, Mass., 1834:—For a long time I neither knew nor cared about the subject; but recent attention to it has filled me with astonishment; and as to somethings contained in it, with horror. The trifling with oaths and with the awful name of the ever blessed God, is a feature which I cannot contemplate but with the deepest distress.

JOHN WESLEY, June, 1773:—I went to Ballymena and read a strange tract that professes to discover "the inmost recesses of Freemasonry," said to be "translated from the French original lately published at Berlin." I incline to think it is a genuine account. Only if it be, I wonder the author is suffered to live. If it be, what an amazing banter upon all mankind is Freemasonry.—N. Y. Christian Advocate, February, 1884.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL:—I know no Temperance, Odd-fellow or Freemason fraternity that does not recognize a brotherhood with the world. "They are of the world, they speak of the world and the world heareth them." Christians, though in the world, are not of it. Any union, then, for moral purposes with the world that brings us to commune religiously with it, by the laws and usages of the institution itself, is opposed to the law and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

CHARLES G. FINNEY:—God demands and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion.

NATHANIEL COLVER, former pastor Tremont Temple, Boston:—I am free to say that it is my deliberate opinion that the vicious character of Masonry and its guilt-concealing and barbarous oaths are such, as not only to release all from their bonds, but also to lay upon them the solemn obligation to tear off its covering and expose its enormity. I regard it as Satan's masterpiece, a terrible snare to men. It sits at this moment as a nightmare on all the moral energies of our government, and utterly paralyzes the arm of justice.

DWIGHT L. MOODY:—Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges or have some darling sin they will not give up.

HENRY TATEM, an eminent Baptist pastor, Providence, R. I., 1832:—It was about fourteen years ago that I was first initiated into the lodge. Within a few months after, I advanced to the Royal Arch degree, and sometime after I took the degrees of Knighthood, as they are called. I well remember the horror of my feelings when the bandage was taken from my eyes and I found myself partly naked, with men standing around me pointing at me the implements of death, and a human skull was handed me to drink from, and I was required to repeat words, awful in themselves, and which I cannot distinctly recollect, but which I believe to have been the same I find given in the explanation of that ceremony in Bernard's Light on Masonry. From that time I absented myself from the lodge and chapter. My mind was afterwards led by degrees to an examination into Masonry, which I am now satisfied is repugnant to the spirit of the religion of Christ.

JOSEPH COOK:—I do abhor the selfish, clannish spirit of secret societies.

WILLIAM OTTERBEIN, founder of the church of the United Brethren in Christ:—A Freemason cannot be a Christian.

BISHOP WARBURTON:—Each of the heathen gods, beside the worship paid to him in public, had a secret worship to which none were admitted but those who were prepared by previous ceremonies.

RICHARD S. STORRS, D. D., pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn:—My judgment and feeling are both strongly opposed to the secret lodge system. I heartily agree with what Dr. Howard Crosby has so forcibly said about it.

CARDINAL MCCABE, Dublin:—Secret societies, which seem to possess a fatal charm for our people, have from time to time drawn thousands of misguided youths within the fatal circle from which there is no escape.

REV. LEEBEUS ARMSTRONG:—Among the various stratagems of Satan in opposition to God and holiness, and for the purpose of destroying the souls of men, the institution of speculative Freemasonry holds a pre-eminent rank.

HENRY G. LUDLOW, pastor Spring St. Presbyterian Church, New York, 1829:—I can hardly think that any candid and intelligent Master Mason can seriously assert that Masonry should be kept up. For my own part I have ever been disgusted with its nonsensical ceremonies, and ashamed of myself for submitting to them.

GEORGE F. PENTECOST, D. D., pastor of Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, editor of "Words and Weapons":—I would do almost anything in my power to help on the work of rescuing all Christan men from the "grip" of Masonry and all other secret and unchristian societies. I believe that Masonry is an incalculable evil and essentially anti-Christ in its principles and influence.

H. L. HASTINGS:—Freemasonry is the one institution of this country that will not bear investigation. Schools are inspected; churches throw their doors open and invite the strictest scrutiny; political parties are examined, searched and riddled if anything like corruptness is seen or suspected in connection with them; all these institutions simply ask a fair field and no favor.

REV. J. E. ROY, D. D., Secretary American Missionary Association:—A man is not fit to be a jurymen who has taken these Masonic oaths and holds to them. Such a man is not competent to be a constable or a justice of the peace. He has disqualified himself practically and really, for he has by these oaths perjured himself for the one side or the other, and so is unable to do justly in his official relation between man and man.

REV. JAMES H. BROOKES, D. D., editor of the "Truth," and pastor of Washington Avenue Presbyterian Church, St. Louis:—It would give me pleasure to aid you in your work of seeking to bring Christians out from entangling alliances with secret societies. It seems to me that the positive injunction of the Holy Ghost, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," applies particularly to those disciples of our Lord who have been led into such societies.

THE BISHOP OF BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND:—Freemasonry is built upon the basis of a natural religion having for its foundation the honor and worship of the Supreme Architect of the Universe, but excluding the divine Incarnation and the mysteries of human redemption. Whilst using the sacred Scriptures, as Freemasonry it ignores the divine doctrines of the Christian faith. Pretending to a special and progressive illumination it resembles, and through several of its writers even claims descent from the secret societies of Pagan Egypt, Greece and Samothrace.

REV. HENRY JONES:—On what then does the whole superstructure of Freemasonry rest but a base fabrication of wicked men, who in some dark and apostate age of the world, have risen up, united into a secret society and darkly handed down their inventions to flatter us to believe that their institution is good as having originated among wise and good men; and being ignorant of the manner in which their false pretensions would be exposed, have told us that it was established on certain specified facts and events, which by looking at them carefully, and comparing them with our Bible, we find never had existence?

CHARLES C. FOOTE:—What would the introduction of Christ into Mohammedanism be, but its annihilation? And thus would it be with Masonry.

REV. THOMAS H. STOCKTON, D. D.:—Religion is as open as the sky and bright as the sun. As a man, an American, and a Christian, I love true manhood, true Americanism and true Christianity too well to approve of secret institutions of any kind.

L. L. HAMLINE, Bishop M. E. Church, in his diary, 1848:—"North Ohio Conference has progressed very rapidly till this time, but Masonry and Odd fellowship have arrested us." At another time: "I have enjoyed and suffered much during its session. Masonry and Odd-fellowship, a bane in the midst of us, have done us much evil."—Life, pp. 323, 4.

A. M. MILLIGAN, D. D.:—Thus I have shown that Masonic oaths and obligations are not obligatory; that God has no part in them; that they are a profanation of his ordinance of the oath, and a usurpation of the prerogative of government under the wrath of an insulted God and the ban of outraged society; a great sin to make them but no sin to break them.

REV. J. P. LITTLE, D. D.:—We could fill a volume with extracts of the same tenor, showing, as these have shown, that Freemasonry is a distinct and positive religion with a promise of salvation; yet rejecting and denying the Lord Jesus; a religion which claims to have borrowed its principles and rites from those heathen institutions so abhorrent to God and corrupting to men.

REV. JOSHUA BRADLEY, a renouncing Mason:—A lying spirit is abroad, and speaks through all Masonic presses, and this spirit influences all who hate the truth, and will make them wax worse and worse, till sudden destruction shall overwhelm those workers of iniquity, to the astonishment of every beholder. Then Masonry will rise no more to trouble Zion, and spread delusion and death amid civilized nations.

C. B. WARD, missionary in India:—When men get saved out here they get out of the lodge of necessity. We are personally acquainted with a barrister, a doctor, a locomotive fireman, a station-master on a railway, a principal of a high school, a commissary officer, a military officer, and others who when saved at once quit the lodge for Christ's sake without any one saying much to them. The evil of the institution is too apparent to need pointing out in India.

JOSEPH S. CHRISTMAS, Pastor Bowers Presbyterian Church, New York, 1830:—If these remarks should meet the eye of any follower of the Redeemer who still worships at the altar of Masonry, I beg him once more to consider whether, imposed on by the mock solemnities of the lodge and the pompous pretensions of the craft, he is not really attempting to effect a concord between Christ and Belial; and whether he does not owe it to the souls of Masons, to the honor of the church of Christ, and to the good of mankind, to come out and be separate.

DRS. LEONARD WOODS, EBENEZER PORTER and THOMAS H. SKINNER, Professors at Andover to the Massachusetts Legislature:—Praying for a full investigation into the nature, language, ceremonies, and form of rehearsing extra-judicial oaths in Masonic bodies; and if found to be such as the Memorialists describe them, that a law may be passed prohibiting the future administration of Masonic, and such other extra-judicial oaths, as tend to weaken the sanctions of civil oaths in courts of justice; and pray also for the repeal of the charter granted by this Commonwealth to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts.

REV. MOSES THATCHER:—Our Saviour declared to the Jewish high priest, "I spake openly to the world; and in secret have I said nothing." What now would be thought of the church if she should "tyle" her doors, impose obligations in secret, and place a perpetual seal upon the lips of her members? Would it any longer be believed that her sole object is to promote the religion of the Gospel? Now if the church, which is the purest body on earth, could not and would not be trusted as a secret society, who can blame conscientious and judicious men for drawing the conclusion that any secret society, of whatever description, is altogether unnecessary and cannot exist without becoming an object of suspicion, if not an engine of wickedness.

ALBERT BARNES, 1849:—Any good cause, I think, can be promoted openly; any secret association is liable, at least, to abuse and danger.

REV. JOHN TODD, Pittsfield, Mass.:—Unhesitatingly I give my decided disapprobation of what I deem secret societies in college and elsewhere. I have never known any good results from them which could not have been attained in some other more appropriate way, and I have known great evils resulting from them.

HOWARD CROSBY, Chancellor University of New York, 1870:—We have no hesitation in writing secret societies among the quackeries of the earth.

Idem, 1866:—The secret lodge system belongs to despotisms and not to democracies. Whatever it is not babyish is dangerous.

REV. MATTHEW L. R. FERRINE, D. D., Auburn Theological Seminary, Rev. JOEL PARKER and Rev. CHAS. E. EDDY:—Having formerly associated with Freemasons, we deem it our duty, publicly to declare that the system of Freemasonry is in our judgment, of a tendency on the whole pernicious to the moral habits, and dangerous to the civil and religious institutions of our country.

REV. LEVI CHASE, Fall River, Mass.:—The question has been asked by Masons, who wish to asperse the characters of those who have renounced Masonry, "Why did not they renounce it before?" For one, I will give them the reason why I did not. The Masonic oaths locked my tongue in silence—death, in all its horrid shapes and frightful forms, stared me in the face—I considered the oaths binding.

REV. C. D. BURLINGHAM, in history of the Genesis M. E. Conference, 1860:—This new element of discord (Odd fellowship) began to introduce itself in our church, professedly as a mutual insurance company against temporal want, and a newly discovered and remarkably successful Gospel appliance for bringing the world, reformed and saved into the church. But our people very naturally looked upon it with suspicion, dreading its power as a secret agency acting through affiliated societies, and doubting its utility as a financial scheme. They feared it would drag the church, debased and corrupted, into the world.

REV. JOEL MANN, a renouncing Mason:—Although portions of the Gospel are interwoven with its forms, I conceive that Masonry presents false grounds of hope; leads men to depend on their own defective righteousness;—to expect the favor of God without the interposition of a Redeemer, and even without repentance; and thus has a most injurious influence on their eternal interests. Under the most favorable circumstances, which in any place, have attended Masonry, it has occasioned a great waste of time and money, which might and ought to have been employed for better purposes. And furthermore, it interferes materially with domestic religious duties.

REV. AARON LELAND, formerly Lieut. Governor of Vermont and Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge (to a Baptist association):—He stated that the first objection which presented itself to his mind was the practice of praying for the soul of a brother Mason after he had been dead two, three, and sometimes four days—that he persisted in the practice for a short season to the injury of his conscience—that it was a Romish custom, and he never would preach at the burial of a Mason when Masonic forms and customs were attended to—that he never would preach to a lodge of Masons as such, and that he was ashamed that he had ever participated in the principles and practices of the institution.

ELDER DAVID BERNARD:—I solemnly renounce all fealty to Masonry, and do most earnestly beseech my brethren in Christ Jesus, of every name, to come out and bear unequivocal testimony against it. Think, O think, dear Christians, that hundreds and thousands of precious and immortal souls will be lost forever, unless they return and repent, but that the name of the precious Jesus is rejected, your Saviour, your precious and adorable Saviour taken away—the cause of your bleeding Redeemer injured—the hands of the wicked strengthened, and the Almighty God dishonored! And O, let me entreat you in the mercy and bowels of Jesus Christ, to reflect that you have to answer for the blood of those who shall find also, when it shall be forever too late, that Masonry is not a Saviour!

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 10, 1887.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS OF CHURCHES AND CHRISTIANS.

OFFICIAL CALL.

Pursuant to instructions, and in humble reliance upon Almighty God for wisdom, and upon the Christian patriotism of our fellow citizens for co-operation and support, we have secured Hershey Music Hall, Chicago, Ill., and hereby announce that a Congress of Churches and Christians will assemble at 9:30 A. M., on the 30th day of March, 1887, and continue its sessions two days and evenings, to consider the nature and principles of the secret lodge system and its influence on the Christian religion and civil liberty, and to take what steps may seem proper, after prayer and due consideration.

The committee have learned with satisfaction of the action of several sympathizing bodies in appointing representatives, and are in receipt of the names of over fifty delegates already chosen.

Every Conference, Presbytery, Association, Council, Church, Educational Institution, or other body favoring this Congress, is respectfully urged to at once provide for a representation in its meeting. Let the names of delegates appointed, or who shall be chosen, and the names of all persons intending to be present be forwarded at once to Rev. L. N. Stratton, West Division post-office, Chicago, Ill., so that entertainment may be provided for those who desire, and a roll of members begun.

CALVIN W. PRITCHARD, Chairman of Com.
L. N. STRATTON, Secretary.

THE CONGRESS.

JOSEPH COOK AND JOHN G. WHITTIER.

We give below extracts from letters just received from these distinguished Americans. Mr. Cook speaks at the West, in April, though he says he "may" be prevented from attending; this leaves a possibility that he may attend.

Mr. Whittier is in his eightieth year. Though absent in body he will be present in spirit; and as the swan's last song is sweetest, we shall hope the echoes of his sweet sounding lyre will reverberate in the convention of March 30.

THE LECTURER'S LETTER.

DEAR PRES. BLANCHARD:—I wish well to your convention called under approval of Pres. McCosh, Dr. Storrs, Dr. Talmage, Dr. Herrick Johnson and many other distinguished men, to discuss the influence of the secret lodge system on Christianity and civil liberty. My merciless preoccupation with public work here and elsewhere may prevent my attendance, but this letter is at your disposal. I hope all sides of your large and intricate subject will be thoroughly discussed. I shall examine carefully any documents that express the opinion of your convention. Yours truly, JOSEPH COOK.

THE POET'S LETTER.

OAK KNOLL, DANVERS, MASS., Feb. 13, 1887.

MY DEAR OLD FRIEND:—I am glad to hear from thee once more this side of the river. As one of the tried and valiant speakers for freedom I have always remembered thee. As regards the secret societies, I have always kept aloof from them. I can see no good in them to compensate for the real or possible evil. . . . Ever thy friend,

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

DR. J. B. WALKER DEAD.

The light of another great name in the church of God has faded from earth. Sabbath evening at 9 o'clock Dr. Walker passed away quietly amid the circle of his weeping friends, at Wheaton. For some eight or ten years he has been too feeble to engage in any considerable public work, such as have occupied the strength and zeal of an unusually active and useful life. His final sickness came on some two weeks ago; but in the struggle which overcame a feeble frame, the mind was unclouded, and "the star of the unconquered will" never set. Dr. Walker was a Christian reformer in the best and noblest sense. He was for Christ, and against all that opposed itself to the Redeemer's reign. Slavery, intemperance, and the lodge he combated both in the pulpit and in the press from the sure ground of Christian truth. His work must, therefore, endure while truth maintains her eternal years. His latest work for our reform was as president of the National Association when he had the pleasure of receiving from Mr. Carpenter the keys of the N. C. A. building, and of responding to that munificence with an address fitly expressing the gratitude not only of those intimately engaged in the reform, but of millions of others, even of generations yet to be, who should be blessed by the efforts then made for the truth of God and the honor of Jesus Christ among men. An extended notice of Dr. Walker appeared in these columns in December, 1883, with a portrait; a further notice of his long life and eminent labors for the church, in ways of practical, private benevolence, public ministrations, and especially as the author of some of our best and most widely read works on religious philosophy, may be expected next week. The arrangements for the funeral, as announced Monday morning, were services at Wheaton Tuesday forenoon and final interment in Mansfield by the side of his first wife, and amid the scenes of his longest continuous labor as pastor.

JOSEPH COOK introduced the daughter of the principal Omaha chief, Bright Eyes, to his great audience in Tremont Temple, Feb. 21st, and she gave a most extraordinary address. If her facts are true (and they seem so) they sustain fully Mr. Cook's indictment of our Government for "a century of dishonor." Still it must be remembered that Indians, like other men, are depraved, and that our Government and people have made honest and earnest efforts for their good, as witness Gen. Grant's Quaker commissions. The marplots are depraved frontier whites and more depraved politicians.

WHEATON COLLEGE CHURCH (Rev. Mr. Chittenden, pastor) last Sabbath appointed seven of its members delegates to the Congress of Churches and Christians. Prominent Free Methodists and others in Wheaton express their full purpose to attend. In Galesburg, Ill., the large and venerable First Church is being moved by some of its members to send delegates. We hope by all means Rev. Mr. Thain, pastor, will have delegates appointed. A student in Chicago Theological Seminary (Cong'l.) distributed circulars which were gladly received by all but one, who said, "What is the matter with secret societies." "That is what we are going to see," said Mr. Ekman.

JOKING ABOUT HELL.—At Aurora last week we asked an intelligent citizen how the Universalist church there prospered. He answered: "We changed our name to 'The People's Church' like the churches of Swing and Thomas. We've knocked the bottom out of hell, and as a denomination, we are no longer needed." "My good friend," we replied, "in one point you are mistaken. Universalists have not knocked the bottom out of hell for it never had any but was always 'THE BOTTOMLESS PIT!'" Who can joke about hell and retain any respect for Jesus Christ and his terrifically solemn utterances concerning it? Or Milton's—

"Within whose lowest deep a lower deep,
Still threatening to devour me opens wide."

THE GALESBURG SEMI-CENTENNIAL.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR.

The Semi-Centennial of the First Church of Christ in Galesburg, Ill., closed Feb. 27. It has furnished a magnificent series of meetings. The ladies of the church laid covers for 600 guests in the rink Friday evening, and the galleries were crowded for the post-prandial speeches. Mr. Selden Gale and Dr. Bateman were down for speeches but did not appear. Mrs. George Avery, Mrs. Professor Losey and Mrs. Jane G. Johnson read deeply interesting articles, and ex-Professor Erastus Wilcox and Mr. Marcus Belden addressed the great crowd. Geo. Davis, the honest and popular College treasurer, who complained that his birth-place was ignored, said that "by his special request" he was born in Ireland, "which of course brought down the house. But genuine Irish wit was only the seasoning of a set of personal and social reminiscences, like the music of Caryl described by Ossian of his native island as "pleasant yet mournful to the soul." Henry R. Sanderson, among the first mayors of the city and an early graduate of the College, gave a very eloquent address in which he said that the principles of the founders of the church were sound and correct; and though his life had swerved from them, he had never doubted their correctness or that they would finally prevail.

E. Payson Williams closed the evening banquet with a brief but direct and pleasant address. Mr. Williams is one of the best, if not the best, lawyers in Galesburg. He spoke feelingly of the early revival meetings which he attended when a boy and declared his conviction that the brilliant rise and progress of the city was owing to the religious lives and principles of its founders. Prof. Geo. Churchill presided at the banquet, and introduced the speakers, after filling with agreeable reminiscences the time allotted to Mr. Gale, who was called away.

On Saturday, Feb. 26, Prof. Comstock presided. Prof. Geo. Churchill gave the first twenty-five and Mary Allen West, of the Union Signal, of Chicago, the last twenty-five years of the colony and the church. Prof. Comstock followed in an able statistical paper, and the services were adjourned till evening when Prof. Churchill read a letter from Jas. Holyoke of Denver. He was followed by Mrs. C. A. Webster who read an agreeable letter from her sister, Mrs. Prof. Perkins (Mary Farnham) of Burlington, Vt. These two ladies represented the family of Mr. Eli Farnham, much beloved by the citizens; and the bountiful and elegant banquet owed much to the energy of Mrs. Webster, whose husband is a leading business man in the city and elder in the church. Mrs. Webster was followed by E. A. Bancroft, Esq., who read a letter from a former pastor.

On Sabbath morning, Feb. 27th, an excellent historical sermon was given by the pastor of the church, Rev. A. R. Thain, and Rev. Mr. Worrall represented the Presbyterian and Rev. Mr. Bradshaw the Congregational churches, colonies from the First Church. They were followed by Rev. Dr. Joseph E. Roy ("Pilgrim") in one of the best, if not the best, speeches that gentleman ever made. One of the speakers said of him at the close that the speech was like the speaker,—"whose character includes urbanity and eloquence; the courage of a general with the gentleness of a saint." After giving a humorous sketch of early times and persons in the college Dr. Roy said: "We have been these three days celebrating the founders, especially the departed founders, of this church and of Knox College which it originated. But, in their high abodes, they would be more pleased to see us carrying out their principles than to hear our praises of their lives. (Suppressed applause.) They had come from New York at a time when those reforms which, under God, are to save our nation were at furnace heat, and in those reforms they had founded this church and college." And the speaker exhorted us to imitate the examples and copy the virtues of the men we have been praising. He specified particularly their "just condemnation of secret societies, which had revived since their overthrow and were now endangering the substantial interests of the country, especially at the South." And though of the crowd that filled the large church,—galleries, aisles and all,—a very large proportion were members of secret societies, such was the wisdom and spirit with which Dr. Roy spoke, not a frown was visible on the faces of the multitude, nothing but thoughtful enjoyment. The principal Galesburg paper, the Republican Register, gives a full and fair report of the occasion. [Another address which is of more immediate interest to the Cynosure readers will appear next week.]

—Rev. Henry Cogswell, whom many of our Ohio friends well remember for his candid and honorable renunciation of the sin and folly of Masonry while a pastor in that State, has been for two or three years living near this city. He has lately accepted a call to the Disciple church at Fairfield, Iowa, and has removed thither.

—Bro. Geo. T. Dissette, who is conducting a mission at Pony Creek, Brown county, Kansas, near Sabetha, is corresponding with Gov. St. John to secure from him a testimony on the lodge question, to add its light to the bright galaxy of eminent men who have spoken for God and truth against the evil. Bro. Dissette was also expecting to lecture at the mission against the lodge last Monday evening.

—Through Miss Sarah Stevens of Batavia, New York, whose intimate acquaintance with the family of William Morgan before his abduction in 1826 has been of much assistance in tracing the scattered members of that household, the Cynosure has been able to obtain from Mrs. George Spencer of Oregon, a grand-daughter of Morgan, a full account of the family and the names of the living members. This account will be of great interest to our readers, and will be soon printed.

—We are happy to note in the Christian Worker that its editor, Calvin W. Pritchard, has recovered from a prolonged and very serious illness, and is again at his post. The rule of the Friends, which is a great leveller of distinctions, prevents the use of any term in connection with this excellent man's name, which would be like D. D., in other churches. His calm and judicious service as chairman of the committee on the Christian Congress will some day be appreciated. By some mistake we at first published him as editor of the Friends' Review, as well as the Worker. The Review is a Philadelphia paper.

The Emperor William has made his acknowledgments to the Pope for his material assistance in carrying the late German elections in favor of the war policy of the government. The royal order prescribing the form of oath to be taken by Catholic bishops in Prussia has also appeared. Each bishop must swear to be submissive, loyal, obedient and devoted to the King of Prussia; to inculcate in his clergy and the people of his diocese veneration and fidelity toward the King, love of the fatherland, and obedience to the state's laws, and to abstain from maintaining either within or outside of the country any relations prejudicial to the security of the country.

THE CONGRESS OF CHURCHES AND CHRISTIANS.

That the proposed gathering named is to be a success there remains no longer any doubt. First, a unity of action among the anti-secret denominations of the United States has largely been secured. There are ten or twelve of these bodies whose aggregate membership number over one and a half millions of people. There are besides estimated to be as many more Christians who are in full sympathy with the Congress, and will represent themselves.

Second. The movement is to represent no one denominational hobby or individual specialist. It has broadened into all anti-secret Christian brotherhoods, and combined its forces "to consider the nature and principles of the secret lodge system, and its influence on the Christian religion and civil liberty."

Third. Public attention, long called to the great evil of multiplied secret societies which have grown into conspiracies in our land, now begins to awaken, as conspiracy combines with conspiracy to subjugate every material interest, political influence, civil court, and even Christian character and standing to its dictation and behest. Edmund Burke, more than a hundred years ago, said, "When bad men combine the good must unite, else they will fall, one by one, an unpitied sacrifice in a contemptable struggle." People begin to see that if any considerable number of men secretly combine in any community to promote their own personal interests, distorting capital or labor, demand or supply out of their own natural and current commercial values, or consorting for mutual assistance in the securement of private ends regardless of the general effect upon community, such is the selfishness of the human heart, that the combination formed would be a standing menace to community, and the balance of the people will be compelled to form similar combinations or become a prey. But society divided up into conflicting combinations, under oaths binding to profound secrecy and protection, is destruction from that hour to free government. Abraham Lincoln said, "This country must become all slave or all free." But no community, either in a state of assault or siege, can be free.

Fourth. There is a very wide spread and growing sentiment that the lodge is stealing the breath from a comatose Christianity, is unawares capturing the ministers and members of the church of our Lord, and is tightening up, finger by finger, the grip of a hand which has been carelessly laid upon the throats of municipal and civil governments, until it has been necessary, as in Pennsylvania, for the sovereign State to arise and hang twenty-two Mollie McGuire's, or as in Ohio and Illinois, the State militia were called out to vindicate the rights of private citizens in their accustomed pursuits, and to defend the majesty of the law.

Fifth. The Committee of Arrangements are representatives of five different denominations. They propose to have fifteen closely compacted, clearly proven and brilliantly illustrated addresses, of thirty minutes each, delivered by as many representative men, of various denominations, and ready for the daily press, and also for publication as separate chapters in book form, for future reference and study.

Sixth. There have been already secured to deliver these addresses, four college presidents, two denominational editors, two Doctors of Divinity who will represent nine hundred thousand Swedish and German Lutherans in this country, one "Honorable" gentleman from Indiana, and one bishop. Particulars will be given later.

Seventh. Free entertainment can be positively warranted to but a limited number, but special rates are made with convenient places of public entertainment very little above the cost of living at home, which will be furnished to delegates and visitors.

After much care, faithful work, and extensive correspondence, the promise of a large and enthusiastic meeting is abundant.

L. N. STRATTON,
Secretary of Committee.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The attempt and failure in the House of Representatives to pass the Dependent Pension bill over the President's veto, has been the sensation of a week at the Capital. Crowds of spectators filled the galleries, and the debate, which was quite interesting, at times became exciting by interruptions, personalities and stinging retorts. There was much noise and confusion, and the scenes upon the floor were such as have not within a long while been witnessed there. Three hundred members were present at the time the vote was taken, and 200 affirmative votes were therefore necessary to pass the bill over the veto. But the final vote was 175 yeas to 125 nays, which showed that 29 Democrats changed their votes since the bill originally passed.

It was a courageous act on the part of the President to veto this bill, knowing the hostile sentiment that it would arouse against him throughout the country. It is conceded that the Democrats also who first voted for the measure and then determined to sustain the President, exhibited a good deal of courage, although it will be charged in the case of some of the Northern members who changed their votes that their motives were not wholly disinterested.

Senator John Sherman, who has ably presided in the Senate since the death of Vice President Hendricks, has resigned to allow the Republican majority to elect his successor, and the choice has fallen upon Mr. Ingalls of Kansas. The importance of this position to the party interests of the Republicans is not to be denied, as the president of the Senate will become President should Mr. Cleveland die. But the selection must be regarded as one unworthy of the Republicans, who, though they have not many keener or shrewder men, might certainly find a number in their ranks whose abilities, statesmanship, and especially whose moral convictions and regard for the great principles which make us a worthy people make them far better representatives of the party.

Work is accumulating with great rapidity upon the President's hands as the Congressional session draws to a close. He remains at his desk long into the night examining bills and transacting other business. His determination last year not to go to the Capitol during the last hours to hurriedly sign bills which he had not been permitted to examine, gave great satisfaction then, and he will doubtless adhere to the same course at the approaching adjournment. The best men in Congress of both sides thoroughly approved of his resolve not to make laws by affixing his name to measures which he had no chance to learn anything about.

The President has said in the last few days that he did not see any special necessity for calling an extra session of the Fiftieth Congress, though it is possible he may ask the Senate, which is a permanently organized body, to remain in session beyond the fourth of March. There are some important nominations which he wants to submit, but which he is not sure he will have time to decide upon before the end of this session. Among them are the Interstate Commerce nominations and those for Secretary of the Treasury and United States Treasurer.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

MRS. MARY E. RANDALL JONES.

To the Cynosure, Mrs. M. E. R. Jones of this city is no stranger. Taking the risk of meeting her disapproval, I venture to speak of her ardent advocacy of anti-secrecy principles, also, to introduce her to the friends of the cause, feeling confident that they will esteem it a pleasure. Mrs. Jones, although possessing some wealth, is entirely free from ostentation in every respect. In her estimation the humblest person is as worthy of attention as the most exalted, provided he be honest. Between her and the lodgeman, however, be he rich or poor, there exists only antipathy. Indeed, she is a veritable Nemesis to the lodge, and in her attacks against it is as fearless as logical. Munificent in her donations, yet she is always judicious in placing them. So well posted is she in the work that without solicitation she knows where assistance is most needed.

As owner of one of the finest anti-secret libraries in the country her resources of information are, comparatively, almost unlimited. Neither pains nor money is spared in securing the oldest as well as the latest works on the subject published. More than one devout follower of old Hiram she appalls by giving them the various signs and grips, which, in their astonishment they inadvertently acknowledge, in exclaiming:

"Where—where did you get that?"

"Is your husband a Mason?"

Her indescribable sarcastic "No," immediately turns their astonishment to anger and mortification, especially when she informs them that it is "book-learning," which they, in spite of themselves, have acknowledged to be genuine.

Upon learning that any young man contemplates taking his first or advanced degree in any order, he is immediately supplied with revelations made by seceders. The correct descriptions of the initiations which he has undergone convinces him of the truthfulness of those he had intended to go through. In this way she has been instrumental, doubtless, in saving more than one from slavery.

By her acquaintances Mrs. Jones is acknowledged to be a wonderfully level-headed woman, which is demonstrated by her successful management of extensive city property. In legal matters she is well posted, and is "a thorn in the flesh" to "brow-beating" lawyers with whom it has been her lot to have much to do in protecting her property from encroachment. To oppose her the shrewdest of them are well aware that it is like Greek meeting Greek, and she almost always proves herself a feminine Hercules.

Fortunate, indeed, is the cause in having in its ranks one so earnest and enterprising as Mrs. Jones, who, so far as I can ascertain, is the most active and self-sacrificing anti-secretist in this city. When asked if she is not afraid that her property as well as her person will be endangered because of her radical position against the lodge, her courageous reply always is, "Goodness, no! I'm not afraid, God will care for me, and if necessary I am willing to sacrifice all I possess for this cause."

For many years Mrs. Jones has considered the lodge an evil, having seen some of her poorest tenants suffer on account of it, and who, but for her kindness would, perhaps, have become paupers. It was not, however, until Edmond Ronayne visited this city, giving expositions of the third degree of Freemasonry, in Rev. David McFall's church on Chambers street and in Music Hall, that she became aware of an organized effort to suppress it. Had it not been for Mrs. Jones, the writer might have been ignorant up to this very day of the existence of such an organization. In his turn, he has been instrumental in calling the attention of others to it. So the good work goes on. It is contagious. Oh! that the world might catch the disease. Its whole social and political system would become purified thereby.

"WANTED.—BY AN ODD-FELLOW."

Without doubt Boston is as greatly afflicted with lodgism as any place in the country. Nearly every man is bedecked with the insignia of the rival lodges, and there is more rivalry and competition between these abominations here than is suspected by some, who, were they not so blinded by selfishness, would notice. In this case Beelzebub is divided against himself. I hope we shall soon see his fall. Many individuals are serving two, yes, a dozen or more, lodge masters. How some of them manage to pay their dues is somewhat of a mystery. Men who seem utterly unable to pay their honest debts seldom fail to meet their lodge obligations.

There is scarcely a chance for an independent and honest man to live because of lodge partiality. Many of the weak-minded, who have no affinity for Masonry nor Odd-fellowship, are induced to join for the sake of help. Not long ago the writer was earnestly solicited to use his influence in forming the embryo of a newly "blown" secret benevolent society in a well-known town in this vicinity, for which he was to receive seventy-five dollars. The pleasure of refusing the request, which was made by a prominent Mason, was worth the whole amount, and he was glad to pay for the privilege in that way. Besides he received more strength by the refusal than would have been imparted by the bread and butter which the money would have procured.

The appended advertisement, clipped from the Boston Globe, shows, like straws, which way the wind blows, and, substantially, is evidence of the real motives many, if not all, have in joining the lodge, much depending, of course, upon the amount invested in these charitable (?) insurance companies. The person advertising, in this case, is, apparently unsophisticated. In so openly seeking the privileges promised by the lodge, he manifests little or no diplomacy in protecting it from ridicule. This must have a tendency to disgust many of his brethren in better circumstances. Well, I don't blame them, it is enough to shame as well as disgust a hog, even though it savors of downright hoghishness:

"WANTED.—By an Odd-fellow with a family, a situation drive team or care of horses," etc., etc.

D. F. MATHEWS,

THE HOME.

MARCH.

The stormy March is come at last,
With wind, and cloud, and changing skies;
I hear the rushing of the blast,
That through the snowy valley flies.

Ah, passing few are they who speak,
Wild, stormy month, in praise of thee!
Yet, though thy winds are loud and bleak,
Thou art a welcome month to me.

For thou, to northern lands, again
The glad and glorious sun doth bring,
And thou hast joined the gentle train,
And wear'st the gentle name of Spring.

And, in thy reign of blast and storm,
Smiles man a long, bright, sunny day,
When the changed winds are soft and warm,
And heaven puts on the blue of May.

Then sing aloud the gushing rills
In joy that they again are free,
And brightly leaping down the hills,
Renew their journey to the sea.

The year's departing beauty hides
Of wintry storms the sullen threat;
But in thy sternest front abides
A look of kindly promise yet.

Thou bring'st the hope of those calm skies,
And that soft time of sunny showers,
When the wide bloom, on earth that lies,
Seems of a brighter world than ours.

CHURCH TOILETS WHICH DRIVE MANY WORKERS AWAY.

Nobody can object to the love of dress which most ladies have. There must even be the utmost charity in judgment for girls and women whose lives are a prolonged struggle to dress as well as their more fortunate sisters. It is the first duty of the sex to look as well as they can, however unfortunate may be the passion for fine dress, which leads in some cases to illegitimate sacrifices. But why dress for church in garments so costly and of such variety that they must necessarily attract attention. The place is not adapted to such displays. They distract attention from church purposes. It is too much to say of any lady that she seeks attention to the sacrifice of that which should be devoted to book, or sermon, or prayer; that she airs her vanity when she should most show humility; that she wants to excite envy when the heart should be empty of all selfish and other personal considerations; but, surely, she does not dress in that manner altogether to please herself, and it is just possible that she takes to herself a somewhat irreligious satisfaction on making the discovery that no other lady has her costliness of plumage and her superiority of display.

It has been repeatedly stated that no poor and economically dressed man or woman can receive cordial treatment at any fashionable church, however clean and decent the dress may be. We do not believe this is so. There is, perhaps, as much Christian warmth and fellowship in fashionable as in other churches, though, of course, a radically bad dress would be more offensive in such a church than in a backwoods congregation, and more objectionable than a very costly one. But there are sensitive women whose thought is driven to church dress because of its noticeable expensiveness. They do not wish to be conspicuous for cheapness of apparel any more than a properly sensitive woman would wish to be conspicuous for the luxury carried on her back.

Rich dressing at church is impropriety, and, besides, it drives away from church many worthy people who would be glad to attend. That being fully understood—it being thoroughly known that such display amounts to selfishness, as well as love of adornment—there should be few ladies who will offend in that way.—N. Y. Graphic.

A HARLOT'S FASHION.

It is well known that many of the Parisian fashions are started by the fallen women who throng that gay capital, and these fashions clearly bear the impress of their origin. Satan himself would be puzzled to invent devices more deadly and devilish than many of the popular fashions of the present day; fashions which distort the form, compress the vital organs, cramp and maim the feet, disfigure the face, and rob the countenance of beauty and expression, to say nothing of the immodesty by which they are characterized, the extravagance which they entail. And yet Christian women follow these base-born and horrible customs, instead of obeying the precept which says, "Be not conformed to this world."

The following paragraph from The Nation gives the origin of one of the fashions which for wanton, causeless cruelty, is well worthy of the source from which it sprang.

"Some seven years ago there appeared in Paris, at a ball of the demi-monde, a woman wearing on her head-dress a dead bird. The bird had artificial eyes and its wings and tail were spread out so as to give it a life-like appearance. It was a small stuffed bird, not a bird's skin stretched on wires. Its introduction as an ornament in fashionable bad society was not received with much favor at first, although the wearer succeeded in attracting attention to herself by the singularity of her adornment. This was all that she desired or intended to accomplish by fastening a bird's corpse to her head-gear. She had not the slightest expectation that she would be imitated even by her immediate companions, still less that the whole world of fashionable good society in France, England and America would 'fall into line' at her heels. Probably her only thought was that the oddity of her costume would serve as a striking advertisement, and cause her to be talked of among the males and females of her kind.

"Strange indeed are the caprices of fashion. Seven years have passed by, and we find the eccentricity of a woman of the town becomes the craze of millinery—so great and deadly a craze that State legislatures are considering bills to prevent extinction of our song birds and all birds not too large to be worn on bonnets of women and children. Nothing more revolting to good taste can be imagined than the 'remains' of an animal fresh from the dissecting room of a taxidermist as an ornament for a lady's forehead. The very suggestion ought to excite horror and disgust, as well as pity for the slaughtered songsters of the grove."

How long will Christian women follow such leaders, and disgrace their womanhood by wearing the plumage of dead birds upon their heads, much as a savage warrior would wear the scalp of a woman at his belt as a token of his power and heroism! Away with such savagery, and let Christians no more dishonor their Master, nor desecrate the house of prayer by such trophies of cruelty and barbarism. Not one sparrow falls to the ground without our Father's notice—what does he whose tender mercies are over all his works, think of the head-gear which his professed worshippers wear?—The Safeguard.

WHO IS MOST TO BLAME.

Concerning the wholesale slaughter of innocent birds for millinery purposes according to the bad taste prevailing at present, the Woman's Journal holds forth as follows: "We should like to know: 1. Who shoots the little innocent, singing birds. 2. Who puts them on the market, and tempts the unthinking ladies to buy them? Not one woman in a thousand would take the life of a bird for self-adornment; but tastefully prepared and offered for her approval, she thoughtlessly buys and wears the beautiful wings and feathers of these little songsters. The demand is created by the supply in this as in many other cases. Let men desist from shooting, and women will desist from buying." This is well said. Women, it is true, are not wholly guiltless in the matter, but the chief cause lies with those who do the killing, and their instigators who in most cases, if not in all, are men. Yet, after all, it is well to remember that there is no excuse for wrong-doing.

NEATNESS IN DRESS AT HOME.

The importance of neat and tasteful house-dressing cannot be overestimated. The matron who appears before the members of her family in a shabby, soiled wrapper, and makes the excuse—if, indeed, she takes the trouble to make one at all—that "it is so much more comfortable," has little idea of the possible consequences of such a course. Could she but realize that her dress is an evil example to her daughters, and one productive of consequences that will reach far beyond her own span of life; that her husband and sons cannot fail to draw comparisons between her dress and that of the ladies they meet in other homes, and that these comparisons cannot fail to decrease their respect for her, she might be induced to give more attention to her personal appearance. Not even the burden of care and constant employment can furnish a sufficient excuse for careless personal habits, for few things are more important to the well-being of a family. There is an old saying to the effect that an untidy mother has disobedient children; and while neither parents nor children may realize the why or wherefore of it, yet there is always a lack of respect and an indifference to the authority of a mother who takes no pride in her personal appearance. And it is not the mother alone upon whose shoulders rests the burden of responsibility for home neatness and order in dress; the father has his duties to look after as well, and should never fail to insist upon the younger members of the family presenting themselves with well-kept hands, clean faces, neatly-brushed hair, and orderly dress, at least at every meal where the family assembles.—Brooklyn Magazine.

DRESS QUIETLY.

Be quiet in dress. In a day's travel on the railway one sees a good many people, and if he is a close observer, will find representatives of all classes of society. There are men and women whose very dress betrays their bad taste and ambition. They are fond of showy raiment, heavy jewelry, and a multitude of trappings. Everything is carefully, and in some cases ostentatiously, displayed. As they themselves measure other people by what they have on, they suppose that others will so judge of them; and hence their anxiety to make a public exhibition of their wardrobe. Whatever may be the pretensions, the social position of such persons, they lack true refinement. They are coarse and low in all their feelings, their pleasures and their aims. The real gentleman and lady, while not careless or indifferent to personal appearance, set no such store by it as to make it the index of worth and character. They know that pride, vanity, and utter want of virtue may be clothed in purple and fine linen, while the truest, noblest manliness may go in plain homespun. Hence they have learned not to judge by the outward appearance.—The Christian.

THE TORN BIBLE.

Upon the open, airy veranda of an Indian bungalow, in the early morning, is sitting a missionary wife with her two children. The elder child is a bright boy of five, the other a gentle little maiden who has not yet seen the second anniversary of her birthday. The mother is just now busy reading from a Telugu Bible, while every now and then she consults her English version, which she has also at hand, not feeling satisfied with her own interpretation of the Telugu, which is yet almost a new tongue to her. Presently some duty calls her within, and not having finished her daily portion, she lays both books upon a low teapoy by her side and passes into the house.

Scarcely has she entered the open door, when Nita is seized by a desire to know what has been interesting mamma all the time, while she and Bertie have been quietly playing, and whether there are pretty pictures in mamma's books. So, grasping the books in her soft, dimpled hands, the baby sits down on the veranda floor, and, opening one of them, begins turning the leaves as gently as she could, and soon a loosened leaf, falling from between the fairy fingers, is caught up by the breeze and carried away, just as mamma's returning footsteps are heard.

"Oh, mamma," cries Bertie, "see! Nita has torn your book."

"Why, Nita, you naughty, naughty child," hastily and rather sharply speaks the usually gentle mother, "mamma shall surely have to—" But catching sight of the frightened look and tear-filled eyes of her baby, the mother catches back the remainder of the hasty words she would have uttered, and her face flushes, her heart misgives her, as she recalls the almost angry feelings with which her breast was filled as she began to chide the little Nita. Stopping, she kissed the quivering rosebud mouth, saying in a changed and very gentle voice: "Mamma's little Nita didn't know, did she? But darling must not touch mamma's books without leave."

Turning to a lady acquaintance who had followed her out upon the veranda, she said, in an apologetic tone, with flushed face and filling eyes: "I am very sorry that I was so hasty and so nearly angry; but if an excuse may be offered, it is always annoying to have one's books injured, and it has always seemed to me almost, if not quite, a sin to tear a Bible."

Bertie, who had been standing thoughtfully by, now said:

"Mamma, do you think God is very angry with little sister for tearing a leaf from his holy Word?"

"No, my son; I cannot think that he is."

"Well, I am glad, for I surely thought that God must be very angry when you spoke so to Nita, and the tears stood in your eyes." And he gave a sigh of relief.

"Come, dear, we will see; maybe mamma can fasten the leaf, and then the book will be quite good again."

"Oh, mamma, the leaf has blown quite away; I tried to catch it, but the wind took it right over the wall, and, you know, you have told me ever so many times that I should never go beyond the gate."

"Yes, my dear boy, and I am glad that you have remembered to obey so well. But what leaf has been taken away? We will see. Ah! here is the place; it is the third chapter of the Gospel of John, with a few verses of the latter part of the second chapter. There is the whole Gospel truth on that leaf that is blown, no one knows whither, and—who knows?—it may fall into the hands of someone who can read Telugu, and be a blessing to him," she says, musingly, half-forgetful of Bertie, who is standing quietly by.

The lady visitor, who was still sitting within the window, heard every word spoken by the mother and son, and, with a half-dissatisfied sigh, said to herself: "Mrs. E—— is the queerest person I ever saw. Now there, that midget Nita has already forgotten her griefs, and is playing with her dolls, while her mother is still fretting over those few light words, and speaking as though it were a precious jewel or a purse of gold that had been lost. Heigho! I believe I'll get my Bible, if I can find it anywhere, and see what there is that is so wonderful in the third chapter of John that may prove such a blessing to him that reads."

And, rising, she went slowly in search of her neglected Bible. Let us hope that she found it; that she read the chapter referred to, not only once and carelessly, but often and thoughtfully, until she found the jewel which she knew not of, as possessing the pearl of great price.

We will now follow the leaf as the wind carried it away. Tossed over the wall, it went whirling down the road, attracting the attention of a group of naked Hindu children who were playing in the sand by the roadside.

"We will catch it," they cried; and, scampering away, laughing and screaming, the largest of the group was just about to seize it, when, whiff! came the wind, and, catching the fluttering leaf, carried it high out of the child's reach and away over the low roofs of the native houses, until it fell ignominiously upon a heap of rubbish in an adjacent alley. A poor widow, who was searching for any and everything of a combustible nature by which to make a fire to cook the family's daily rice, now saw the luckless leaf, and was just about to gather it into her basket, when again a puff of wind took it up, and this time, as though with more care, it gently fell at the feet of a young Hindu student, who, seeing that it was in his own language, picked it up and began to read. At first the words seemed to have but little or no meaning to him, for his thoughts had been somewhat disturbed; but reaching the words, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life," his attention was riveted. He read it again and again.

"Oh, how beautiful!" he cried. "This must be a part of the Englishman's sacred book. This must be a leaf from the Christian's Bible."

And although fascinated, he almost trembled with fear lest some of his bigoted heathen relatives should see him so eagerly perusing this bit of God's Word. Hastily thrusting it between the leaves of his book, he went on to school, for he was studying Sanscrit, with the hope of becoming a priest. Try as he might to stifle them, all through the day those beautiful words kept ringing in his ears. Day after day he read the words of the whole chapter, but none so impressed him as these two verses.

One evening, as he was about to take his meal, his young wife, coming into the room bearing two platters with his rice and curry, was about to withdraw that her lord might partake of the food which she had placed before him, when she heard him softly repeating these words. She looked up startled, for they were familiar to her, having often heard them from the missionary lady when she was a little girl and attended the mission school; and quickly there flashed through her mind another verse which had always been a favorite one of hers. And in a clear, brave voice she repeated, "We love him because he first loved us."

It was now the husband's turn to be startled. "Where did you learn that?" he asked.

"I learned what you repeated, what I have just said, and many others, at the mission school," replied she, timidly.

"They seem very good," he added, "and some day you may tell me more."

After this he often had her repeat verses to him that she had learned several years before in the school, and which she always had loved to remember, but feared to repeat, lest some of the family should overhear her. Now she felt glad that her young husband had learned and loved some of the sweet verses; but although she repeated many, none ever seemed quite so beautiful to him as those he had first learned from his treasured leaf.

Soon after this he told his wife that he meant to serve the Christian's God—a God who loved those who served him, instead of hating and visiting all manner of pestilence and disease upon those who bowed down to him, as the gods he had been taught to serve were said to do; and requiring all manner of horrid rites and ceremonies to allay their wrath and stay the hand of destruction—those hideous objects having four hands and one eye and features and forms writhed and tortured into all sorts of disgusting shapes and expressions, so well described by the Psalmist. He would no longer be a slave to those practices and superstitions, but was now one who was free indeed, having been made free through the truth. It was not until he had seen and talked with the good missionary that his old mother, who was the only other member of his direct household, was told of his determination to become a Christian, and of his wife's hope and desire to be baptized with him. Her grief, rage and terror knew no bounds. She covered her head with dust, tore her hair, and fairly gnashed her teeth in her wrath. Changing her tactics, she fell at his feet, clasping his knees with her withered arms, and besought him not to forsake her in her old age.

But failing to change her son's purpose of becoming a Christian, alike by her threats of the vengeance of the gods, or her own suicide, she left his home and became a street beggar, while he, after receiving Christian instruction, became a mission worker, and in his zeal to carry to his benighted and enslaved people the glorious gospel of peace and good-will, of love and forgiveness, in whose possession he found so much happiness, and lost that terrible fear of death which oppressed him like a horrible nightmare whenever India's dread evil, cholera, stalked abroad, and which showed him the first possibility of a happy home and loving family here upon earth, and a mansion prepared for him and his beyond the grave, within the hallowed presence of an ever-loving Father, Veriah became a wonderful aid to the missionaries. Through his earnest efforts, and the more retiring but devoted love and fellowship of his gentle wife, so many souls became "heirs with God and joint-heirs with Christ," that it seemed as if, for every word of prayer offered by the penitent mother, and every tear shed over her harshness to little Nita and her own impatience, a new soul was gathered into the kingdom of God.

But death has spread his dark wings over the home of Rev. E——, and little Nita has found a home among the angels. The sorrowful mother still keeps her torn Bible, and in place of the lost leaf there now lies a soft, bright curl; and often, as the mother looks upon this tress that once adorned the head of her darling child, the tears start afresh and a prayer falls upon her lips that the missing leaf may have been a message of life to some benighted soul.—Lutheran Observer.

When you find an unkind feeling toward another person rising in your heart, that is the time not to speak to a fellow-being, but to talk to God in prayer.

TEMPERANCE.

HOW THE SWISS DEAL WITH THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Some years ago, several towns in Sweden, notably Gothenburg, attempted to solve the problem of drunkenness by going into the retail liquor business themselves. All the saloons were closed, and the local authorities undertook to be the only sellers of strong drink. The Swedes are large consumers of ardent spirits and it was hoped that this experiment would result in checking drunkenness. The plan was much lauded soon after its adoption, but nothing has been heard about it lately. The Republic of Switzerland, however, is now trying it on a national scale. The distillers in that nation are required to sell all their products to the State. The alcoholic stimulants are manufactured under the oversight of government officials, who see to it that no poisonous ingredients are employed. Those who want liquor to drink must go to the officers appointed by the State, who are under bonds not to sell to individuals or families whose habits are intemperate. Of course this experiment will fail, as the only remedy for drunkenness is total prohibition. The dog's tail must be cut off close behind his ears. But it shows that the problem of how to best cure the evils of intemperance is world-wide, and that all civilized nations are beginning to grapple with it. These experiments, after they have failed, will educate the people to the necessity for sterner measures. It is idle to say that prohibition cannot be enforced, because throughout the Mohammedan world, spirit and wine drinking has been put a stop to for centuries. There is no drunkenness nor any consumption of ardent spirits in Mohammedan communities, except where there is what is called Christian traffic. European trades invariably introduce liquor into all commercial channels which they reach.—Demorest's Monthly.

A BLAST AGAINST BEER.

For some years a decided inclination has been apparent all over the country to give up the use of whisky and other strong alcohols, using as a substitute beer and other compounds. This is evidently founded on the idea that beer is not harmful, and contains a large amount of nutriment; also that biters may have some medical quality which will neutralize the alcohol which it conceals, etc. These theories are without confirmation in the observation of physicians. The use of beer is found to produce a species of degeneration of all the organs; profound and deceptive fatty deposits, diminished circulation, condition of congestion and perversion of functional activities, local inflammation of both the liver and kidneys, are constantly present. Intellectually a stupor amounting almost to paralysis arrests the reason, changing all the higher faculties into a mere animalism, sensual, selfish, sluggish, varied only with paroxysms of anger that are senseless and brutal. In appearance the beer-drinker may be the picture of health, but in reality he is most incapable of resisting disease. A slight injury, a severe cold, or a shock to the body or mind will commonly provoke acute disease ending fatally.

Compared with inebriates who use different kinds of alcohol, he is more incurable and more generally diseased. The constant use of beer every day gives the system no recuperation, but steadily lowers the vital forces. It is our observation that beer-drinking in this country produces the very lowest kind of inebriety, closely allied to criminal insanity. The most dangerous class of ruffians in our cities are beer-drinkers.—Scientific American.

AFRICA MORE "DARKENED" BY THE ADVENT OF CIVILIZATION AND RUM.

During his recent visit to America, Henry M. Stanley placed himself on record with regard to the use of alcoholic stimulants among those who undergo the hardships and exposure which accompany the work of exploring a new country. Mr. Stanley's African experience make him competent to speak with authority, and in an interview published in the Voice, of this city, he declares very decidedly against the use of gin and other liquors as practiced by the old traders and travelers in the Dark Continent. He says: "The very atmosphere seems hostile to the physique of the men who pin their faith on whisky, rum and brandy. Such men invariably succumb." There has existed a general impression among Europeans that alcohol in some form must be used to ward off the attacks of fever and malaria that are chief among the dangers encountered in traveling through African swamps and deserts. Mr. Stanley declares that such use only aggravates disease and hastens death.

Upon the natives the results of association and contact with the liquor-using whites have been deplorably apparent. On the west coast, which has been longer known than the east and south, intemperance has existed to an extent that has greatly retarded the civilization and advancement of the people. Gin is the favorite liquor in that part of the continent, and in some places it is the substitute for money, being supplied by traders to the natives in exchange for their commodities. The physical excellence of the people enables them to indulge to excess for a long time without breaking down. They learn to love the liquor before it has injured them sufficiently to warn against continuing its use. The evil has as yet been confined almost entirely to the coast region, where it has greatly hindered missionary work.

In the interior it is as yet unknown, simply because the white man has not yet penetrated so that he can conduct a regular commerce. When he does reach there, it is all too apparent that he will take the odious traffic in alcohol along. It is too profitable to be given up for so trifling a reason as the moral and physical safety and health of these savage people! What a reflection on the civilization and humanity of the Caucasian race! The governments of those European nations that are assuming control of these new African colonies, might greatly hinder the pernicious business, if they were so disposed. Mr. Stanley's testimony is a strong argument for their so doing. It would be comparatively easy to keep the whisky and gin trade out of these countries as yet uncontaminated by its presence.—N. Y. Witness.

THE CONGRESS AND THE PRESS.

Our exchanges are giving liberal notice of the conference of the 30th inst. in this city on the lodge system; the dailies of Chicago are also printing excellent notices, an indication of the deep though quiet interest of the public in the discussion. The Western Crank of College Springs, Iowa, will send its editor; the Religious Telescope of Dayton, O., will also be represented by an editor. The Mennonite of Philadelphia giving a summary of the call says: "We are highly pleased to see that, as the lodge system is rapidly extending its baneful influence and is threatening both church and state, men like the above and others of similar standing and influence, are not yet blinded as to the evil consequences that must ultimately be brought about by this mighty foe of true religion and civil liberty. May God's blessing rest upon the deliberations of this body and may all churches and Christians opposed to the secret lodge system stand in sympathy with this movement and as far as practicable elect and send delegates to this congress."

The Christian Worker, representing the interests of the Friends of the West and Northwest, says of approaching Congress on the lodge system: "Many of the ablest and most devout men in the country see, with much anxiety, the evils of the secret lodge system. They see the dangers multiplying as the conflict between capital and labor increases. The feeling is widespread that a calm, searching, able discussion of the various bearings of this system, in a meeting that is national, by speakers whose opinion will carry weight, will have a healthy and widespread influence. Such a meeting the coming one is expected to be. The teaching and record of the Friends on secret societies is such that their influence ought to be felt in the coming 'congress.' We hope to have one of our ablest men on the programme; we ought to have many Friends in attendance. We suggest that Monthly meetings which occur in time appoint delegates and send credentials at once."

LITERATURE.

THE WORKS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. Edited by William George Clarke and William Aldis Wright. In twelve volumes of about 300 pages each. Cloth, 50 cts per volume. John B. Alden, N. Y.

Men will never cease reading or loving to read Shakespeare, but they do weary of the infinitesimal type of the small editions and the heavy volumes of the larger. This edition is a happy conception and will be welcomed by every one who has realized the difficulties that have beset a favorite author. The twelve handy volumes which will contain the thirty-seven plays are printed in large, handsome type, and yet they are very convenient for the pocket, as well as for the eye, the narrow page giving the weary optics the easiest of reading. While most handy-volume editions of this author are either of small type or large price, we have an additional recommendation in the remarkable cheapness of this set. Until March 15 Mr. Alden sends three volumes in cloth for 60 cts., postage 8 cts. per volume, the remainder of the set being taken at the full price of 50 cts. each.

In the March Century the history of Abraham Lincoln enters upon a new stage. The first period of his intellectual development, including the first forty years of his life and ending with his term in Congress has been considered. The second period of about ten years, concluding with his speech-making in New York and New England, is now to be treated; and the particular topic for the present month is, "The Movement for Slavery Extension," these pages being preliminary to the study of Lincoln's relation to the anti-slavery movement. Messrs. Hay and Nicolay date the slavery controversy as far back as the time of "The May Flower," and follow it from then down to the repeal of the Missouri Compromise. The portraits of the number are of Eli Whitney, the inventor of the cotton-gin, President Pierce, Cass, Houston, Atchison, Dixon, Aiken, Richardson, and Banks. Mr. Charles F. Benjamin, formerly a clerk in the War Department, gives his recollections of Secretary Stanton, which give a well-rounded presentation of one of the most striking individualities of the war. Coming after the recent discussion of the relations of McClellan and Stanton, this paper will be read with special attention. A full-page engraving of Mr. Stanton forms the frontispiece. "Faith Healing and Kindred Phenomena," is the subject of a second paper by Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley, of the New York Christian Advocate, who has made a special study of the topic, his first paper having appeared in June of last year. Dr. Buckley combats what he considers the delusions and impositions of a fanatical creed. This paper is preceded by an article from Mr. R. Kelo Carter, one of the leading disciples of the Faith Cure, which may be considered as an apology for the believers in this doctrine. In "The White Man of the New South," Professor Wilbur Fisk Tillet, of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, considers the gallop of the South has made over its ante-bellum prosperity, not only in material wealth, but in respect to intellectual and moral growth. Other illustrated articles are "Camping out in California," "The Coinage of the Greeks," "French Sculptors," "The Cathedral Churches of England," and one of quite a popular character with most attractive illustrations, on "Composite Photography."

St. Nicholas for March is a bright and breezy number, full of captivating pictures and short pieces of lively interest. Gas wells, dog stories, Alaska adventures, summer coasting in the Madeira islands, the boyhood of the author T. B. Aldrich, a glimpse of George Washington's boy life, and an account of the business of a "commercial traveler" are among the good things of the number.

The March number of Words and Weapons, edited by Dr. George F. Pentecost, announces that he will continue to direct its columns as heretofore, and a department for the record of evangelistic work will be added. Christian workers will find in this number much valuable instruction and suggestion in the editorial, "A Working Church," in the Bible study on "The Ministry of our Lord," in Dr. Pierson's sketch of Dr. Chalmers, and in the S. S. Lesson notes by Dr. Pentecost.

The Library Magazine in its monthly edition for March gives American readers some of the best articles that have appeared in the current English magazines. Thus we have Prof. Drummond on "Conformity to Type;" W. E. Gladstone on Tennyson in Locksley Hall and the Jubilee; "The Glazial Period in America," by Grant Allen; "Is Constantinople worth fighting for?" "Ireland beyond the Pale;" "Rural Life in Russia," and "University Education in the United States." Published in New York at $1 per year.

The Cosmopolitan is a growing periodical in every sense that makes for usefulness and popularity. The illustrated papers are "Life beneath the Crescent," and "The Paris Bourse." "The Home of the Blizzard," by Joel Benton; "Fasting and Fasters," by Henry Howard; "The Profits of Novel Writing," by William Westall, are among the other articles which will be read. (Rochester, N. Y., $2.50 per year.)

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Mr. Moody left his work in Chicago last week to take up the sad duty of burying the remains of a relative, one of the lady teachers in the Northfield schools, who died in California. He went to Northfield with the body. Mr. Sankey reached Chicago Friday and was most warmly welcomed by a great crowd in Farwell Hall. Mr. Moody thinks the work now progressing excelled that done in the old Tabernacle ten years ago, because all the ministers and churches were actively engaged in the work.

—Bro. B. Loveless of Wheaton, lately returned from Cedar Rapids, where in his meetings some 150 confessed salvation through Christ.

—Elder J. L. Barlow is much encouraged with the beginning of his work in Grundy Center, Iowa. When he responded to the call of the church for a visit he found the people praying. Daily meetings were begun immediately and continued for over two weeks. A number of conversions followed and additions to the church.

—Rev. C. W. Hiatt of the High Street church, Columbus, Ohio, is on a visit at the home of his father, Dr. A. H. Hiatt, Wheaton, snatching a brief rest from the severe labors of two months' special meetings in his church. The work of God began with the week of prayer and continued with gracious power week after week. Some 200 were converted and seventy-one were received into the church Feb. 27, forty of whom were heads of families. Bro. Hiatt has carried on this work practically without the aid of evangelists or other pastors, and speaks of it as the wonderful work of God in blessing the simple Gospel truth in answer to prayer.

—The theological department of Augustana College (Swedish), under the instruction of Rev. Dr. Hasselquist and Professors Olsen and Weidner, now numbers 47 students, and the college has upwards of 160 students. The Rev. Prof. Olsen has been elected vice-president of the college, and in view of his new duties, has resigned the charge of his congregation in Davenport. A second son of Rev. Lars P. Esbjorn, the first professor of the seminary, who has been studying in Europe, has been called to a professorship in the college. The addition of the conservatory of music, and the admission of ladies to the class rooms, and the lectures of the college professors, will attract many who are now studying in other institutions not of their own church.

—A pastor at Gainesville, Fla., writes to an exchange: "Our city is receiving a gracious visitation from God. Two weeks ago a meeting was begun in the Methodist church. The interest grew till the largest hall in the city could not accommodate the people. The stores, and even the bar-rooms, were closed at the hours of worship, and a deep religious feeling pervaded the community. Up to this time there have been three hundred and fifty applications for admission into the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian churches. The meeting is still going on in the Court House, none of the churches being large enough.

—For several weeks there has been in progress at Franklin, Ind., one of the most remarkable revivals ever known there. In a town of less than 4,000 population, there have been more than 500 persons added to the churches within the last few weeks. A deep and thorough work is being done among the students in the college, many of whom have already accepted the Saviour. One saloon keeper has been converted, and others are obliged to leave the place because the business is so dull.

—A gracious revival has been experienced in the Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio, beginning with the Day of Prayer for Colleges. Up to Friday, Feb. 4th, over eighty students had given the clearest testimony as to their conversion and others were seeking.

—A revival at Ripley, Ohio, brought nearly thirty persons into the Wesleyan church. During the late rise in the river the church was for several days surrounded by water.

—A gracious outpouring of the Spirit upon Houghton Seminary, N. Y., has brought many students to Christ. Prof. A. R. Dodd, the principal, hopes to see the whole school converted.

—Rev. George W. Gates of Upper Montclair, N. J., having been offered the presidency of Iowa College, has decided to accept the call.

—Rev. David Gregg, late of the Third Reformed Presbyterian church, New York, in taking the place of Dr. Withrow in the Park Street Congregational church, Boston, has received a hearty welcome not only from the church, but from the churches and ministry of the city generally. His council was attended by all the ministers of the city proper.

—Rev. Hugh Pentecost, pastor of the Belleville Avenue church, Newark, N. J., and brother of Rev. Geo. F. Pentecost, has been preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons in which he advocated the Henry George land theories. The services have been largely attended, but Mr. Pentecost, it is said, does not carry his own people with him in these peculiar views.

—There is an extensive revival at Olivet, Mich., mostly among the students of Olivet College, though the interest is spreading. There have been about forty conversions.

—Five young people of the First Church of Christ, Galesburg, Ill., have devoted themselves to the foreign mission work, and four more of the congregation who are Knox College students, have the same work in view; while twenty in all, mostly Knox College students and undergraduates, have signed a paper devoting themselves to foreign work.

—Union meetings at Winsted, Ct., have resulted in about 250 conversions. Rev. G. F. Pentecost assisted the pastors ten days. The power of prayer and the importance of personal effort are prominent features of the work.

—Dr. L. W. Munhall, the evangelist, who has been laboring successfully at Mr. Talmage's Tabernacle in Brooklyn, began union meetings at the South End, Boston, Feb. 27, in the Clarendon Street Baptist church. Two or more churches will co-operate. Prof. Dr. B. Towner conducts the singing. Dr. Munhall gives Bible readings every afternoon and preaches every evening.

—State Evangelist Paddock closed his work in Dwight, Ill., Feb. 20, and fifty-five persons united with the church on that day, forty-two on confession. Mr. Paddock began work in Chenos Feb. 27. Rev. Albert Ethridge, evangelist for the Illinois Home Missionary Society, is aiding at Milburn in daily meetings.

—The seventh annual report of the Golden Gate Kindergarten Association, a pamphlet of 110 pages, states that there are now forty free kindergartens in San Francisco and its environs where seven years ago there was but one. Eight of them are sustained by Mrs. Senator Stanford. There are over 2,000 children in them. The receipts of the last year were $16,507. Mrs. Stanford gave $5,000 and is the honorary president, and Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper is president, and chief manager.

—In Washington City there are ten churches calling themselves Lutheran. Of these six belong to the General Synod, two German are independent, one German belongs to the Missouri Synod, and one, that of Pastor Tressel, belongs to the Ohio. The largest of these is the Memorial church, of which Dr. Butler is pastor. In front of it stands the monument of Luther.

—Rev. John Hall, D. D., of New York, is said to be making a tour of the South in the interest of a union between the Northern and Southern branches of the Presbyterian church, to effect which an attempt will be made at the next General Assembly.

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more percent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield, "Even his failings lead to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Fully illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of the teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doehring, Past Master Unity No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a picture of the various degrees, room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1838, of which Adams was President. President of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 32 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, class and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles C. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.50.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, un-republican and despot character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Odded Lodges Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templarism Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grange" and "Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic," are all bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $9.00.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James William Breckinridge, Elder of Dakota District, Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of the members of different churches, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their cause, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 5 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. With signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machineists and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on us In-temperate? By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who are bound to keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Master's Carpet. or Masonry and Real Worship identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp., 75 cents.

Freemasonry Self-Condemed. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers; price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Leuben Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 31 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will come of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Mah-Hab-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings of the symbol of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 539 pp., $1.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The desire of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and are presented in a manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a new line of argument. 207 pp., postpaid, 40 cts.

The Mystic Tie. or, Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason, and their varied and doctored proceedings. Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan, "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan," "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. W. Morgan," Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan, "Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees. 304 pages, 50 cents.

In the Collie; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Paistic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secrecy in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how it affects the political, social, religious, professional and public life are trammelled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work)," "Number of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the work, Light on the Mysteries of 33 Degrees, 75 cents each; per dozen, $7.50.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By F. R. Rinehart, Past Master of Kenosha (old work), No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" word and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, or on the floor, and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 50 cents.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Elysian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, ... Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Ties of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 60 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Riker's "Vindication of General Washington from the Slavery from the Slavery of Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 28, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Widow's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing many various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages; cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Knights Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, 75 cents; $3.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50 cts; $4.00 per dozen.

The Broken Seal; or, Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan By Samuel D. Greens. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Chapter, with engravings of signs, grips, etc. 35 cents each; per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees or 33 Degrees. To discuss the three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 6 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers; 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims. By Elder David McMill. Pres. J. Blanchard, Past Master of Kenosha (old work), No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" word and ritual of Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

FARM NOTES.

DEHORNING CATTLE.

At the request of E. W. Farnsworth, of Sanborn, Iowa, I write up for your columns the subject of "dehorning cattle," which so engrossed the attention of Iowa farmers and others in the Northwest, that 1,000 have dehorned their cattle this very fall.

The advantages of dehorning cattle are very many, and my offer to the distillery men was made pro bono publico to teach those men to so handle cattle that they would avoid the fastening in stanchions as they now do, and by enabling the cattle to have daily exercise there would be little or no danger from fevers, now induced in their hot and crowded stalls.

To the farmer, however, the advantages can be stated to be many:

1. Dehorning saves one-fourth hay in winter.
2. Dehorning saves one-half shed room.
3. Dehorning saves 10 per cent of grain fed.
4. Dehorning saves all loss in shipping.
5. Dehorning saves one-half the manure.
6. Dehorning saves all loss of calves by abortion.
7. Dehorning would save 200 human lives yearly.
8. Dehorning would save 200,000 cattle and horses.
9. Dehorning cattle would save an amount of misery and profanity that cannot be estimated.

Any one of these nine points is enough to abundantly justify the practice. If your correspondent wishes to learn more on this line I can send him a book for 30 cents, but there is not room to publish all here. The leading agricultural papers now advocate my plan; many, many, also of the secular papers. It may seem to a third person that in thus writing I am blowing my own trumpet; but how can I tell the truth and not give my personal experience on a new thing. I cannot go into a physiological explanation of all the points—there is not room; but I will say that of all the thousands and thousands of cattle that died last winter, and are now dying in Montana, Texas, Indian Territory, and in fact west of the Missouri River, not one of them but froze at the horn first. Suppose, to illustrate, that your correspondent, Mr. F., had a pair of fingers stuck up on top of his head, and suppose that not one-fourth part of the blood now running to those fingers was allowed to circulate, that now does circulate (for the circulation of blood in the horn is all capillary unless you heat the animal by exercise); and now, if on to those two fingers, from a foot to a foot and a half long, you were to put a bone inside, and draw a sheet-iron cover over the top, and go out into the air at zero or 30 degrees below, and stand around for an hour, or all night and all day, too, if you please—I ask you, if you do not see that those fingers would chill and freeze and thaw out, and chill and freeze again and again, and finally die, and be like droopy trees, and the brute go a whole season and not gain a pound, and the owner wonder and wonder what the matter, until finally there are a pair of dead horns, and the matter (or pus) solidifies and the animal overcomes the trial and lives it out. Ask the Montana men if I overdraw the picture or overstate the case. Several of them came last spring to my place to learn "dehorning." Said they: "We know enough to know that in March and April lots of our cattle have to have three inches of their horns cut off before they will do anything on grass, and when we do it the pus will pour out, and the animal, almost famished, goes to eating at once." How he did suffer from hornsache.—H. H. Haaff in the Inter Ocean.

A COW FOR SALE.—Bill Nye, being in ill health, wants to sell his cow "Rose." She is to be seen on Town 29, Range 18 west. (He omits the N. or S. T., and P. M.) Color, crushed raspberry; age, 6; good milkster, not afraid of the cars, or of anything else; courage undaunted; gives milk frequently; a great boon to any man who does not fear death in any form; she is much attached to home (by a strong trace chain). One fourth Short-horn; three fourths hyena; purchaser need not be identified; must be sold to a non-resident; a double barreled shot gun goes with her. In May she disappears two weeks, and returns with a tall, red calf having long, wobbly legs.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D., (Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and beautiful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

Talks

ON THE

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Fate—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it.'—Are there the rub? Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are untuned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable, alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as they are, and fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind. If it is not the best that I have seen, while it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, it will reach by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The 49th Congress adjourned at noon Friday.

The Senate in executive session Friday confirmed James W. Trotter to be Recorder of Deeds for the District of Columbia. Trotter is a colored man from Boston.

Among the appropriations of National importance that failed at the closing hours of Congress were the following: The deficiency, the District of Columbia, and the fortifications bills. The river and harbor appropriation bill, including the Hennepin Canal, failed because of the failure of the President to sign it before the adjournment.

Jane Washington Thornton Beck, wife of Senator Beck of Kentucky, died at her residence Sunday evening, the result of a cold contracted while out riding in an open carriage on Friday. Mrs. Beck was born in Auburn, Va., Oct. 9, 1825, and was the grand-niece and nearest living descendant of George Washington. She married Senator Beck in Lexington, Ky., Feb. 3, 1848.

COUNTRY.

A petition from business men and merchants, representing $40,000,000 capital, was presented Wednesday to the Rhode Island Legislature, asking for a repeal of the prohibitory law.

The amendment to the State Fair bill, forbidding the sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors on the grounds, was defeated Friday in the Illinois House.

The scheme for consolidating all the gas companies in Chicago was completed Friday in New York and Philadelphia. The business will be controlled by the United Gas Improvement Company of Philadelphia. The stock represented in the new company, it is said, amounts to over $8,000,000.

The Prohibition convention for Chicago met last week in the First Methodist Church Block, J. B. Hobbs presiding. J. L. Whitlock was nominated for mayor, Thomas Moulding for treasurer, W. S. McComas for clerk, and H. J. Davis for attorney.

The Prohibition convention to nominate candidates for all of the State offices in Kentucky was held in Louisville Thursday. Judge Fontaine J. Fox, a prominent lawyer, was nominated for governor. A ticket embracing all of the State officers was placed in nomination. Fifty counties were represented at the convention.

Representatives of the coke workers and the syndicate decided at Pittsburgh, Monday, to settle the wage question by arbitration.

Mrs. Roxalana Druse, who murdered her husband, beheaded him, and boiled the remains, was hanged Monday at Herkimer, N. Y. At the last moment she shrieked in a fearful manner, but death was almost instantaneous. She left a confession implicating Charles Gates as the prime mover in the tragedy.

In the United States Court, at New Orleans, Monday, Judge Pardee decided that the tax assessment upon Pullman cars, run upon railroads of the State, is illegal.

An eighteen inch sheet of solid lead ore has been discovered near the surface at Warren, Ill.

The steamer Fleetwood burst her steam-pipe Friday morning near Lawrenceburg, Ind. Three roustabouts were fatally scalded, and the engineer, Frank Good, was seriously injured.

Articles incorporating the Wisconsin Midland railroad, to run from Chicago through Wisconsin pineries to the iron regions of Michigan, were filed Thursday at Madison. The capital stock is $3,000,000, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy is said to be backing the project.

Near Lima, Ohio, two children of B. Dietz, aged 7 and 8, respectively, were burned to death Wednesday night while playing with coal oil.

The steamer W. L. Gardner was burned Tuesday afternoon on the Tombigbee river, near Gainesville, Ala. Twenty persons lost their lives.

Mother Angels (Miss Elvia Gillespie), Mother Superior of the Order of the Sisters of the Holy Cross, died suddenly Friday at St. Mary's Academy, at South Bend, Ind., which she founded in 1850. She was a cousin of the Hon. James G. Blaine, and of the wife of General Sherman.

Miss Francis E. Willard, of Evanson, spoke in Representative Hall, Lansing, Mich., Thursday evening, upon the question of social purity and the age of protection for girls. Miss Willard made other ladies of local reputation with a plea for woman suffrage before a joint meeting of the Senate and House Judiciary Committee.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher is seriously ill at his home in Brooklyn, having suffered a stroke of apoplexy, and it is thought that even if he does not die he will never recover in full his mental and physical faculties. Mr. Beecher was taken sick Thursday night, experiencing a violent headache. Eminent physicians were very doubtful of his rallying from the attack.

The Central Labor Union of New York removed the boycott from Ehret's beer on Sunday.

FOREIGN.

Twenty thousand persons are homeless in Italy owing to the earthquake. The losses are estimated at $10,000,000.

A series of rather violent earthquakes occurred in Western Morea March 4, but no damage resulted. The inhabitants, however, are terrified and are flying from the district.

A sensation has been caused by the perpetration of very extensive incendiarism in the country surrounding Limerick, Ireland. A large number of houses occupied by tenants and hay and out-buildings were burned. The victims in all cases were persons who paid rents. The outrages are set down as political, and great excitement prevails. The aggregate of property destroyed is very large. The fires were caused by armed incendiaries, who escaped. The district was ablaze all night with burning houses and hay.

An explosion occurred March 1 in the Beaumont collieries at St. Etienne, France. The latest advices say there were 104 men entombed in the mine, and that forty-three have been recovered and sixteen are dead.

Word has been received at Montreal that on Tuesday last a large gang of men, together with two engines and a snow-plow, were caught in a snow-slide at Selkirk. Six of the men were smothered before they could be got out.

The steamer Gaelic, from Hong Kong, via Honolulu, reports another outbreak of lava from Mauna Loa. All the craters were in great activity when the steamer left Honolulu.

A Chinese junk, from Hainan to Siam, was wrecked off the Socotra coast. Out of the 600 passengers and crew aboard, only six were known to have escaped.

The Auditor of the General Admiralty of England has raised a question as to the application of the £3,000,000 credit voted the Gladstone Government during the Russian war scare. It is said there was no tangible return for $15,000,000 paid out.

Emperor William is enjoying good health, contrary to certain reports, and is preparing for his 90th birthday.

The Reichstag of Germany will begin debate on the army bill to-day. There will be 221 septennists and 176 opponents of the bill.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Paper covers, 32c. Cloth, 50c. The aim of this book is to show the great difference between true and false religion. It is a history of the Bible. It is blessing this book to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

Self Deception, Its Nature, Evils and Remedy. By R. W. Jacob Helffenstein. Paper covers, 10c. This book goes to the very bottom of the subject, and searches out the sandy foundation of the deceived profane. The refugees of lies behind which many are hiding, and the false hopes of thousands are here set forth in plain and powerful words. Will meet a felt want among Christian workers, and is eminently suitable for circulation among all church members.

How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 10c. This little book points out that there are certain practical means within the reach of every child of God in the world, which he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Stirring and encouraging.

The anarchists of Cincinnati are on the way to bombs and the gallows. They call themselves the Anti-National Society, and celebrated last week the memory of the savages and ghouls of the Paris communes of 1848 and 1871. About a thousand people listened to the poor crazy wife of the condemned Parsons, and measured off her sentences with drinks of beer. Revolutionary red flags and red mottoes added to their fury and during the whole performance there was nothing, say the dispatches, but the bitterest hostility to American institutions. Ought these institutions, then, any longer to afford protection to such creatures?

As no consideration of argument whether in quality or quantity seems likely to overcome Dr. Howard Crosby's singular and persistent objection to prohibition, a friend of his has looked up a discourse in the Homiletic Review for June, 1880, in which occur the following sentences: "The use of spirituous liquors, and the excessive use of any stimulant should be shunned. It would seem hardly necessary to mention this, yet it is needed; for how can the use of tobacco, or any form of intoxicating drink be tolerated in those whose constant message is 'Cleanse yourselves from all filthiness of the flesh; be ye clean, ye that bear the vessels of the Lord'; and whose example to the young and others about them is more emphatic than their preaching?" This ought to have been a good starting place, from whence the Dr. should have gone on to perfection in temperance matters.

The real power of a nation is not in big guns, invincible armies, frowning forts, or mighty navies. The United States has neither, but all the European governments, though covered with weapons like brigands have a wholesome dread of the patriotism, and the physical and financial forces, which are ready in a moment to act in defense of American homes. European financiers have marked with astonishment and alarm the rapid payment of our National debt, and the present administration with all its economy has not been wise in checking this good work. A writer upon debt-paying and war taxes in the London Times says, "The great American state, discharged of all these consequences, and with its resources unencumbered, is slowly coming into a position which by its irresistible competition, will one day bankrupt European industry. When the Americans have paid off their National debt the workmen will be able to live more cheaply in the United States than in any European country, and the economy of production in America will be such that no European industry will be able to compete with it in the world's markets. Repudiation and general bankruptcy of individuals as well as states must follow. It is the inexorable finale of all the arming by land and sea, new guns every year, and new loans to pay for them."

In Chicago an influential movement has taken shape for Sunday-closing the retail stores, and thus set free twenty thousand clerks for a day of rest. Sabbath afternoon a great meeting was held in Central Music Hall, and addressed by Socialists, Knights of Labor, Dr. Lorimer, Baptist, and Dr. Barrows, Presbyterian. This movement is begun by the oppressed clerks themselves, and is directed to securing the passage of a new act by the State legislature against the dealers. While we are heartily in favor of the closing of all the stores on the Lord's day, there are some considerations which were not presented to this meeting. It is probable that the new law covers no more ground than those we have already, and in a few months will become, like the latter, a "dead letter," because the reason for the new is the same as for the old. It is not the dealers who are so much to blame, as their patrons who demand the opening on Sabbath. The demand springs from too low a motive to make the movement permanent. The arguments of the promoters put it on a level with the eight-hour agitation; and in that respect the holding of such a meeting on the Lord's day was displeasing to God. It asks only that the day may be free for rest and recreation in obedience to natural law, but for all they seem to know or care, one day in seven may be no better than one in ten which the infidels of the French Revolution adopted. The movement thus appears to be utterly secular and worldly, and to have no regard for God, the Maker of man, and his will in the matter. The speakers claimed that the Knights of Labor had done more for workmen of the city than all the churches. Dr. Lorimer heard it and replied with flattery, for he loves lodgery, but Dr. Barrows must have felt strangely out of place.

Many will remember the visit of the younger Mr. Studd, from England, to this country in 1885, and the thrilling account he gave of his older brother's conversion, and devotion of himself and his wealth to the missionary work, and the immediate and glorious results in the pouring out of the Spirit wherever he went. A letter from this missionary, C. T. Studd, from the remote interior of China, ought to be read and committed to memory by every Christian in the land. He writes to one of a missionary band from Mr. Moody's Mt. Hermon school: "From my short experience it seems to me, until the soldiers of Christ have done with playing at being soldiers and take the Lord's war to heart, we shall not have world-wide success. Missionary societies will never be able to do the work; they are merely auxiliary forces; the regular army should be made up of missionaries sent out from every church, chapel, and place of meeting where Christ is named; then there will be general and real enthusiasm in the Lord's great war among the heathen, and we shall have success all along the line. When England or America sends of her own flesh and blood to fight, the whole land is stirred from top to bottom; so will each Christian congregation be moved when it sends of its own numbers to do battle for the Lord. May God grant a real awakening to all his children, may we go forth as one man to his glorious war." Now there are two things that are neglected by the Christian church, which would immediately effect such a blessed zeal as this. The first is a help: the belief in the coming of the Lord presently, and that he tarries only until the church has fulfilled her work of evangelizing "all nations." The second is a hindrance, our wretched, God dishonoring sectarianism. Let every reader meditate on this, and from these two factors you shall directly find results that astonish the soul at the anticipation of the wonderful grace of our God.

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

DEAR EDITOR:—One of your constant readers asks you, as a favor, to reprint the following lines, which were clipped years ago from the New York Independent. They were written by Pres. J. Blanchard for the "North Star," a book of poems, where, but for Whittier's modesty, they would have appeared. The editor of the Independent saw them, and gave them to the world. Many, we think, will enjoy reading this well-deserved eulogy of one so gifted and so good.

Thy soul is gentle, Whittier—yet thy mind
Was made to startle and instruct mankind.
And tyrants dread thee, gentle though thou art—
A lamb in temper with a lion's heart—
Yet so averse to scourge the sins of men,
That other's sufferings only move thy pen.
If thou alone hadst felt the oppressor's wrong,
The world had lost the lightning of thy song.
God in thy genius, crowned thee with the art
To pour thyself upon the human heart;
Bid thine own soul to thrill along thy line
An inbreathed fervor only not divine.
New England yet shall hail her gifted son
When Freedom's work (and Slavery's) is done;
And own thy fire caught from her pilgrim graves,
Hath taught the world that poets are no slaves.
The slave shall hail thee, when his sorrows end,
In nature, as by name and birth, A Friend.

AN UNEXPECTED ALLY.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

The indications are accumulating that the Knights of Labor, in the providence of God, will be used to spring the anti-secret issue. At the rate the agitation of that question has advanced we are often tempted to exclaim, "How long, O Lord, how long!" But when God's time comes a short work will be made. The Knights of Labor promise to be a large factor in the approaching political contests. By their secret tactics they may in a few months open the nation's eyes to see more of the evil of secrecy, than men will learn by years of agitation. There is a deep significance in the following extract from a letter written by Abram S. Hewitt, Democratic Mayor of New York. It was addressed to the Brooklyn Democratic club which gave a public dinner to Gov. Hill designing to boom him for next President. Mayor Hewitt is severe on the Governor and on his party for their alliance with the Knights of Labor. The club tried to suppress the letter but the Mayor was not thus to be snuffed out. He put it into print and the Burlington Hawkeye publishes it and declares, "it is full of wisdom and can be studied profitably by our Democratic fellow-citizens." It may be studied just as profitably by our Republican fellow-citizens. The following is the extract:

"The principles of the Democratic party are on trial from a new force which has suddenly appeared in politics and which will destroy the party unless it is boldly confronted and the dangerous and pernicious effect of its doctrines and principles denounced and made clear to the people. The Democratic party regards the individual as the unit of society, the integrity of which depends entirely upon the personal liberty of the citizen. Jefferson and his associates drove the Federal party out of power on this issue, which indeed was fundamental in the struggle which gave us our free government and produced the constitution. Until the civil war broke out no man questioned the right of the white citizens of the United States to dispose of themselves and their labor in any manner which might seem good. The war extended the same rights to the colored race as the white citizen had previously enjoyed, so that up to a very recent period every citizen of this country has been free to employ himself and pursue his happiness in whatever direction might seem to him to be good. Within the last five years, however, a secret organization has been growing in strength and power which seeks to enslave the labor of this country and make it subject to the irresponsible domination of men unknown to the people, who are not officers chosen by the people, and who are not creatures of law responsible to free public opinion and to the constituted authorities for their action. Gradually the leaders of this body have succeeded in stamping out all personal independence on the part of a large number of workmen of the country by refusing to permit any person to earn a living who is not affiliated with this secret organization. In this way the workmen have been coerced into blind obedience to irresponsible power, and the condition of those who have tried to remain outside of the organization is in many cases truly pitiable. They are called by opprobrious names, are hunted down from shop to shop, and denied employment on the fearful penalty of stopping all work, however pressing and important. This is tyranny, against which the Democratic party has ever struggled, and which it must now confront and denounce in no mistaken tones. It is true that Democrats holding high positions have coqueted with this new and dangerous element in politics and even attained office by submitting to the humiliation of an apparent indorsement of the false and dangerous doctrines which have been put in practice at such a fearful cost in our own midst within the present month.

Unless the Democratic party shall not and at once absolutely disown and condemn all organizations which seek to place the individual under any other control than that of the laws, and deprive the citizen of his right of free action, it will perish as it ought to do; and I desire on this occasion to emphasize this issue as one to which you and your fellow-members shall direct your attention, in the hope that the next State convention and the next national convention will condemn, as Washington condemned, all secret organizations which undertake to usurp the functions of the law and destroy the free agency of the citizen. I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

ABRAM S. HEWITT.

Are these men so blind that they cannot see that not only the Knights of Labor but all secret organizations place the individual under another control than that of the laws and deprive him of his right of free action. The Mayor strikes at the special feature of these organizations which makes them dangerous elements in a republic. How strange that the Mayor of New York should prove an ally in the anti-secret cause.

THE KANSAS STRUGGLE IN THE CAMPAIGN OF 1856.

REMINISCENCES BY HON. S. C. POMEROY.

Our cause was half carried when we got a full discussion of it in Congress, and this summer of 1856 witnessed little else. At first Franklin Pierce was a candidate that year, before the Cincinnati Convention for re-nomination. But the light of the burning dwellings of Kansas was flashed full in his face and murdered men had gone up to judgment to plead against him. So poor Mr. Pierce had his name withdrawn and they took Mr. Buchanan.

Before this, however, there had been a national convention of the American Know Nothing party held in Philadelphia. Their National Council met three days previous. Though they intended some good they were a secret lodge concern, so we can never know just what they did. But when the open convention assembled "Parson" Brownlow of Tennessee called it to order and Ephraim Marsh of New Jersey was made president. The disturbing element was there also and soon appeared. Mr. Coffey of Pennsylvania opened in an eloquent speech, saying "we will fight for our principles, but we will not stand upon a platform which ignores the vital questions of the day." He "warned Southern members and Northern 'dough-faces' that their cause would meet with overwhelming defeat." Mr. Perkins of Connecticut followed him, saying, "There are two questions before us: one, the reform of the naturalization laws; the other, what shall be done about restoring freedom to Kansas?" At last, after an angry debate, Fillmore and Donelson were nominated as head of their ticket. But George Law and old Sam Houston issued a protest. This was about the end of that secret oath-bound society, trying to control politics by dodging from darkness to light; one hour hid in secret lodges, the next open in public speech. People did not know what they might concoct in darkness, and so would not trust them in the light.

But upon the heels of that convention another grand meeting was called at Pittsburg, Pa. This was the first of its kind. It was a movement for open work, daylight discussions, and a bold proposition to call hereafter a National Republican Convention. This preliminary convention was presided over temporarily by John A. King, son of Rufus King, and then by the venerable Francis P. Blair. He spoke and was followed by Mr. Greeley, Mr. Giddings, Mr. Lovejoy and others of those early pioneers. Owen Lovejoy made a most determined and uncompromising speech in favor of bold, independent action against the slave power. Mr. Mann of New York read a paper, which the convention adopted, which closed, as I well remember, with a "demand that Kansas should be admitted into the Union under her Free State Constitution." A letter, too, was read from Cassius M. Clay of Kentucky, full of the most impassioned utterances. And all this ended in a call for a Republican National Convention to be held in Philadelphia, June 17th, 1856.

This was the first convention of its kind that party had ever held. I well remember it, for I was there and was honored as one of its vice-presidents. I remember that Rev. Albert Barnes opened it with prayer and Henry S. Lane was made president, and in his first speech he said, "This is the anniversary of Bunker Hill—a good day to form a party." Henry Wilson of Massachusetts followed in a strain of lofty patriotism urging a union of all the parties in one grand national party to confront the slave power and stay the spread of slavery into any of the Territories. Then followed Owen Lovejoy of Illinois, who demanded a party founded upon the Declaration of Independence, and he denounced the aggression of slavery in Kansas, and defended our cause there. On my way to this convention I had spent a day at Princeton, Ill., Mr. Lovejoy's home, and he had allowed me to speak for Kansas in his church; and now he told our story in the convention much better than I could have done. Charles Francis Adams, too, was there, speaking for union and conciliation of all opposers of slavery.

David Wilmot of Pennsylvania presented the platform adopted by the convention. This asserted the "power of Congress over the Territories, and the right and duty to prohibit the twin relics of barbarism, polygamy and slavery," and arraigned the National Administration "for the high crime in Kansas against the Constitution, the Union, and humanity itself." When the ballots for Presidential candidates were counted in this convention John C. Fremont had three hundred and fifty-nine votes and Judge McLean of Ohio had one hundred and ninety-six. The nomination of Fremont was made unanimous. Then came voting for Vice-President. Wm. L. Dayton had the larger number and was declared the candidate. But let it now be remembered that at that early day Abraham Lincoln received one hundred and ten votes for Vice-President and his sun had only begun to rise. Four years later he led the van.

The seceders from the National Know Nothing convention met in New York, and a letter from Hon. E. D. Morgan, inviting them to join the new movement for Fremont, was read and after discussion approved and this body first adopted the resolution so often used later, "for free speech, free press, free Territory, and free Kansas." When their adhesion to the Republican party was announced, John P. Hale arose and was equal to the great occasion. He said, "We are living in the harvest time of the pro-slavery Democracy. They have sown their seed, which has germinated, budded and blossomed, and borne its fruits. The historian is now writing its history in the blood of our fellow-citizens on the prairies of Kansas." This convention held an evening session at which the nominations were ratified; and I plead the cause of Kansas upon the platform as best I could.

The Democratic convention soon followed, and put Buchanan and Breckenridge at the head and resolved as usual to remit the slavery question to the people of the Territory, "when they formed their State Constitution,"—the old dogma. Hannibal Hamlin the next day exclaimed in the Senate, "Short-lived Territorial Sovereignty! It came to its death in the hands of its friends. It was buried by the same hands that gave it baptism."

So the Republican party was now equipped and entered the field and for their first trial made a grand canvass and polled a large vote. Buchanan was barely elected by carrying a small majority in his own State. The last of the old Whig party was seen in their convention in Baltimore on the 17th day of September of that year. They endorsed the nominations of the Native American party made in Philadelphia the February previous, and Fillmore and Donelson became their candidates also.

This completes the history of the Presidential nominations for 1856. I have quoted them all to show that it was the Kansas question which gave life to the Republican party and sounded the death knell of both the old parties. The Kansas question was none other than the slavery question, and in this was the "irrepressible conflict" of the century. This was the war. It did not require much foresight for me to denominate it "The Slaveholders' Rebellion" and to thank God that his hour had come! Justice seemed to have been sleeping, but the day of her awakening had arrived. She ascended the throne and her scepter was swayed.

The canvass of 1856 I shall never forget, and the letter of A. G. Brown of Mississippi endorsing Mr. Buchanan I carried in my diary for many years. In it he said, speaking of Buchanan, "He is as worthy of Southern confidence and of Southern votes as ever Mr. Calhoun was!" That settled him for us. That wonderful campaign was inaugurated by fire and sword in Lawrence, and by the blood of Charles Sumner on the floor of the Senate, and the slave power still in the front. The best element of human nature plead against them. The cry of the oppressed had gone up and was answered at that hour by Mrs. Stowe in her "Uncle Tom's Cabin." That wonderful book was a revelation and a summons. It has gone into all the languages and will go down all the ages.

The campaign of 1856 ended the Whig party—a good old party, composed of many good men, some of the best statesmen of the country, men who commanded the respect of the generations in which they lived. But they divided upon the questions growing out of American slavery. Upon that rock they split, and falling upon them as a party they were "ground to powder." Many of the individual members, however, led in other parties and are not yet out of view. The good never wholly die and the bad live out their appointed time: but the events of which I am giving my recollection are calculated to enforce the doctrine that men live in their influence long after they turn to dust. The Great Rebellion will live in history and in its results as long as there are men to read human lives or write human history. The changes wrought by it seem a new creation.

When they repealed the Missouri Compromise, it was said and believed "that the people of Kansas were to be perfectly free to form and regulate their institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States." We, of the early settlers, accepted that issue, claimed our rights under it, and undertook to maintain them. Upon the inauguration of James Buchanan he made special mention of the decision of the Supreme Court as a "settlement of a vexed question," and to anticipate what it would be (and they made hot haste to commit the country to it) before even it had been delivered and published. Mr. Douglas said in May, 1860, "We agreed to refer it to the judiciary and we agreed to abide by that decision"; and then added, "whatever it may be." The Democratic convention adopted it; their candidates accepted it, and at last it appeared, along with the thing called "Lecompton Constitution for Kansas." Somehow those two iniquities, the "Dred Scott decision" and the Slave Constitution for Kansas, were launched upon the country at the same time. The one was held back for the birth of the other. Mr. Fessenden, of Maine, said at the same time in the Senate, "The original scheme was to assert popular sovereignty to secure the repeal of the Missouri Compromise; then to deny it and avow the establishment of slavery; then to legalize this by a decision of the Supreme Court. I sincerely believe that decision of the Supreme Court a part of the programme."

At this time they secured the resignation of Gov. Shannon, and the President appointed John W. Geary of Pennsylvania: another governor to become a sacrifice. Reeder had gone; Shannon had gone; Geary now was to try his hand. I met him in Washington after his appointment and before he had accepted it. He was in doubt about it and told the President finally, "I will accept upon one condition. You shall give me the entire support of the General Government." That was promised him and then he started for Kansas. Geary was able to get a passage up the Missouri river. I could not: others of our Free State men could not. But they let the Governor go. We were sent by a land route we had made through Iowa and Nebraska, a long, tedious and expensive route.

But I had become used to all the routes—I had tried a land ride through Missouri, and stayed at private houses over night, when the family spent the evening talking about Kansas, cursing "old Pomero" and the "Emigrant Aid Society," not knowing who was their guest. But in that way one learns what a class of people think of him, and to govern himself accordingly. When I came down the Missouri river to reach Washington I found myself upon a crowded boat, full of drinking men and maddened by their disappointment in Gov. Shannon in Kansas. At last we struck a sand-bar and were fast there for a whole night. In the morning we were transferred to an open flat boat where we had only standing-room. But we had floated down for several hours, when these angry men decided to throw me overboard, for by that time they had learned who I was. Some anxiety was manifested for me, silyly, and I was asked if I was a Mason. Men would grip my hand in a way I did not at all understand. Some had told me before I was not safe up there "if I did not belong to the order." But at this hour I had no friend there that I knew. These infuriated men rushed about the boat trying to execute their threat. A lady, Mrs. J. B. Luce, of Arkansas, who was on the boat, at once sprang forward, saying, "The gentleman is my friend. Lay a hand on him at your peril!" The men were awed—astonished, and while standing in amazement Mrs. Luce gave me her arm, and I took a seat in the stern of the boat occupied by ladies. I made a suitable expression of my gratitude to her and then inquired if she knew me.

She said, "Do you remember to have once upon a time repeated to a homesick stranger in Leavenworth the poem by Mrs. Hemans, 'The Better Land?'"

"Yes, I remember it."

"I was that woman!"

No further explanations were needed. We at length reached Jefferson City. The railroad was finished to that point, so I bade my newly-found friend good-bye, took cars for St. Louis and reached Washington in season to see Gov. Geary before he had seen Kansas.

PIONEERS AND REFORMERS.

ADDRESS AT THE SEMI-CENTENNIAL OF THE FIRST CHURCH OF CHRIST, GALESBURG, ILL., FEB. 26, 1887, BY PRES. J. BLANCHARD.

We are looking back over half a century of memories, which are, "like the music of Caryl, pleasant, though mournful to the soul," and as the brave pioneers who set the lights of religious learning in our then western horizon have younger chroniclers than myself, some of whom inherit their principles and their blood, we have listened delighted to these, and to some of the original actors, who have given us their names, registered their deeds, and illustrated their virtues. They have left to me the less delightful, but no less important task, to consider their ORIGIN, CHARACTER, and MISSION: Who they were, what they were, and what they achieved.

It has been said, till it is trite, that God sifted three kingdoms for seed wheat to sow the United States. With equal verity it can be said that the seed wheat of the United States was re-sifted for the men and women who have kept the States united; who stood by the ark of our Union, through the furnace-blast of slavery and secession. Of these were those whose labors and memories have drawn us together; who drove away the wolves, scared up the wild fowl, built their log cabins, reared their family altars, and founded the First Church of Christ in the autumn of 1836, now half a century ago. They were Congregationalists, Presbyterians and Baptists, with a sprinkling of Methodists, Episcopalians, and Mennonites. But their church has no sectarian designation. They united as Americans, and worshipped together as Christians.

Churches resemble those plants whose chief flavor is in their roots. Led by their founder, Professor Gale, the first colonists came from western New York, where they left the stumps still standing, from which they or their fathers had cut off tall trees; and though, like the church in the Mayflower, their motives were mainly religious, they inherited from those other Pilgrims enough practical sagacity and care for the temporalities, to make it no objection to migrating that they were coming where there were no more forests to cut down. They came into treeless prairies, yielding crops of corn the first six months; and, as true religion is not destitute of poetry, they were thrilled by what seemed to them natural flower gardens of God; oceans of waving green bounded only by the horizon, bedizened with an endless variety of flowers, growing without planting or culture. They found meadows yielding hay for their cattle without cost, but for putting up, and furnishing them flocks of wild chickens without care or feeding.

But their propellant motives were religion and religious education. They organized a college before leaving home. They kept the Sabbath and held prayer-meetings throughout the journey; inaugurated public worship the Sabbath after their arrival; and opened a high school in a few months. For this they traveled in wagons from early spring to summer, where much of the way they had to make at once both their journey and their road; while forty of their number came in a crowded canal boat, in summer, over two thousand miles. This journey cost the lives of three of their beloved leaders, Mills, Smith, and Lyman, while the whole party narrowly escaped the same fate.

Like Israel, we need often to look back to the smallness of our beginnings. I came to Galesburg some ten years after the founding of this church. In that year, all the goods sold here were sold in one small room. Chicago, then a moderate sized town, was four days' journey away, and our village had but a few hundred people. The little bell which still hangs above the college came down Main street ringing out a roundelay, and the students, with their hereditary penchant for merriment, hung out a lantern in the weather-beaten frame of the church, which had long stood uncovered, on the night of my arrival, as a substitute for illumination in honor of my coming. The college was without a diploma plate; had graduated no classes; was in debt five thousand dollars, and running behind five dollars a day. In each of the last five years of my administration, Mr. Gary reported the college utterly out of debt, and the trustees held the college, at a low appraisal of its assets, worth four hundred thousand dollars.

The light shed by this First Church of Christ was neither local nor limited. Whenever a church holds up God's truth in the face of hoary error or entrenched wrong, it sends its beams around the globe. Nor was its light all of one hue. It presented all the beautiful colors of a moral prism. We called a convention in Chicago, to "divorce American slavery from American missions." One hundred ministers and sixty delegates attended, and the divorce was granted by the committee in New York. And the great and popular American Home Missionary Society, with its eleven hundred pastors, spread over our wide frontiers, became free from the taint of oppression. That Chicago convention was the pivot on which American sentiment turned. For the one who pitches the tune plays it. Thousands were sincerely opposed to slavery "in principle;" but this church put its principles in practice; and consistent practice differs from abstract principle as a living man differs from a corpse. The "faith without works is dead." What overthrew slavery was the conviction, quaintly expressed by the great-souled Lincoln, "If slavery ain't wrong then nothing's wrong." And this conviction in the American mind was produced by those who, like this church, not only taught the truth, but practiced it by enforced discipline. The good Dr. Badger, secretary of the Home Missionary Society, not long after that Chicago convention, in a full General Association in the city of Rockford, publicly thanked us for our wisdom and patience in procuring that divorce.

But all national evils blend at the bottom; and the founders of this church saw that the licensed liquor saloons were the workshops of American politics. They, therefore, impressed prohibition of the liquor traffic on the site of Galesburg earlier than its charter and deep as the bottoms of its cellars. And though our courts, situate between the distilleries of Peoria and the breweries of Milwaukee, affect to doubt the legality of the Galesburg prohibitory clause, courts elsewhere sustain it; and in several large States, and in Rhode Island, the smallest one, that Galesburg prohibitory clause is overwhelmingly sustained by the county local option and the popular vote. That Galesburg clause will yet become the law of the United States. This church also, from the first, hated the smell of tobacco, as a drawback on piety and a needless tax on patience, purity, and property; and this sentiment, too, is fast becoming the sentiment of the American churches.

When the welcome railroad track was arriving here from Chicago, a prayer meeting was held in our pastor's study, and correspondence held with wealthy stockholders, East. As I now recollect, they all belonged to the church, and all thanked us for our efforts to guard the laborers' day of religious rest. The first official bulletin of Colonel Hammond assured the employes on the C. B. & Q. railroad that their right to a day of religious rest should be respected; and in his letter to our committee, Colonel Hammond, said we were strengthening the hands of good men, and benefiting the road; that the carrying trade of the country could be better and safer done in six days than in seven, in an even rather than in an odd number; and if ministers and churches generally took our ground, the stock of Sabbath-keeping roads would stand highest, because Christian men would prefer it.

Thus this church, like that church which lies buried on the hill which overlooks Plymouth Rock, was glorious in its conception, and is Scriptural in its title and in its polity. Like the Pilgrim church of 1620; like the Moody church in Chicago of today; and like every other church modeled after the New Testament, this First Church of Christ has "elders that rule well," as well as elders that "labor in word and doctrine," and indeed it reminds us of Milton's

"Hesperus that led the starry host Rode brightest and brought in the dawn."

Nor is it singular or alone. The General Association of Illinois, to which it belongs, has in its records intensified every sentiment of reform which this church has ever held or uttered, event to prohibiting the use of tobacco in its candidates for the ministry, which, I believe, this church has never formally done.

Just ten years before the Galesburg colony came here, a citizen of Batavia, N. Y., was taken from a young wife and two children, and murdered at midnight, for revealing the secrets of Freemasonry.

Not a paper or civil officer moved to enforce the law for protecting the citizen's life, till the untitled masses, farmers, shopkeepers and village mechanics, originated a new party, with new presses and new men, as Seward, Weed, Ritner, Stevens and others in the lead. After six years' discussion, four years before this colony was formed, several States had elected Anti-masonic governors and prohibited lodge oaths by law. Vermont cast her electoral vote solid against the lodge; New York imprisoned the kidnappers, and in 1832 the new party cast three times as many votes as were cast by the Liberty party at its second canvass in 1844. Our colonists came out of the white heat of that terrible discussion.

But who and what were they that they should have gone into that discussion? This was full twenty-four years before the lash of the slave power drove American voters to elect Abraham Lincoln. Why should this handful of men and women put their families and principles in wagons, and bring and plant them here against popular sentiment, North as well as South? Were they not, as they were called, "fanatics?"

Let us see.

The churches in what the pro-slavery parties of that day called, "The infected district," were Presbyterian churches, planted by Congregationalists, and fused with them by "The Plan of Union of 1801." Their ideas were those of the Lutheran reformers, sifted through Scotch and English sieves. Their religious ancestors had studied their Bible by the light of burning martyrs, like those by which Nero lit the streets of Rome. Some lodge men trace their principles back to the time of Adam, and they are correct. The question was started in Eden, which has been debated ever since, whether God has given religion to men, or whether men may invent religions for themselves. And the Cains of humanity have always taken part with man's religions against God's. This was the issue between Moses and the magicians. This was the issue debated at Carmel between Elijah and the priests of Baal, and decided by fire from heaven. This, too, was the question met by Luther at Worms, whether salvation was by man-invented ceremonies or by faith in Christ. The Scotch Presbyterians stood, they said, for Christ's Crown Rights; and rather than practice senseless ceremonies enjoined by Charles and Lauderdale, eighteen thousand Presbyterians, in twenty-five years, suffered death, banishment, imprisonment, or loss of goods. Their English Congregational neighbors had suffered in pillories and prisons for the same cause; some having their ears cropped and the stumps dug out, for refusing the same sort of solemn ceremonies and abject submission which Mr. Powderly requires of his knights. The Galesburg pioneers were such fanatics, then, as Luther in Germany, Conde in France, John Knox in Scotland, and the beloved John Robinson in England. They opposed slavery and secret societies. The demands of slavery and of the lodge are one and the same, obedience or death. The non-union laborer is required to submit or not work; swear secrecy or starve, and his wife and children starve with him.

In the late great Southwestern strike, mothers in the mountain villages hugged their babes to their bosoms to keep them warm, because a secret order forbid freight trains to bring them coal; and the Western chief of that order published that in a few weeks not a freight train would be permitted between the oceans, to move codfish from Boston, beef from Chicago, molasses from New Orleans, coal from Pennsylvania, or grain from Illinois, unless our civil authorities should recognize their existence and yield to their demands. It was out of such an earthquake period as this, fifty years ago, that the churches of Christ arose, put on their garments of light, and the most stupendous revivals the world had ever seen swept over the Northern States.

Let us rejoice that in looking over the past half century of her existence, this church has no words to recall and no action to regret. And now, looking over the battle fields and cemeteries ridged with graves, she can exclaim with honest pride, "If my example had been followed those graves had not been dug!" Happy, fortunate mother of deserving children! And as our Saviour represents the scenes and persons on this earth as visible to the holy departed, what a cloud of noble men and women are looking in upon us to-night!

[NOTE.—The above paragraphs are printed as spoken. Much is omitted for retrenchment's sake. Though the crowd was made up of staid, incombustible, and religious people, the Republican Register's report gives several instances of applause and none of disapproval. Reverence for their founders, the crimes of secrecy against the country, and the progress of the discussion are swaying the whole country toward the open methods of Christ, and against the bandit methods of sworn secrecy.]

DR. JAMES B. WALKER.

PORTION OF THE FUNERAL ADDRESS AT WHEATON,
MARCH 8TH, BY PRES. C. A. BLANCHARD.

Our brother is at rest. The struggle of his early years for bread and a home, the darkness of religious doubts and fears, the gradual settling of his faith in God and his Word, his long battle for the rights of the despised and down-trodden slave, his total abstinence principles and practices, his condemnation of all infidel associations, such as Freemasonry, his labors for the orphaned, his solemn and earnest preaching of the Gospel—all are ended. Loving hands have ministered for the last time to his earthly wants; on mortal ears for the last time have fallen his gentle tones, and loving hearts are gathered here to-day to offer their last tribute of respect to his memory.

It is well that we do so. If we fail to remember with gratitude those who have laid for us the foundations on which we build, have perished as martyrs to the truths we profess, have died sword in hand for the privileges we enjoy, or in the depths of their own soul struggles have found footing places for our faith, we wrong ourselves and them. But the noblest tribute we can offer any being is to seek to resemble him. The very essence of worship is imitation. The child love does everything as mother does. It copies even the tones of her voice.

I loved our father in the faith who now has passed beyond our sight. In his home I never seemed to myself a stranger, and now that I am standing in this place it is my desire to speak with his words to you, my neighbors and friends. I would emphasize those fundamental truths to which he clung; would comfort and strengthen all those who are following the patient track which has conducted his spirit into glory. I do not speak to him but to you. I do not speak for him but for his Master and mine, the glorious, blessed Jesus, the friend of sinners, the Saviour of the world.

And first of all, dear friends, let us listen as he did to the voice from heaven. The only word which can give peace to the soul must come from above. Not from within, not from the without, but from the above. Philosophy, wealth, power, pleasure,—miserable comforters are they all in an hour like this. The Bible is the only clear revelation of God's will and man's destiny. He who hopes for peace on any other foundation is a doomed man. * * *

Observe what the voice from heaven told John in this particular occasion. Happy are the dead who are dying in fellowship with the Lord, from now on. The words I vary a little from our good old English Bible, but keep close to the thought. The name of death had been to nations a word of terror. Out of Christ it is a terror to-day. Jesus is the only one who ever succeeded in making a dying bed feel soft as downy pillows are. Death is a subject about which ugly people do not like to think. Nature throws no light beyond the grave. The wisest and best of the ancients were perfectly helpless. They longed, and reasoned, and hoped, and that was all. Life and immortality were never brought to light anywhere except in the Gospel.

But Jesus, who desires the happiness as well as the holiness of his people, gave to them, in the midst of their struggles with sin and Satan and cruel men, a revelation of what shall be the outcome of this battle, and thus encouraged and cheered them as they pressed on toward victory. We have this story in the fourteenth of Revelations.

At first Jesus appeared in glory surrounded by one hundred and forty-four thousand happy beings, each of them having the name of God written in his forehead. As he looked on this great company, beautiful and happy as if they had never known sin or care or sorrow, he heard the sound of voices and harps, like the sound of many waters or rolling thunder. He listened and found that it was a hymn of praise that the one hundred and forty and four thousand were singing, and that these very persons were redeemed from the earth, redeemed from among men.

What a marvel! The angels who never sinned gazing from a distance on the Son of God, while the sinners whom he had redeemed by his own blood, who had known the pains and hunger and weariness of earth, are given a place next to him, and sing a song that all the angelic host can hear but cannot imitate.

But as the loving John looked upon this sight he may have said, but there are so few and in the world there are so many. So the scene changes. Mount Zion with its great host fades from his sight. Their song of redemption dies away in his ears, and as he looks he sees an angel flying through the heaven having the everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people. To the yellow millions of China, the black millions of Africa, the brown millions of the island world, the white millions of Europe and America, even the red men in their forest homes, all were to hear this message; and down through the silent starry spaces came the word of hope: Jesus Christ, by the grace of God, tasted death for every man. Glory to God!

As his soul took in these great thoughts, that the saved are to be nearest Jesus in glory, that the proclamation of the everlasting Gospel is to be made to all men, and that every one who will forsake sin shall be as safe as the very throne of God, and that those who set themselves against him will surely be overthrown, a great peace was breathed into his heart, and he sang again that angel song: "Glory to God in the highest, on earth, peace, good will to men." And then the angel said—the voice from heaven said—Write: Happy are the dead who are dying in the Lord, from now. Yea, saith the Spirit—write it—that they may rest from their weariness.

They have not understood this matter clearly, said the Lord. They have been pressed for the necessities of life. They have often known what cold and sickness are. They are wearied with the care of their children. They are often wearied and heart-sore because their children are beyond their care. They have striven to overcome temptation, but often times have fallen under its power. They have striven to do duty, but their works have seemed small and worthless to them. Their enemies are many, and when they cannot kill my poor sheep they wink at and rail at and revile them. Nay, Satan torments them even as he did me on the cross, and when the great battle between life and death is in its last hour he, liar that he is, tells them that God has forsaken them.

Write it down, therefore, O man of God, for the consolation of the little child whose baby feet shrink back as the cold waters of death dash upon them; for the consolation of the young man in the pride of his strength, the young woman in the pride of her beauty, as they near the portal of the grave. Write it down—for old and young, for rich and poor, for learned and ignorant, for king and peasant, millionaire and beggar, brawny man and shrinking woman. Write it down—that my people are mine and that I am theirs; that in the glory land they shall be nearest me—shall follow me, and that every one who would injure them shall be overthrown in a ruin as complete as that which fell, in fire, upon Sodom and Gomorrah. Now I charge you, my neighbors and friends, in the name of my Master whose feet are at the door, and in the name of my brother, in whose stead I this day plead, rest in absolute confidence upon this Word of God, and it will be a pillow upon which your head may rest while troops of bright-winged angels wait to attend your glorified spirit to the mansions prepared.

And your works will follow you. We do not ask that our children do great things for us. Only that they shall do little acts of kindness. The little printed letters, the crooked-stitched mottoes, the ungainly bit of patchwork, all these are dear to the father and mother heart. You despise that imperfect Christian. You see nothing but the ink blots, and crooked letters, and coarse stitches, but God loves him for he knows how he cried when he handed in his poor, blotted, crooked day, and said, "Dear Father in heaven, I am sorry it isn't better; I will try to do better. I love thee"—and God is able to make him stand. Their works follow with them. Every cup of cold water given to a disciple; every time you washed the face of a homeless child, or gave what you needed to another in greater want, or went out to plead with men for God, or went in to plead with God for men, or lifted your voice for the dumb, all is remembered, all is rewarded,—their works follow with them.

A great troop of good deeds followed our brother into the land where the inhabitants never say, "I am sick." Thirteen orphans reared under his roof; many flying fugitives helped on their way to liberty; a consistent Christian life; a consistent Christian testimony. God be thanked that he enabled this, his servant, so faithfully to fulfill the duties allotted him.

And let us, dear neighbors and friends, as we go from this house of God and these opening gates of heaven, grasp more fully than ever before the hope set before us in the Gospel; dedicate ourselves as never before to the work of God among men. So shall we die the death of the righteous, and our last end be like his.

When the knowledge of God fades from the mind, it does not leave a vacuum. Atheism has its deities, which it worships under the names of Nature, or Chance, or Fate. No, the atheist dare not be without a God. Standing upon a world without an intelligent regulator, sailing through space with inconceivable velocity, he would feel like one on board a ship, amid reefs and whirlpools, her sails all set, cords all strained, without a helm or a hand to control it, present death before him, and unknown deeps yawning below.

REFORM NEWS.

TO THE IOWA FRIENDS OF REFORM.

DEAR BRETHREN:—The Iowa State Association is in need of financial help to sustain the lecture work and to carry forward the work of distributing literature throughout the State. Will not those of you who have subscribed to pay to the Treasurer of the State Association do so as soon as you consistently can as we are behind in meeting expenses.

Send your subscriptions as fast as possible to the Treasurer, James Harvey, Pleasant Plain, Jefferson Co., Iowa. Those of you who have not been called upon for subscriptions please send voluntary donations to the Treasurer.

Those who subscribed for the Cynosure but did not pay cash I would have send the money as soon as you can to James Harvey, stating that it is for the Cynosure. Your paper is marked paid at the Cynosure office. The subscription price is coming to me. As soon as you can conveniently do so, please send the money to James Harvey.

Collectors, where subscriptions have been taken, will please collect as fast as you can and forward as directed, and we shall be able to make up what is behind and have funds to scatter literature over the State.

FRIENDS MANY AND OPPOSERS FEW IN AUGUSTA, GA.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Mar. 5, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Among the many objects of interest in this city are the fine monuments on Broad and Green streets, May Park, and the village of Summerville. The park was begun but four years ago and is not completed but is one of the finest I have seen in the South. If the expense of these monuments and this park had been appropriated to building some decent school-houses it would have been much more to the credit of the city. Summerville is a separate borough, three miles above the city on a high plateau of red sand, and until recently was known as Sand Hills. It is an important winter resort. Nowhere have I seen such fine residences or such beautiful walks and gardens.

Here is the United States Arsenal with its numerous fine buildings. It was first built about 1826 in what are now the city limits but about 1840 was removed to the present site. The largest building was erected by the Confederacy and is as long as our National Capitol, though not so high or so wide. If the people of the South had left no other memento of their prowess, this building would attest their hopes and their earnestness. It is somewhat remarkable that the earthquake of Aug. 31 which did but little injury in the city should have most seriously shaken these large fine buildings. The walls of some of them were nearly broken down and great cracks a foot across were made in their sides. For a time they were untenable and the extensive repairs are not yet completed. On the morning of March 4th two distinct shocks were felt here. As I saw the long rows of great and small cannon and the vast quantity of shot and shell piled in the widespread grounds, and as I saw the armed sentinels keeping up the mimicry of war, I could but think that the spirit of Cain was still a controlling power in the earth. The Prince of Peace is not yet acknowledged in our Government.

There are some things in Augusta for which we may rejoice, for while it is a most thoroughly Masonic city, some of its ministers and people are waking up to the enormity of the secret lodge system and are putting forth some effort to arrest its progress. Rev. H. S. Hayes is the pastor of an M. E. church and especially interested in the "Holiness work." He was Deputy Grand Master of the A. F. & A. M., and well acquainted with Dr. A. G. Mackey. He is a well-posted Mason, but has renounced his Masonic covenant as utterly inconsistent with his duties as a Christian. He called to see me to bid me a God-speed in my work. Several Baptist pastors, among whom are Elders Jackson, Blair, Barnes and Morgan, have undertaken to protest against lodge dictation. Elder Jackson of the Central Baptist church is most prominent and has drawn down fire from the lodges. These brethren have been materially helped by the Cynosure and will take no step backward.

On the evening of the 3rd I addressed the students and teachers of Miss Lancy's school on Africa and its missions. On the morning of the 4th I visited Payne Institute, a flourishing Normal and Theological school under the patronage of the M. E. church South. Pres. Walker and Prof. Carson said they were both Masons and Odd-fellows. Prof. Carson seemed greatly devoted to the orders and could not imagine why any one should oppose them. Pres. Walker said he was glad to have me address the students on this subject, and after I had spoken for forty-five minutes said that while he was a Mason and belonged to other secret orders, he advised them not to join any secret order but to carefully consider the arguments that had been presented. He said secret societies had done immense harm in the South, especially the Union League and the Ku-Klux Klan. Prof. Carson assayed a brief reply. He said it was only a question whether charities should be organized or unorganized. Secret societies were simply organized charities. He saw no objection to the omission of the name of Christ from the lodge rituals since it was omitted from the Lord's prayer. A student inquired whether there was anything in the covenant of the lodge inconsistent with the covenant of the church, and Prof. Carson assured him there was not. From this conclusion I ventured a dissent. Certainly a good impression was made.

At 8 P. M. I lectured in the Cumming's Grove Baptist church, Summerville, Rev. A. T. Blair, pastor. The house of worship, which is a good-sized, neat structure, was well-filled, and I had the attention and sympathy of nearly all. They were eager to get my tracts and I could have sold quite a number of books, but I did not have them. A recent case of church discipline in which Masonic influence had screened a guilty minister, had aroused their attention. They insisted that I should give them a second lecture. I have also promised to preach in the Central church in this city on Sabbath and to lecture in the same place on Monday night. I also expect to address the Baptist ministers' meeting on Monday at 11 A. M. Several days of quite sultry weather have been succeeded by a damp, cold air. My health is somewhat improved since I came here.

FROM THE OHIO WORK.

THE FUNERAL OF DR. WALKER AT MANSFIELD.

MANSFIELD, Mar. 10, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am awaiting a train to Creston. During the past week I have been working in the vicinity of Gallon and Iberia, returning to this city Tuesday afternoon. Sabbath evening I addressed a good audience in the U. P. church, Iberia. Rev. J. P. Robb, the pastor, made some very interesting introductory remarks, in which he set forth the objects of our Association, stating that we knew no denominational lines, but our work was endorsed by a large number of orthodox churches. He spoke with pleasure of the approaching Congress, and was gratified to know of the interest manifested by those who signed the call. The introduction was good; of what followed others should judge. I may simply add that there were many heated discussions in the stores and on the streets the following day as a result, which will at least set people to thinking.

On Monday evening I attended what is known as the Champion Literary Society, which meets two miles from Iberia in the Nelson school house. I was pleased to note the interest taken by the young people, manifest in the large attendance and the preparation of their various parts on the programme. They unanimously voted to allow me the time usually given to their debate, to give my reasons for opposing the lodge. Although the evening was advanced when I began, I spoke for more than an hour. The best of attention was given, and many questions asked.

I had rather an amusing conversation with the gentleman having a tailor and barber shop in Iberia the next day. Learning that my mission was to oppose secret societies, he asked several questions to which I replied. Entering into conversation I found that he had been an Odd-fellow while in Pennsylvania; that he had a traveling card from lodge No. 103, but that he had not been in a lodge for a long time. I inquired if the ceremonies did not seem foolish to him, describing a few. He said that they did seem foolish. He then laughingly remarked, "We used to scare some of the fellows that came in awful. We would rattle the chains and make it seem just like they were in hell." I then inquired if they scared him. "No," said he; "my uncle was an Odd-fellow, and he was afraid I would get scared, so he told me all about it before I went in." He said he thought in his lodge that they did not have a skeleton for the subjects to look at, but they used a plaster mummy,

Coming to this city I spent Tuesday night at the home of William Constance. He and his esteemed wife reassured me of their interest in our cause. Although Mr. Constance did not enjoy the advantages the young people have to day, in the educational line, he has been a close student of nature, reasoning accurately from cause to effect. Recently an account was given in a Mansfield paper of the installation of officers of a certain lodge in which Rev. Dunlap, a Lutheran preacher, was elected Supreme High Priest, and a notorious saloon keeper was elected treasurer. This same Dunlap is trying to get up a revival in Mr. C's. neighborhood. Of course he can take no stock in such a man or the work he may do.

Calling at Secretary George's Wednesday morning, I was told by Mrs. George that her husband was attending the funeral services of Dr. J. B. Walker of Wheaton, Ill., held in the Congregational church. The effect of this announcement can better be felt than described. I only reached the church in time to hear a part of the review of the Dr's. life given by Rev. Dr. Taylor, half-brother of the deceased, and to take a last look of what remained of a man who has done so much for the cause of Christ and humanity. The attendance at the funeral was not large, yet a good number, many of whom were aged, gathered to show their last tokens of respect to him who in former years had been a loved friend and pastor.

Dr. Taylor, in speaking of his brother's long and eventful life, alluded to the fact that he took a great interest in the unpopular reforms of the day; specified that he was an Abolitionist in the days of slavery; had always an interest in temperance; but seemed to have completely overlooked the reform which led the Dr. to choose Wheaton as his home in his declining years.

Dr. S. A. Bronson, rector of the Episcopal church, followed with a few remarks alluding to his former happy acquaintance with the deceased. Rev. J. W. Hubbell, present pastor of this church, made the concluding prayer. Both Dr. Bronson and Rev. Hubbell are Masons, the latter having recently joined, it is thought, for popularity. At least his church has become "rich and increased in goods." But I need not multiply words, doubtless others will speak of the Dr's. life through the columns of the Cynosure. He is gone but his works will follow him. As his books are studied from age to age, the Christian world will cherish his memory with gratitude.

On last evening I attended a very interesting discussion at the Young Men's Literary Club. Question, "Are oath-bound, secret societies dangerous to the church, family, and state?" The affirmative showed that they had made good preparation. The first speaker on the negative denied that any one could know anything about secret societies who did not belong. Said he did not belong, and yet tried to show that they were a good thing. How foolish, when he had admitted that he knew nothing about them! The usual plea of charity was made prominent. An account of this discussion would be interesting. But I must stop. W. B. STODDARD.

THE WEEKLY RECORD FROM IOWA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I came from Oskaloosa, Mahaska county, to Monroe county. I preached at Avery, a railroad town, the next Sabbath morning; and at Hayden Chapel M. E. church, four miles distant, in the evening. On Tuesday night, following, I lectured in the United Presbyterian church of Albia, the county seat of Monroe county. All the ministers in the city, except one, were present. The Lord grant that the seed may have fallen into good ground. The seed was good, and it was liberally scattered. May the Lord of the harvest give an abundant increase.

Rev. Joseph Boyd, the pastor of the United Presbyterian church of Albia, is a staunch reformer, and an able minister. He has charge of an academy that has been recently founded in Albia. We bespeak for him a liberal patronage.

While at Albia, I formed the acquaintance of Rev. Mr. Porter, a Seceder minister, who is pastor of the Seceder church of Albia. He is deeply interested in our reform. In fact the Seceders everywhere stand for Christ against the Masonic anti-Christ.

On Wednesday night I lectured in a hall, at Avery, where I had preached the Sabbath morning before. Rev. Mr. Thompson, a Covenanter minister, and Rev. Mr. Acheson, a Seceder minister, reside in this town, and were both present at the lecture.

On Thursday night I lectured in the Seceder church, of which Rev. Acheson is pastor, that is distant about two miles from Avery, and near the residence of Henry Elder, a pillar in the church, and a zealous reformer, who with his family showed me no little kindness.

On Friday I lectured at a United Presbyterian church four miles from Albia. This church is included in Rev. Boyd's pastorate. Here, I was greeted by Covenanters, whom I had met at the Covenanter Presbytery, held at Hickory Grove last fall. As soon as they understand the true character of ancient craft Masonry, all the friends of Jesus take a stand with Christ against it.

OBSERVATIONS FROM MICHIGAN.

However indifferent the Anti-masons may be, there are various indications that the Masonic arts are being busily applied to civil and religious work, if not to political work, for in our present struggle as a State for an amendment to our constitution, so as to exclude the saloon from every city and hamlet, and procure safety for our sons and daughters, it will be very singular if, in some part of the opposition, the peculiar workings of secret societies do not appear.

The Ida Lee case of the village of Brighton is the latest exhibition of the mysteries of secrecy. In this case the benevolent order of Odd-fellows plays a conspicuous part. In the first post mortem examination of the body it would seem that the "benevolent" doctors did the best they could to hide the real cause of the poor girl's death. Dr. Waite, who was first on the spot after the discovery of the body, and was very officious, may have helped to select the proper persons to conduct the post mortem. Whether this be true or not, every thing tending to criminate any one was very carefully concealed.

In accordance with lodge manners, the examination was performed behind closed doors, in the girl's bedroom, and no one allowed to be present as witness to what might be found. Afterward these doctors gave it as their opinion that it was a case of poisoning, probably administered by her own hand; as to that they did not pretend to know. It was, therefore, first published as a suicide, and would have rested there, under the seal of Friendship, Love, and Truth, but by some means, to the writer unknown, a day or two after a second examination was ordered by the prosecuting attorney from Howell, who also ordered a physician from that place to conduct it. Dr. Huntington accordingly repaired to Brighton and began his work. He had not proceeded far until he found evidence of criminal intimacy and of an attempted abortion, with ample evidence, also, that the young lady did not perform the work with her own hands.

"Did you not see this?" Dr. Huntington asked one of the first doctors, who had been sent for to be present at the second examination.

"Yes," said he.

"Why did you not testify to it?" said Dr. Huntington.

"The question was not asked me," said the other. "You have violated your oath," said Dr. Huntington.

Proceeding, the Dr. made search for the stomach, when after some time it was found, securely tucked under the lungs, having been first cut open and emptied of its contents! Dr. Waite was arrested, and his examination fixed for a certain day,—when lo! the poor doctor begs leave to have the proceedings postponed in order that he might attend the meeting of the Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows at Jackson, and his request is granted!

The end is not yet. The papers have had nothing to say concerning it, of late. We have no account of any examination, and probably the matter will drag slowly along until public sentiment dies away, when there will be a farcical performance called a trial, at which the jury will not agree, or acquit the guilty party, as has been the case so many times in the past.

The Amendment campaign opens slowly, as though all parties were in some doubt. The writer was in attendance at the State convention held in Lansing, Feb. 24, at which was exhibited some enthusiasm, and some plain truths were presented to the audience. Judge Cheever, one of the nominees for Justice of Supreme Court, made a ringing speech regarding the power of the rum traffic, and its influence in the church and its control of the secret societies, intimating in very strong terms that we were to be on our guard from this quarter. He argued the necessity for the continuation of the third party inasmuch as we have not fulfilled our mission in simply carrying a State, but must push on until the entire nation is saved from the curse of rum.

Bro. Tucker, one of our colporteurs, has been doing some good work at and near Salem, Michigan. Bro. Dennis of Morenci wrote requesting his services for a few days, and expressed his intention of being in attendance at the Congress, March 30, 31. At last accounts Bro. Tucker was moving toward Ann Arbor.

It is expected that our next meeting, in April, will be held at Spring Arbor, among our Free Methodist brethren. Let us all pray for a grand meeting.

H. A. DAY, Sec. M. C. A.

SOUTHERN OHIO AND REFORM.

CINCINNATI, Ohio.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In 1776 forty-six earnest men yonder in the city of Philadelphia signed the Bill of Rights, solemnly pledging their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor in defense of the principles of the Declaration. In 1871 one hundred and forty-six earnest men yonder in Pittsburg signed and swore a covenant solemnly pledging their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor in defense of the crown, rights and royal prerogative of the Lord Jesus Christ. The National Reform Association seeks to organize an army of those whose hearts beat in response to this vow and under the leadership of the "Captain of our salvation" we will soon take possession of this land for Christ.

Sabbath morning, Feb. 27th, I preached for Rev. W. H. French, D. D., of the United Presbyterian church on 6th street. He has been a National Reformer since the beginning of the movement. It is like carrying coals to Newcastle to go there with that message. But the doctor wishes all to know distinctly where he and his people stand. So that a secretary finds a hearty good welcome extended. In the evening I preached in the Walnut Hills Congregational church, Rev. J. W. Simpson, pastor. This is the old 7th street congregation. They only brought twenty-nine members up with them four years ago. They have been in their new church only one year. It is a beautiful building with parlors, dining-room, cloak room and lecture room, all handsomely furnished. They have prospered under the ministry of Bro. Simpson. Their membership now is something over two hundred. At the close of the service he was back at the door and I think he shook hands with every one present as they passed out. No wonder he builds up. This is the third church he has put up. He read the Christian Statesman for many years and attended the Theological Seminary at Allegheny and heard Drs. Hodge, Sloane and Milligan discuss National Reform. He is fully acquainted with it. He said as an introduction: "The National Reform Association is made up of men whose position and character command our respect. Our divine religion not only reaches individual hearts but every fiber of the social body. It is fitting, therefore, that its relations to our social order and the civil and political life of this nation be discussed in the pulpit. The District Secretary, after speaking in most of the churches of our city, comes to us to-night. I am sure he will receive a warm and hearty reception, as the principles of this cause claim our deepest and most thoughtful consideration." I had the eyes and ears of the people, and I think their hearts were with me.

On Monday evening I preached in Rev. Maurice Weller's Presbyterian church of Manchester. The house was filled. After the sermon Bro. Weller said: "This is the second time this Secretary has come and spoken to us on this question. He has given us a full and clear statement of the principles involved in it. I am sure we all are in the most hearty accord with the sentiments expressed. The National Reform Association is carrying on this work at great expense. I propose that we give expression to our sympathy with their efforts in the way of a collection." It was lifted. The Manchester weekly paper contained a full column report of our last meeting there.

On Tuesday evening I lectured in the Presbyterian church of West Union, Rev. S. W. Elliott, pastor. This is the county seat of Adams. There is an Orphan's Home on the east side of town. One John T. Willson gave $50,000 toward erecting it. It is a beautiful building. There are 25 acres of ground. Charles Downing is superintendent. They have sixty children there and carry on a regular school. When eighteen years old places are found for them. The audience here was excellent and it would have done you good to have heard the hearty amen. Rev. Palmer of the M. E. church led in the devotional exercises. J. A. O'Hara, of Texas, the "boy evangelist of the Baptist church," was present. Rev. Father Zimmerman, of the M. E. church was also there and Prof. Albert T. Turnipseed, superintendent of the Union schools. Several lawyers and doctors were out. It was a representative audience.

On Wednesday evening I lectured in the North Liberty Normal School hall. This building was put up years ago by Rev. Mr. Hutchison and run as an academy. Two years ago the United Presbyterian brethren bought it, and have since been carrying on a Normal School. It is under the care of this presbytery. Rev. J. P. Marter, the pastor of their congregation here, has charge of it. Mr. Dodds is his assistant. They have thirty students now. In the summer they have over 150. The hall was filled. People came from six miles around. The interest was very great. On Thursday evening I lectured in the Presbyterian church of Winchester. Rev. Thomas S. Parks, pastor. Here we had another fine audience. Adams county is ready for national reform.

Last Sabbath morning, March 6, I preached in the United Presbyterian church of Hamilton, Ohio, Rev. E. C. Simpson, pastor. His own people attend in the morning. A promiscuous audience fills the house in the evening. They have a pipe organ and a choir. Their music is of the first order. The Psalms are adapted to the highest order of music. In the evening I preached in the Presbyterian church, Rev. E. W. Abbey, pastor. This congregation numbers about 400. Hamilton is a manufacturing city of 18,000. They are to have two new railroads next summer. On Wednesday evening I preached on moral reforms in the Fourth Presbyterian church.

The editor of the Commercial Gazette, Murat Halstead, sets his face like a flint against prohibition. "He would not flatter Neptune for his trident or Jove for his power to thunder" or the Prohibition party for its principles, which are sure to triumph.

J. M. FOSTER.

A HOPEFUL LETTER.

MILTON JUNCTION, Wis., March 8, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I wish to write a line expressing the interest I take in the forthcoming congress of Christians in particular and the anti-secrecy cause in general. Although I have been silent for a long time that silence is in no way attributable to a lack of interest, for that instead of diminishing has been increasing, but to the force of circumstances that have hindered me from working as I had hoped to do. I am looking forward very anxiously to the Chicago congress and would so much like to be present were it possible. It seems to me that it is going to have a greater influence on the country at large than any meeting for the same purpose I have known about.

I am glad to see that so many are getting their eyes open and taking hold of the work. For while we do not place our faith in any human power to accomplish the task, yet when we see persons of power and influence inquiring into the matter with an interest before unmanifested it does look to our short-sighted vision as if God's time for pressing the battle to the very gates had come and that the ardent prayers that have ascended to the throne are about to be answered.

How I hate this system of organized secrecy. Is it not surprising how such a system can so completely blind the eyes of its devotees? In all the conversations I have ever had with secretists I have left them with the impression that nothing but the Spirit of the living God in their hearts could enlighten their darkened minds.

Praying earnestly that the blessing of God may be upon the congress in its services, I am, yours for the cause in Christ, MATTIE S. HARVEY.

Since January 1st, 1880, the nations of Christendom have indulged in forty-seven great wars, and leaving minor squabbles and indirect expenses out of view, our sacrifices on the altar of war since that day may be roughly estimated at 130,000,000,000 dollars, or just about 500,000,000 pounds of gold—sums which may be pronounced in two seconds, though a freight train transporting the gold in American box cars of the average size and running at the usual rate of speed, would be two hours in passing any given point, for such a train would be twenty-two miles long. An equivalent in thousand-pound bank notes might be crammed into a box that could be carried on a medium-sized express wagon, but with the contents of that box we might have built double-track railroads from Halifax to Valparaiso, from Paris to Peking, from Cape Town to Stockholm; we might have bridged or under-tunnelled the English Channel, the Straits of Gibraltar, the Kattegat and the Hellespont, the Mississippi at New Orleans and the Amazon at Para; we might have drained the Zuyder Zee and the Florida swamps, covered the hills of Asia Minor with cedars and the Libyan Desert with palm trees, converted Greece and Persia into garden lands, and Timbuctoo into a seaport town; we might have done all that and have money enough left to celebrate the birth of a new era by a grand international thanksgiving day.—*U. BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON XIII.—March 27, 1887.—Review and Missions.—Gen. 15: 17-26.

From Peloubet's Notes.

NOTE.—The Scripture lesson selected by the committee (Gen. 15: 17-26) has been practically explained in Lesson 8. It will be easier to bring that in as part of a larger view. For the course of lessons for the Quarter are such that nearly every one has a missionary application, so that this application can be effectively made while we review the Lessons.

SUBJECT.—The Progress of the Kingdom of God.

I. The World God's by Creation (Lesson 1). All men have the same Father in heaven, the same ancestor on earth. All are of one spirit and one blood. Therefore (1) all should worship the one Creator. (2) All men are brethren, and we should treat all, even the lowest, as brethren. (3) If they are brethren, we must send them the news of the Saviour, and lift them up into the heavenly life.

II. Sin has come upon All (Lessons 2, 3). All men not only inherit tendencies to sin, but have yielded to temptation, as our first parents did. Temptation and sin and degradation are everywhere. Cain's life and treatment of Abel are examples of what is going on all over the world. Sin is here, a malignant disease. Therefore the world needs the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Saviour.

III. "And Death by Sin" (Lessons 4, 5). The destruction of the world by the flood, and of Sodom by fire, because of their terrible and hopeless sin, are examples of the fruit and danger of sin, always and everywhere.

Therefore we should not only escape for our lives, but, like Noah, preach righteousness and prepare an ark, and like the angels, warn and hasten men from the Sodom of sin. And we should haste to show all the world the way of salvation.

IV. Our Brother's Keeper (Lessons 3, 6). Wicked men like Cain ask, "Am I my brother's keeper?" But good men like Abraham ever seek to do their brethren good. One of the corner-stones of missions is brotherly love.

V. The Kingdom of God (Lessons 1, 2, 4, 5, 7). Lesson 1 gives us a glimpse of the paradise which God would have all men regain. Lesson 2 shows us the first promise of a Redeemer. Lesson 4, an illustration of salvation by faith. Lesson 5 teaches us of God's call, and the beginning of his covenant and the dawn of his glorious kingdom, which are made more clear in Lesson 7. It is this promise of God which he is fulfilling by missions. Through them Paradise is to be regained and the kingdom of God is to come.

VI. Prayer (Lessons 8, 11, 12). In these Lessons we have an example of pleading for the lost—of prayer that leads to better living and more complete consecration. Prayer is essential to missions. Praying for others is a part of the means of salvation, and leads to work as well as prayer. When the Church wrestles with God for the coming of his kingdom, it will be at hand.

VII. Consecration (Lessons 8, 10, 11, 12). A few devoted persons would have saved Sodom. The Gospel leaven should be working. Lesson 8. Abraham gave up his only son to God. Let us consecrate ourselves, our children, our treasures, to God, Lesson 10. Jacob gave one-tenth of all his income to the Lord. When every Christian does this, there will be marvellous progress in the kingdom of God, and all the world will see the ladder from earth to heaven, Lesson 11. Jacob was changed from a worldly-wise man to one who had power with God and with men. So shall we, wrestling with God for the blessing, have power with God through Pentecostal days, and power with men to draw them to God.

VIII. The Outlook. The unfolding Providence of God, the fuller dawning of divine truths, the foundation-stones of the kingdom of God, the vision of hope, the promises of blessing to all the world, the preparations for the coming of the Redeemer.

The secret orders are all of a class. The man is still unborn and unknown who belongs to any secret order, and exercises a healthful influence against the other orders. It was the relation between master and slave that was wicked. Its mildest manifestations were wrong, and it was the use and not its abuse only that was sinful. The temperance workers cannot discriminate between the mild and the strong drinks to allow the one and forbid the other. Organized secrecy ostensibly for the promotion of temperance is yoking up a serpent with a dove. The dove suffers, and the serpent is honored. Then there is no natural relation between the two. The cause of temperance needs no cover. To hide it is to mar its influence and abate its light. "Secret societies as a class are evil in their nature and tendency and lead to spiritual declension." This sentiment failed before the commission, but it will succeed elsewhere.—Christian Conservator.

The term "habitual drunkard" is thus defined by a Maryland judge: "An habitual drunkard was such person as had acquired the habit of getting drunk frequently; that it was not necessary that such person should be always drunk, or that he had to be drunk every day or every week; but that if he had acquired the habit of drinking to drunkenness, although there might be periods or intervals when he was sober, he was to be regarded as a habitual drunkard within the meaning of the law."

OBITUARY.

DR. JAMES B. WALKER, author of "The Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," "The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit," and other works, died at his home in Wheaton, Ill., on Sabbath evening last. The funeral services were held in the College Chapel Tuesday. The following historical paper was read by President J. Blanchard, who has been for more than forty-five years a fellow-laborer with the deceased. His remains were taken to Mansfield, Ohio, for burial:

The Hon. and Rev. J. B. Walker, son of James and Margaret Barr Walker, was born in Philadelphia July 29, 1805. He died surrounded by an excellent and loving family, at his residence in Wheaton, Ill., Sabbath evening, March 6, 1887.

The briefest account of the life and achievements of Dr. Walker would require, not a funeral sketch, but a volume.

He inherited a slender physique, and, of course, lacked the characteristics of the robust. His father died before he was born, leaving no record but his marriage certificate and Masonic regalia. His grandparents took his mother and himself, while but little above infancy, to a farm in the woods, twenty miles west of Fort Pitt, before it became Pittsburg. And this wonderful woods child, during his long life, became a factory boy at Pittsburg, a store boy in West Virginia, a schoolmaster in New York, an editor, politician, law student and college student in Ohio, then a Bible agent, pastor, professor and author in the same State; afterward a State Senator and college president in Michigan; an editor, printer, and property holder in Chicago, and finally, an assistant president and professor in Wheaton College. He was first a political editor of the Jackson school in Ravenna, Ohio, and a skeptic. He became a Christian, and his way out of skepticism is put under a shower of sunbeams in his "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," a book now in most college courses of study, and published and read in the principal languages of the earth. After his Christian change he became owner and editor of the Hudson Observer. He did not meet and act with the Abolitionists, but he sustained them by his paper, and, when harassed by the conservatives of slavery in the church, he sold them his paper at an advantage. He came to Cincinnati when the slavery fight was hottest, and the city had been three days and nights in the power of the mob. He was warned out of town by hints from William Burnett, of the leading aristocratic family in the city. He calmly and quietly held on his way, publishing the only Presbyterian paper, which steadily advocated the abolition of slavery. Selling his Cincinnati paper, he commenced the Herald of the Prairie, now the Advance, in Chicago, and he has since lived as an author. During his whole long life he has met every true reform and sustained it. He was 21 years of age when William Morgan was murdered for revealing the secrets of the lodge, and sustained the anti-secret movement by his last paper started in Northern Michigan, and accepted the first place on the American party ticket by an able letter. And his last vote was cast against the saloon. He was taken from his sick bed to the polls to give that vote. By the papers, which he founded and edited, he has sustained American principles and the American Union by his own clear principles and intense individuality; and by his "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," which is now printed, taught and read around the globe, he will be preaching the Gospel of Christ to our race, till the Saviour himself comes to give him "a crown of righteousness" like that laid up for Paul.—From the Inter-Ocean.

SECRET SOCIETIES CON-
'DEMNNED

BY EMINENT EDUCATORS.

PRESIDENT F. H. M. HENDERSON, Boston College, Ga.—I regard all secret societies as extremely liable to be perverted.

PRESIDENT NOAH PORTER, Yale College.—That there are serious evils connected with them cannot be questioned; that they accomplish some good is equally clear.

PRESIDENT HITCHCOCK, Amherst College.—These, at different periods, have been fruitful sources of excitement, jealousy, and heart burning among the students.

JOSEPH MOORE, President Earlham College.—The fact that Freemasonry often thwarts every effort to enforce the law against an offender who is of the fraternity, shows it to be an obstacle to moral and civil progress.

HOWARD CROSBY, D. D., Chancellor University, New York.—Thirty years ago I was a member of a college secret society, and while I had upright fellow-members, and we encouraged literary culture, I found the association was chiefly a temptation to vice.

PROF. J. R. JACQUES, Illinois Wesleyan University.—Among college students, at an age when most susceptible, secret societies tend to breed that secretive disposition which is the very opposite of the truly candid, generous, and magnanimous character.

DR. BEYSCHLAG, Professor in the University of Halle.—Never entertain the idea to join the lodge for popularity's sake. It is utterly degrading to imagine pastors, men who have to deal with Christianity, the most universal and opening in the world, wrapped up in the mummeries of Freemasonry.

PRES. J. BLANCHARD.—There have been civil and ecclesiastical pests ever since there was a government and religion; and Freemasonry is one of those pests. The Cains of humanity have rejected Christ and worshiped nature, and Nimrods have denied justice and practiced oppression. But both are combined in the lodge.

PROF. J. R. W. SLOANE, D. D., Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary.—But my strongest opposition to Masonry is because of its rivalry with religion. It steps in before the church, and is a false, an idolatrous religion, a religion without a Saviour and, therefore, a delusion and a snare to all who engage in it, or rest their hope upon it.

PROF. BURT G. WILDER, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.—I am willing to hazard my position . . . upon the truth of the proposition that secret societies are unknown in heaven, but that they form a prominent and essential feature of life in the other locality. Light versus darkness; openness versus mystery; mutual confidence versus suspicion and distrust.

PROF. S. C. BARTLETT, D. D., Chicago Theological Seminary.—There are certain other wide spread organizations, such as Freemasonry, which, we suppose, are in their nature hostile to good citizenship and true religion, because they exact initiatory oaths of blind compliance and concealment, incompatible with the claims of equal justice toward man and a good conscience toward God.

PROF. J. G. CARSON, D. D., Xenia, Ohio.—These associations are inconsistent with the genius of Christianity, because the secrecy which they effect, and to which they bind their members by promise or oath, is unnecessary and so unwarrantable, dangerous, and ensnaring to the conscience, and, therefore, utterly opposed to that openness and publicity which Christ enjoins on his disciples both by example and precept.

PRESIDENT C. G. FINNEY, of Oberlin, 1868.—We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. In our judgment we are forced to the same conclusion, we cannot escape from it, we wish it were otherwise, we therefore sorrowfully but solemnly pronounce this judgment."

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 17, 1887.

THE VENERABLE "FIRST CHURCH OF CHRIST" in Galesburg, Ill., a church of some four hundred members (Rev. A. R. Thain, pastor), has appointed one of its officers, Mr. Frank Wells, delegate to the Chicago Congress, March 30th. This is a good example set by a good church. Six hundred students of Knox College have been members of that church, most of them, doubtless, converted there, who are now judges of courts, professors in colleges, legislators and prominent citizens. Dr. Joseph E. Roy on this side, and Dr. James H. Warren beyond the Rocky Mountains, are to well and widely known to need any other designation but their names.

The church of the living God is the pillar and ground of the truth (1 Tim. 3: 15), and the camp of the saints of the Most High (Rev. 20: 9). The New York Herald under James Gordon Bennett, and the Chicago Times under Wilbur F. Storey, led off in assuming to be organs and exponents of the Christian religion, and the political papers generally have followed them. Mr. Swing and Dr. Thomas are their oracles, and Christless lodges their synagogues, and woe to the ministers and churches who insist on regeneration and future retribution, as taught by Christ. And there are preachers mean enough to take part with the newspapers against their brethren, and the churches of the living God, which stand for his truth. We are coming into the outer gyrations of the final whirlpool.

HENRY WARD BEECHER AND THE ABOLITIONISTS.

*De Mortuis nil nisi bonum, 'tis said
Say nothing but good of the men that are dead.
More Christian the adage if thus it had come:
SPEAK TRUTH or say nothing, no matter of whom.*

—Dr. Samuel Hanson Cor.

Mr. Beecher, like John B. Gough and many others lately, died as a time-piece stops when the chain runs its length. He went with Mrs. Beecher over to New York to select furniture for his semi-centennial at Plymouth Church; ate a hearty meal of fried clams on his way home; laid down in paralysis; breathed unconscious for a day or two, and died without a pain or a groan.

His death, as did one part of his life, is filling the newspapers and will fill them for a time. The secular and religio-skeptical prints, which cursed him unsparingly whenever he trod on the corns of their parties, now rail as heartily at the Chicago Congregational ministers for refusing to swell the popular acclamation by sending a fraternal vote of condolence along with Grover Cleveland and others to the family at his death. Mr. Beecher turned the election from the Republican to the Democratic party, elected Cleveland and defeated Blaine, in 1884.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.

Our readers must pardon their editor for speaking in personal terms of Mr. Beecher. He was two years, five months and five days younger than myself. I placed my hand on his head and gave him his charge at his ordination in Lawrenceburg, Ind. His venerable father had preached, and his brother-in-law, Dr. Stowe, aided in ordaining me over the Sixth Presbyterian church, Cincinnati, about a fortnight before we ordained him. I voted in Presbytery for his removal to Indianapolis. I almost worshiped his father; loved and admired Henry; and shed tears of gratitude over "Uncle Tom's Cabin," written by his sister, Mrs. Stowe, when she was 37 years of age. And when Henry's "Lectures to Young Men," delivered at Indianapolis, placed him, a mere youth, among distinguished men, I joined in the general admiration with fraternal pride at the success of a brother, and that the Gospel had found a vindicator of such rare and marvellous powers.

ANTI-SLAVERY HISTORY FALSIFIED.

Were I to obey my interest or inclination I should stop with the above obituary notice and allow the multitudinous press, which cursed the Abolitionists from 1832 to 1856, when Abolitionism became Republicanism at Pittsburg (see Senator Pomeroy's article elsewhere), to offer offense to Mr. Beecher, cover his defects with flowers heaped upon his coffin, and so convince ambitious young Americans that the path to gain and glory for them is to follow Mr. Beecher's footsteps.

But I read in the Chicago Evening Journal, copied from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, that "Garrison was the pioneer, * * * Henry Ward Beecher the orator, and Oliver Johnson the historian of the Abolition movement;" and further, that "for years the church was either apathetic or hostile to the anti-slavery agitation;" and "in those years two voices were heard from the Christian pulpit in condemnation of human serfdom. The voices were those of Theodore Parker and Henry Ward Beecher." (Chicago Evening Journal, March 8th.)

Now the facts were that while Garrison, Theodore Parker and Oliver Johnson were young boys, Rev. William Cravens, a Virginia aristocrat and Methodist preacher, in camp meetings and on circuits, denounced slavery and liquor so constantly and powerfully that it was a proverb among slave-holding scoffers that "old Billy Cravens could never preach a sermon without putting a nigger and bottle of rum in it." A born aristocrat and friend of the large slave-holders, he, when sent for to their death-bed, refused to pray for or with them till they had executed deeds emancipating their slaves. The Presbyterian General Assembly in 1818, the year Illinois came into the Union, resolved "That the voluntary enslavement of one part of the human race by another is an atrocious violation of the most precious rights of human nature, utterly inconsistent with the law of God and the Gospel of Christ." About that time Rev. George Bourne, a Presbyterian minister, published his illustrated book against slavery, giving a picture of a slave, said to be the descendant of Jefferson, fastened to a log by his master in the presence of the gang, and slowly cut up, beginning at the feet and ending at the head, the poor victim mean while beseeching, "Do, massa, begin at de udder end!"

A small volume could be filled with such "agitation of slavery" by the Congregational Presidents, Edwards and Stiles; and Presbyterians and Quakers, as Burgess, Duncan, Rankin, Crothers, Benjamin Lay, and others, running down to the time of Garrison and Theodore D. Weld, who drew their weapons from the books and pamphlets of Rankin, Crothers, Duncan and others. And though under the working of political parties there were many and grievous derelictions, it never was true that "the church was apathetic or opposed to the anti-slavery agitation," as the glorifiers of Mr. Beecher now allege. Theodore Parker scouted the inspiration of the Bible, and though he and Mr. Garrison were bitter against slavery, they were more bitter against the churches of Christ. And while Garrison was mobbed—as we all were at that day—Lovejoy, a Congregational minister, was shot at Alton; Amos Dresser, a tract missionary, was whipped five hundred lashes in Tennessee; Torrey, another Congregational minister, died in a Baltimore jail; Adam Crooks, a Wesleyan preacher, was imprisoned in North Carolina; and George Storrs, a Methodist preacher, was dragged from his knees while praying in an Abolition meeting in New Hampshire, by a Democratic justice of the peace; and in the midst of this hottest battle with the slave power, Albert Barnes published his powerful book against American slavery, calling on the church, of which he was a great and recognized light, to destroy it.

BEECHER HONORED, THE CHURCH CONDEMNED.

How then happens it that the political press of today laud Mr. Beecher and condemn the church of Christ, and give to Garrison, Phillips, Theodore Parker and Oliver Johnson, who were come-outers or skeptics, along with the pious John Brown and the meek and brilliant Friend Whittier, the laurels torn from the church of Christ. Let us see.

The synod of Cincinnati, a fair representative of the American church sentiment, in 1831, a year before Mr. Garrison formed his first anti-slavery society of twelve men in Boston, appointed a day of fasting and prayer for the overthrow of American slavery. The Quaker church had abolished it, and the Scotch Presbyterians had twenty churches south of Mason's and Dixon's line which excluded slave-holders. Slavery in the West Indies had fallen under twenty years hammering by the Clarkson and Macaulay committee on the public mind and by the speeches of Wilberforce, Pitt, Sheridan and Fox in Parliament. Mr. Garrison had been bought out of a Baltimore jail by an eminent orthodox Christian, Arthur Tappan; started his Liberator in Boston; took the English ground from Elizabeth Heyrick's pamphlet, "Immediate, not Gradual Abolition;" and like Gideon, but without his prayers and fleece, he "blew a trumpet" and a handful of people "went after him."

I am not depriving Mr. Garrison of one sprig of his laurels. I attended his meetings and stood with him against slavery. But Mr. Garrison denounced several things besides slavery, which I did not and could not denounce. He denounced civil government and voting as a sin, and did not himself vote to the last. In the first convention I attended in New York I heard Henry B. Stanton say, "I agree with Bro. Garrison that the Constitution of the United States is a covenant with death and an agreement with hell." Mr. Garrison was present assenting. I dissented and was advised by a zealous speaker to get down on my knees before God! I held that slavery was from hell, but that the Constitution was from good men acting under great difficulties. Then Mr. Garrison sneered at churches as "corporations," the Bible as "King James's musty parchments," and the Sabbath as a superstition. I traveled, lectured and faced mobs with Burleigh and with Oliver Johnson, now called "the historian of the Abolition movement." But Mr. Johnson has declared to me his disbelief in the histories of Christ by the four Evangelists. And men who would have given and who afterward did give their lives for the overthrow of slavery shrank from men who taught such doctrines as these and from the movement led by them, till A. A. Phelps, Joshua Leavitt, the Tappans, Gerrit Smith and Myron Holly came to the front. I did not shrink from them. Their heresies, civil and religious, were not up for discussion but slavery was, and as Shakespeare hath it I "was not one who would not do good if the devil bid me." I stood fast by Abolition, the communion table and the prayer-meeting.

But when Myron Holly, Gerrit Smith, Lewis Tappan, Joshua Leavitt and others, 111 in all, met at Albany and started the political party which was to afterward vote for Lincoln, who destroyed slavery by proclamation, Mr. Garrison's Liberator consistently denounced and ridiculed the party as only he could. But how slavery was to be abolished without voting the churches could not see and they stood aloof till a more rational method was presented to them.

Nor was this all or the worst. The political press which now glorifies Mr. Beecher as the twin Abolition saint with Theodore Parker claims Abolition as its special thunder and curses Congregational ministers for not echoing their plaudits. This same partisan press, then Whig and Democrat,

"Cried havoc and let slip the dogs of war" on the devoted Abolitionists. We were Garrisonites, disunionists, madmen and fanatics; and when the Southern governors demanded of Northern governors the suppression of Abolition societies, every governor but Ritner gave favorable replies.

AND THE POLITICAL PRESSES SUSTAINED THEM!

I was in Pennsylvania at the time and every bone in my skeleton, with left eye and side swollen from missiles sent by mobs, testified my obligation to a Democratic administration which sent John Walter from Washington to suppress our first Harrisburgh convention. But Ritner gave me his blessing, and Thaddeus Stevens handed me ninety dollars from his wallet, and said, "Go ahead and lecture; and if they Morganize you we'll make a party out of it."

It was the political party presses of that day, which now curse Congregational ministers for excepting to Mr. Beecher's errors; it was the partisan presses in the interest of their parties which intimidated the clergy by persuading the simple that they would degrade their calling, and endangered the Union by opposing slavery, and thus stunned and stupefied the churches for a time. But when it came to blows the churches showed where they stood. The churches taught Mr. Lincoln, "If slavery ain't wrong then nothing's wrong." And that simple truth abolished slavery.

My work done in Pennsylvania, I went down to Cincinnati, the commercial headquarters of slavery in the West, and helped ordain brother Henry Ward at Lawrenceburg.

THIS IS HIS ANTI-SLAVERY RECORD

in brief. Graduating at Amherst College in 1834 he made an oration against colonization. At Lawrenceburg he marched in procession and made a powerful speech in favor of colonization! Three abolition presses were broken in Cincinnati and the city was three days and three nights in the power of the mob. Bro. Beecher, though near by, like Gallio, "cared for none of these things," except, perhaps, to observe from a distance when the popular tide should turn. He asked me if I would vote in Presbytery to remove him from Lawrenceburg to Indianapolis.

I answered, "What do you you intend to do about slavery if you go there?"

He replied, "I told Merrill (the chief elder of that church) that I should have no association with the Abolitionists, but when slavery came in my way in preaching the Gospel I should give it no quarter." "Very well," I said, "slavery will be in your way, and if you do as you say, all right."

I voted for his removal, and at the first meeting of the synod of Indiana after his removal he took the Presbyterian book and argued from it that a Presbyterian synod could not constitutionally consider or act against slavery. Dr., then Rev. J. B. Walker, started The Watchman of the Valley and the clergy endorsed it. John Rankin wrote, and while I edited the paper, we printed Father Rankin's article. Brother Henry had an elder who owned slaves in Kentucky, who took offense. Brother Henry wrote denouncing the Watchman, and his father in his pulpit withdrew his endorsement of the paper, which, however lives still as the Herald and Presbyterian. This was the sum of brother Beecher's Abolitionism till he went to Brooklyn in 1847.

But when Jefferson Davis's "Letters of Marque and Reprisal" had converted Wall street to Abolitionism by letting the pirates of the world loose on our merchant ships, no recruiting office did better service for the war than Mr. Beecher's pulpit. Sharpe's rifles were then the Bibles and minie balls the texts. And when he went to England, which had abolished her slavery twenty-five years before, and Abolition was popular with the British masses, Mr. Beecher did stalwart service, though it was Thurlow Weed whom Mr. Lincoln sent to aid Charles Francis Adams with Lord John Russell at the court of St. James.

Henry VIII. did more for the Lutheran emancipation of the human mind than any other British monarch or any other man save perhaps Luther himself; and America was born of the Lutheran-English Reformation. Let us rejoice in the good that great king achieved for the race, but let us not call him a theologian or worship him as a saint. So let it be with Bro. Beecher. If through the blood of Christ which alone can save any of us he looks down from the society of Lazarus whose sores are now all healed, he will not thank us for making him what he was not or denying what he was. Mr. Beecher is not to be counted with saints and martyrs but with the children of genius, as with Burns and Byron and Shakespeare,

"For he knew
How to make madness beautiful and cast
O'er erring deeds and thoughts a heavenly hue
Of words like sunbeams, dazzling as they passed
The eyes that o'er them shed tears feelingly and fast."

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS OF CHURCHES AND CHRISTIANS.

OFFICIAL CALL.

Pursuant to instructions, and in humble reliance upon Almighty God for wisdom, and upon the Christian patriotism of our fellow citizens for co-operation and support, we have secured Hershey Music Hall, Chicago, Ill., and hereby announce that a Congress of Churches and Christians will assemble at 9:30 A. M., on the 30th day of March, 1887, and continue its sessions two days and evenings, to consider the nature and principles of the secret lodge system and its influence on the Christian religion and civil liberty, and to take what steps may seem proper, after prayer and due consideration.

The committee have learned with satisfaction of the action of several sympathizing bodies in appointing representatives, and are in receipt of the names of over fifty delegates already chosen.

Every Conference, Presbytery, Association, Council, Church, Educational Institution, or other body favoring this Congress, is respectfully urged to at once provide for a representation in its meeting. Let the names of delegates appointed, or who shall be chosen, and the names of all persons intending to be present be forwarded at once to Rev. L. N. Stratton, West Division post-office, Chicago, Ill., so that entertainment may be provided for those who desire, and a roll of members begun.

L. N. STRATTON, Secretary.

—Rev. M. A. Gault is lecturing in central Illinois on his way to the Congress at Chicago March 30th. He lectured before the students of the Wesleyan College at Bloomington, also at Washington, Washburn, El Paso, Kappa, Wenona, Paxton, Hoopstown, Stretor, and other points. He is making specialties of the Sabbath and Prohibition issues, and is also talking up delegates for the Chicago Congress.

—Secretary Stoddard preached for the Free Methodist church at Prospect Park, Ill., Sabbath morning. The brethren will meet Thursday evening to appoint delegates to the Christian Congress. The Free Methodist friends in this city promise free entertainment to representatives from their churches. Appoint delegates and make a note of this entertainment item.

—The committee on the Congress of Churches held a meeting on Saturday at the office of the Christian Worker, to arrange the details of the programme, etc. Reports were very encouraging, and the committee feel confident of a successful meeting. Ten able speakers have been secured, and over one hundred persons have sent in their names to be placed on the roll. The programme will be arranged to give an opportunity for brief speeches. Let every man who has a thirty-minute speech to make, "boil it down" to ten minutes and be ready to take the first chance. The committee will also continue the effort, hitherto successful, to secure representative speakers from the secret orders.

—Bro. Hinman's letter on another page is from Augusta, Georgia; since it was written he has visited Atlanta, where for a second time, he found no opening for his work of which it seemed best to take advantage. He went on to Marietta and thence to Rome this week. If his health, which has not been good of late, is not improved, he will turn north, and be in Chicago in time to attend the Christian Congress.

BRETHREN CLARK AND WOODSMALL IN AR- KANSAS.

MALVERN, Ark., March 7, 1887.

DEAR BRO.—We closed a very good three-days' meeting here last evening, and all feel well satisfied and greatly encouraged, and say they have been greatly helped. It was a convention, or "institute," composed mostly of ministers and candidates for the ministry in this (Hot Springs) county, most of the churches in the county and several churches in other counties being represented.

The convocation was worked up and conducted throughout by that untiring servant of God, Rev. H. Woodsmall—it ought to be Woodgreat, for he is certainly doing a great work for these needy people. He is conducting a school at Little Rock, educating and training young colored men for ministers, having as helpers Rev. J. H. Garnett and Warren H. Rishel, while he goes out into surrounding counties holding three-days' "institutes" in a place, teaching the ministers who gather there the essential elements and qualifications for successful workers in the Master's vineyard.

These brethren are very attentive and earnest listeners, and are eager to be taught in everything that will better qualify them for the work of the ministry. In this respect these "institutes," established among them by Bro. Woodsmall, are doing a widespread and an incalculable amount of good; and what a pity that young Christian men and women whose hearts are burning with the love of Jesus, and want to do good could not see what a wide field is open in this region of our own country, and come and help this brother in this immense and most promising field of Christian labor. His health is very feeble,—his exposures while in the army, and his tireless labors in this warfare are very exhausting, and it is only his wonderful Christian determination that keeps, or can keep, him much longer, if it can keep him another year, out of the grave. Who will enter into his labors and be prepared to fill his place when the Master calls him up higher? You, ardent young Christians, come to his help: and you, men who are holding God's money, how can you possibly better use or invest it than in building schools, churches, and endowing colleges, and equipping and sending young missionaries and teachers into these fields already so ripe, and suffering for the harvest!

We have joyful evidence of many being brought out from under the power of Satan and sin, and turned away and rescued from the debasing and ruinous control of liquor, tobacco, and secret societies, the great bane of the colored people.

Bro. W. goes back to Little Rock, and I go on for this week to Hot Springs. Yours in the good work, with love to all.

Geo. W. CLARK.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

It has become the fashion to speak of the dilatoriness and stupidity of Congress. Such abuse is cheap. It might be explained that it is difficult for a heterogeneous mass of clashing individualities and interests to act smoothly and simultaneously. Other peoples have solved the difficulties by divisions, frontier fortifications, and standing armies and colossal military budgets. We prefer to settle wrangles in our own House, and we are wise even in the conceit of our foreign neighbors.

The only way to judge the Forty-ninth Congress will be by comparing it with its predecessors. It must be said in its favor that more bills were introduced and passed, more became laws and more received vetoes, than in any former Congress. Many important and useful measures were passed, among them, the changing of the Presidential succession to the Cabinet; regulating the electoral count so as to avoid disputes; providing for one and two dollar paper currency; building a new Congressional library; recovering in forfeited railroad land grants nearly 50,000,000 of acres and restoring it to the public domain; extending the mail delivery system to the towns with 10,000 population; the Interstate Commerce law; granting land in severalty to Indians; the Canadian Retaliation bill; the Mormon bill; the repeal of the Tenure of Office act; the increase of the Navy, and prohibiting the importation of foreign contract labor.

The bad measures attempted were numerous, but fortunately few of them became laws. Among them were the Oleomargarine tax; the Backbone land grant swindle; the Mexican Pension bill, and the Dependent Pension bill, which was vetoed by the President. The River and Harbor bill met deserved failure. The President, believing the money was not needed, refused to sign it. The River and Harbor bill which he signed August 6, 1886, made an appropriation of $14,474,000, and there was then a part of the preceding appropriation unexpended. On the first of November last the Engineer-in-Chief reported to Congress that there was on hand for the improvement of rivers and harbors $16,636,362. But little of this money has been spent and there was no necessity for the appropriation of $10,000,000 more.

President Cleveland's original intention to remain at the White House during the closing hours of Congress was changed at the last moment and he hastily repaired to the Capitol. The intelligence that the President was in the building spread rapidly; and as there were not less than five thousand people in the Capitol, he had not been in his room three minutes before the police had to form a cordon around the door to prevent the intrusion of the throngs of people who pressed forward to catch a sight of the President. The police had a hard time of it until Mr. Cleveland left the Capitol a few minutes after adjournment. He had had only three hours' rest since Wednesday night but he showed no sign of fatigue, and after returning to the White House he held the usual daily reception of visitors in the East Room.

President Cleveland has not been unmindful of the satisfaction of many of the most considerate and patriotic people of the country at his efforts to retrench and economize in the affairs of the government, but he has received no praise so hearty as that bestowed on his young and charming wife, by the Chicago Moral Education Society, of which Mrs. Lucinda B. Chandler is president. The message sent by the society is as follows:

"Esteemed Lady:—This society holds as a cardinal idea that a high self-respect is the first element of human dignity, and that a modest appearance and consistent apparel are alone becoming to women. We are grateful and wish to express to you our thanks that you have, in your conspicuous position, displayed womanly delicacy in the non-adoption of décolleté dress, and have thus afforded a healthful contrast to the fashion that not only exposed indelicately woman's person, but, also, and justly, exposed womanhood to caustic observation by the press, and tends to a disparaging estimate of womankind and to the great pain and humiliation of many women."

The example of "the first lady of the land" in so reasonable and womanly a reform should have none to oppose or decry it.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

A SABBATH AT THE "HUB."

The blue-law sensation is abating. Placards on the doors of the closed stores ridiculing the recent action of the authorities in enforcing the Sunday laws are disappearing. The important question of persons living in the proximity to some of the churches is, "Are there any laws against disturbing the peace (or slumbers in some instances) by the clanging of bells?"

"Oh, those clanging bells of time."

10 o'clock Sunday morning. The air from Roxbury to Somerville vibrates with the brazen sounds. Protestant bells! Catholic bells! The Catholic bells, however, drown the Protestant every time. Until the minute hand drops to half an hour later, I will guarantee that I can take the reader into a section of the city where he can almost smell sulphur, so blue is the atmosphere with oaths and exclamations of rage which the clanging of the bells (at least they are supposed to be such) in the belfry of the new German Catholic church on Shawmut Avenue, incites.

Whang! whang! bang! bang! whang bang! bang whang! followed by such a medley of discordant ding dongs that the whole neighborhood becomes distracted and faithful promises are made to abused cars that a removal will be made as soon as expedient. I think, with little doubt, there is more moving in this ward than in any other in the city. Petitions, entreaties, and threats have all failed to silence those unruly tongues. What a countless number of human tongues in anger, hatred, malice and vengeance have flung forth denunciations against those awful

THE HOME.

MAXIMS IN RHYME.

Are our coffers empty still?
Wishing will not fill them;
Idle fields their treasures yield
When we rise and till them;
Better things will come to pass
When we wisely will them.

Folly often costs us dear;
Wisdom cannot harm us;
Were we wiser, trifling things
Would not greatly charm us;
Nor would everything we bear
Sadden or alarm us.

Wondrous is the heart of man:
Life and death are in it;
Weak and vain it greatly needs
Watching every minute;
Heaven above, and death below,
Daily strive to win it.

Speech may be for good or ill,
Like a ready writer;
Publishing our grievances
Will not make them lighter;
Nor will all our murmurings
Make our prospects brighter.

Bitterly the heart may weep
Though the eyes are fearless;
Men may dread the thought of death,
Yet of death be fearless;
Paths that lead to God and heaven
Never need be cheerless.

They are bravest who prefer
Suffering to sinning;
Strifes would cease if wrongs could be Checked at the beginning;
All the spoils of godless war
Are not worth the winning.

Mighty is the human will;
Love, not terror, bends it;
Whatever good we have,
'Tis the Lord that sends it;
Foolishness begins the strife,
Wisdom quickly ends it.

WALKING AT LIBERTY.

It is a practical truth that you and I have to deal with to-day. We want to walk at liberty. How can we do it?

There is liberty, in the first place, from the world. I use the word now in the sense in which it is used so frequently in the Bible—not merely this round globe or the hundreds of millions that are upon it—not merely these millions in that capacity. The world lieth in the wicked one; the mass of men, that is, do not know God. They constitute the world of the New Testament; we can be in bondage to this world. Natural men are in bondage to it. They are not at liberty in relation to that natural world. It is without God; it does not ask what his will is. It inquires as to its own will, and it tries to enforce it. You sometimes see cliques and coteries and collections of men insisting, at any cost, upon carrying out their own will. That is only the spirit of the greater world of which they constitute a section. Sometimes men are in bondage to the world in this sense, that the mainspring of their life is to stand well with it, to do what their set, their society, the world round about them, wishes them to do. Sometimes the bondage is aggravated by another feature, viz.: the effort to rise higher, to get upon a more elevated plane, to get into another set; and, oh, how aggravated is the bondage under which many thus live and labor! Freedom from that is obtained when we walk according to God's statutes. Believers, the world is not your master. One is your Master, even Christ, and we are brethren in him, and he is reasonable and kind and just and brotherly, and you can walk with him. His favor is enough for you. His smile satisfies you. Fellowship with him is the best society. Let society stigmatize you, let it stamp its enmity upon you, but seek God's precepts. If you only have Christ walking with you, then you walk at liberty. But as to the life-work in which many are busy, or trying to get up a little higher socially, take this precept of the Word, "Godliness with contentment is great gain;" and these things, the godliness with the contentment, will break those clanking chains of insane and stupid ambition, and will prepare you to walk at liberty! "I am in the place where God puts me. I am trying to do the work that God gives to me. I am responsible to him. He is my Father, Christ is my brother, heaven is my home. This I believe on the authority of his Word. I will walk at liberty." Let me commend that form of true freedom to you.

There is liberty, in the second place, from bad ways. Do I need to describe these bad ways to you? You cannot live in the city, you cannot read the newspapers, you cannot hear the gossip, you cannot know what is going on in the circles in which you mingle, without knowing some of these bad ways. There is the lover of this world's possessions, so strongly denounced in Isaiah's prophecies; beginning, perhaps, with necessary saving, but coming slowly but steadily to a sordid love of the thing that is saved, till the whole spirit is mercenary, and gold is the deity that is practically worshiped. There is the drunkard, sipping a little innocently, as he thinks, at the beginning, then going a little farther, and secretly, until shame is lost, and the victim is under the power of the drink—degraded, wretched, irresponsible, not ashamed of himself, for shame is gone, but an object for which all are ashamed that are connected with him. There is the gambler beginning, perhaps, with what he deemed innocent recreation, and catching the spirit of the thing till it masters him, until he flings away all that he has, and all that he hopes to have, in the chance of recovering something already lost, till life is a burden and fortune is gone, and suicide is perhaps the tragical termination. These are specimens of the bad ways—marked specimens, I grant, but still simple specimens. There is freedom from this when we seek and do God's statutes—real freedom. We learn to walk circumspectly; we learn to keep the heart with all diligence; we learn to hate evil and do good; we learn to flee from the snares that Satan sets for the feet of men. We walk securely, for we have been taught of the Spirit to walk with God. Make sure, dear hearers, that you have this liberty.

There is liberty from bad memories—bad, putrid memories. When the corrupt imagination contemplates indulgences in sin, it often dwells upon these long before the actual execution of them, and as they linger in the mind they photograph themselves upon its surface, and they stay there. There may be compunction for the sin, there may be vows against it, there may be honest purposes to resist and overcome it, and these purposes to a good degree carried out; but the horrid poisonous memories remain in the soul. You know what it is to be in a house where animal matter is decaying and poisonous fumes are being scattered up and down. Oh! the misery of the human mind that is haunted with the ghosts of bad deeds that have been done in the past! It is bondage of the keenest and the sorest kind. There is liberty from these to those who walk in God's statutes—liberty that can be had nowhere else. "A new heart will I give you, and a right spirit will I put within you. I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh." Happy are they to whom this word was fulfilled in their early youth, and who in consequence were kept from the sins, the very recollection of which is sometimes like the beginning of hell.

Young men and maidens, take God's precepts for your guide, walk in his statutes from the beginning, that this bondage of horrid, putrid, accursed memories may never crush and overwhelm you.—Dr. John Hall.

A BIBLE.

The most beautiful volume among the half-million in the Congressional Library is said to be a Bible which was transcribed by a monk in the sixteenth century. It could not be matched to-day in the best printing office in the world. The parchment is in perfect preservation. Every one of its thousand pages is a study. The general lettering is in German text, each letter perfect, and every one of them in coal-black ink, without a scratch or blot from lid to lid. At the beginning of each chapter the first letter is very large, usually two or three inches long, and is brightly illuminated in red and blue ink. Within each of these capitals there is drawn the figure of some saint, or some incident of which the following chapter tells is illustrated. There are two columns on a page, and nowhere is traceable the slightest irregularity of line, space, or formation of the letters. Even under a magnifying glass they seem flawless. This precious volume is kept under a glass case, which is sometimes lifted to show that all the pages are as perfect as the two which lie open. A legend relates that a young man who had sinned deeply became a monk, and resolved to do penance for his misdeeds. He determined to copy the Bible, that he might learn every letter of the divine commands which he had violated. Every day, for many years, he patiently pursued his task. Each letter was wrought with reverence and love; and the penitent soul found its only companionship in the saintly faces which were portrayed on those pages. When the last touch was given to the last letter, an old man reverently kissed the page and folded the sheets together.—Ex.

LIVES OF CELEBRATED MEN.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

In the city of Boston, 1720, appeared the New England Courant. The friends of the publisher in vain attempted to persuade him from the undertaking, on the ground that since the Boston Gazette was already being published, and since one newspaper was enough for America, it would be a losing enterprise. But it was undertaken, nevertheless, by James Franklin, and distributed to his subscribers by his younger brother, Benjamin, his apprentice. But Benjamin, the newsboy, after awhile, however, considered he was not as kindly treated as he might be, and so determined to leave and seek employment in New York. But at that period this was quite an undertaking—it was a journey of two weeks on horseback, through forests, across rivers and swamps, and in danger from Indians. But after considerable scheming he succeeded in getting aboard a vessel, and in that way, after considerable trouble, reached his destination; but to be disappointed in obtaining work, as there was then but one printer in the place, and he did not need help. He then determined to proceed to Philadelphia, and succeeded, after a good deal of trouble, in reaching that city, with whose history his name was so largely in the future to be associated. It was on his entrance that the well-known and oft-repeated scene took place, Franklin buying three large rolls of bread to satisfy his hunger, and passing down the principal street with one under each arm and a third in his hand, from which he was eating—a gazing-stock to the citizens, including the young lady who was afterward to be his wife. He was born in Boston, January 17, 1706, just seventy years before the Declaration of Independence, which he did so much to secure. His father determined to educate him for the ministry, but for some reason the project was abandoned; and after laboring some time with his father in his chandler's shop, molding candles and making soap, a work not to his taste, he finally became an apprentice to his brother for the purpose of learning the printing business, and in the pursuit of this he became newsboy and general factotum in the office. Though only a boy, he began writing anonymous articles in the Courant, which were well received by the readers of the paper, and attributed to men of standing much older than he was; but he was repaid by the valuable acquisition of a ready, fluent style, which he found so useful to him in after years. Indeed, it was in consequence of his ability in this direction, which came under the notice of Governor Sir Wm. Keith, that led to that official seeking him out in Philadelphia, and giving such lavish promises of help that Franklin undertook a journey to London to procure printing material; but when he reached there, he found the governor's promises were of no value, and he was glad to obtain work in a printing office. He succeeded well, however, in his work, and largely on account of his temperance principles—his fellow-workmen enfeebled themselves, as well as wasted their money, by their extravagant use of beer, and could not at all compete with Franklin in setting type. He, however, as soon as he obtained sufficient funds, returned to Philadelphia, much better prepared for carrying on the work of printing; and after a short period with a partner, who supplied, or promised to supply, the capital as against his skill, he began the business of a general printer, and by his extraordinary industry and economy he succeeded in the business. During this period he set on foot several projects, and among them the founding of a Public Library, which still remains in Philadelphia, and "The Junto" Literary Society, which rendered him some service, when, in 1729, while he was not yet 24 years of age, he undertook the editing and publishing of the Pennsylvania Gazette. Soon afterward he began the publication of what was widely known as "Poor Richard's Almanac," a pamphlet, with a calendar, full of moral, social and political apothegms, which doubtless accomplished great good among its readers.

At the period of his marriage, and feeling the responsibility of a husband, he began the use of a form of prayer in his home, which he himself prepared, and which makes clear his religious belief. One sentence of it reads: "That I may be preserved from atheism, impiety and profaneness, and in my addresses to Thee carefully avoid irreverence and ostentation, formality and odious hypocrisy. Keep me, O Father." And another sentence reads: "That I may have constant regard to honor and probity, that I may possess a perfect innocence and a good conscience, and at length become truly virtuous and magnanimous. Help me, good Lord. Help me, O Father." That he continued all his days having the same faith in God as the hearer of prayer, is evident from his address in the Convention which framed our present Constitution in 1787, when he was in his eighty-first year, and three years before his death. The Convention was making little progress, and the prospect for agreement was indeed dark, when Dr. Franklin said, among other things: "In the situation of this assembly, groping as it were in the dark for political truths, and scarce able to distinguish it when presented to us, how has it appeared sir, that we have not hitherto once thought of applying to the Father of Lights to illuminate our understandings? In the beginning of the contest with Great Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room, for divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard, and they were graciously answered. All of us who were engaged in the struggle remember frequent instances of a superintending providence in our favor. To that kind providence we owe this happy opportunity of consulting in peace on the means of establishing our future national felicity. And we have now forgotten that powerful friend! Or do we imagine that we no longer need his assistance? I have lived, sir, a long time, and the longer I live the more convincing proofs I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without his aid?"

He was, however, destined to make his mark in political life, and in 1736, in his thirty-first year, he was elected Clerk of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania; but after this offices from the city, the State, and the nation, were showered upon him until within a few years of his death, and in every case he honestly and ably performed the duties required. He was faithful as a postmaster, an alderman, a representative in the General Assembly, as a military commander, as a minister to France, as representative to England, as a member of the Constitutional Convention; and in every position, high and low, which he filled, and which he accepted not for his own benefit, but that he might serve his fellow citizens. Certainly the United States has cause for gratitude for his self-sacrificing work during his long life. It is said a large part, aye, the best part of our Constitution, was his work; and we can easily believe it. His mind was especially adapted to work out questions of social and political life. He was one of the Committee of Five to prepare the Declaration of Independence, and at his suggestion some amendments were made, though it was originally drafted by Thomas Jefferson. When it came to be signed, Dr. Franklin's sententious sentence made the matter unanimous. He said: "We must all hang separately." But, though in his eighty-first year, there was other work before him, including the presidency of the first Abolition Society, to which he was elected in 1787, and in whose affairs he was active until his work was about finished on earth; for on the 17th of April, 1790, the messenger came to take him to the unseen world—we trust to that Father whom he tried to serve, and in whom he had such confidence as the hearer and answerer of prayer. Taking him altogether, he was one of the world's greatest men.—Christian Press.

ANIMALS AS PETS.

One of the great mistakes some parents make in bringing up their children, is driving from their door every animal as a pet. A child must not be allowed to touch a cat or dog. I believe children brought up that way are apt to be hard hearted, and often cruel to dumb beasts. God made the lower animals and put them in the beautiful garden with Adam. They were not ferocious, and were not given him for food. That came after the fall. Kindness to animals should be taught all children. Children like something alive to play with. Dollie is good, but stiff and cold. Kittie sings and has soft, warm fur. The cart goes when it is moved, but Rover runs himself, he jumps, acts glad, and enjoys the boys' play with him. Pictures of birds and flowers do for a little while, but live birds and flowers give pleasure longer.

In the Michigan Holiness school, that "perfect love" is taught that loves God and his creation, and hurts nothing only as necessity demands it. The sound of the organ calls the dove, and he sits on the singer's shoulder and listens. The little girl picks up her banties and feeds them from her hand; kittie sings beside of dollie, and the little girl laughs at her winks. The little rat terrier was their chief amusement, but the sickly boy liked him so well the rest gave him up, and he took him home. Little "Shaggy Lion" stayed while his master did. A few motherless children are being brought up at this school. They raise flowers and garden plants in the summer, and are taught to love the trees, the grass, the sunshine, the clouds, the animals, the people of this world, but not to love sin. The children have their prayer meetings every day, where they thank God for his precious gifts and ask him to make them good. The older girls take care of the small ones; the young men, of the little boys. We have no difficulty in finding some one to do this. I think there is not a young person in school but would take a child to room with him, and care for such, if we had the room. We have been obliged to refuse a number of children this year. We are asking God for money to add to our building, so we can have more room. The school is made a home instead of prison.—Lura A. Mains in Christian Witness.

IN SCHOOL.

There is a school with a teacher stern,
With lessons long and hard to learn.

A school that is found in every clime,
And that keeps in session all the time.

Its open doors are free to all,
The black and white, the great and small.

And all must go, the bad and good,
For none could shirk it, if they would.

And all must study with weary pain,
Old, old lessons over again.

Lessons of sorrow, of loss and care,
Of hopeless waiting and despair.

And forever we cannot choose but look,
Till death shall close life's lesson-book.

And we see at last with all made plain,
That our weary tasks were not in vain.

Doubtless we give some pitying thought,
To those who stand with the strife unfought.

To those who lift with present pain,
Our old, old crosses over again.

Who strive as we strove, for gold and pelf,
Who learn as we learned, each one for himself.

For the school shall be taught in the long years hence,
By the same old dame, Experience.

—C. A. Jewett in Good Cheer.

TEMPERANCE.

LEGISLATION IN ENGLAND.

The most stringent laws we have had passed were those of James I., which may almost be called the first piece of temperance legislation; for though the act of Edward VI. gave power to the justices to suppress unnecessary tipping houses, it was chiefly directed against using unlawful games and bound the licensed victuallers to keep good order in their houses. The act in the first year of James was intended to restrain the inordinate haunting and tipping in inns and ale-houses; it declares "the true use of ale-houses to be for the relief of wayfarers, and not for the entertainment of 'Jewde and idle people.'" There was to be a penalty of ten shillings for permitting "unlawful drinking," and all drinking was unlawful except by bona fide travelers, and by artisans and laborers during their dinner hour. The public-house was only to be open to residents in the place for one hour a day for the consumption of liquor on the premises. This act was made perpetual, with some modification intended to render conviction more easy, in the last Parliament of James. In the first of Charles the penalties were somewhat relaxed, but the law could not be enforced, and under these stringent laws drunkenness increased apace. It had reached an extraordinary pitch in 1659 when a French Protestant wrote from London: "There is within this city and in all the towns of England which I have passed through so prodigious a number of houses where they sell a certain drink called ale, that I think a good half of the inhabitants may be denominated ale-house keepers. * * * But what is most deplorable where gentlemen sit and spend much more of their time drinking a muddy kind of beverage and using tobacco, which has universally besotted the nation, and at which I hear they have consumed many noble estates. * * * And that nothing may be wanting to the height of luxury and impiety of this abomination they have translated the organs from the churches to set them up in taverns, chanting their dithyrambs and bestial bacchanalias to the tune of those instruments which were wont to assist them in the celebration of God's praises, and regulate the voices of the worst singers in the world, which are the English in their churches at present."—Contemporary Review.

"A SHOT AT THAT PEW."

The Witness tells a story of a young minister, who, going to a new church last spring, was informed by the official brethren that his salary would be a thousand dollars; and that as every summer a wholesale liquor dealer visited the town with his family and paid regularly fifty dollars for a pew in the church, it would be policy for the minister to touch the liquor question gently, to avoid giving offense. The reply of the young man was:

"Take fifty dollars off from my salary, for I want to get a shot at that pew."

Soon after he fired his "shot," but the recoil of the gun was not so bad as had been anticipated, for the liquor dealer, pleased with the young man's courage, doubled his subscription, making it a hundred dollars instead of fifty. Whether he did this to relieve his conscience or to quiet the minister we cannot say; but we are strongly of the opinion that the safest thing a preacher of the Gospel can do is to tell the truth; and if there is any man who needs plain preaching at the present day it is the man who deals in intoxicating drink and then hires a seat and comes to church to hear what the minister has to say about it. A man who fails to tell the truth in the ears of such a hearer, will find in the day of judgment that he has something more serious to face than the wrath of a rumseller or the loss of his subscription.

"If the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand. When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thy hand." Ezek. 33: 6, 8.—Safeguard.

CRUELTY.

It is a cruel thing to send a boy out into the world untaught that alcohol in any form is fire and will certainly burn him if he puts it into his stomach. It is a cruel thing to educate a boy in such a way that he has no adequate idea of the dangers that beset his path. It is a mean thing to send a boy out to take his place in society without understanding the relation of temperance to his own safety and prosperity and that of society. The national wealth goes into the ground. If we could only manage to bury it without having it pass thitherward in the form of a poisonous liquid through the inflamed bodies of our neighbors and friends, happy should we be. But this great abominable curse dominates the world. The more thoroughly we can instruct the young concerning this dominating evil, the better it will be for them and for the world.—J. G. Holland.

Rev. C. W. Hiatt, formerly pastor of the Congregational church of this city, now of Columbus, has gained quite a prominence among the Franklin county Prohibitionists, by his spirited opposition to the so-called temperance measure of the Republican legislature. He was one of the framers of the following resolution, laying out the Dow law adopted by the Franklin county convention:

Resolved, That we regard the Dow law, which was enacted in violation of our State Constitution, and which arrogantly defies the expressed will of God, by making legal the desecration of his Sabbaths, as a most grievous stain upon our statute books; and, in our judgment, the declaration of its constitutionality (on a party vote) by our Supreme Court, was a travesty upon the dignity and duties of that high judicial body.—Experiment and News, Gustavus, O.

The Dakota legislature has passed a bill which defines drunkenness as a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of $5 to $25; another, which passed by a vote of 36 to 7, prohibits saloon-keepers having upon the premises where liquor is sold, billiard, pool or card tables, checker boards, cards, dice, or other means of chance, pleasure, or amusement to be played in the room or rooms where liquors are sold or in rooms occupied or controlled by such saloon-keeper adjoining to any room where liquors are sold. The penalty for each violation of the provisions of the act is a fine not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, and in addition the license of such person to be revoked.

Two samples of whisky were lately purchased in Worcester, Mass., the Spy says, at the instigation of a local clergyman, who had them analyzed. One was from a prominent drug-store, the other from one of the lowest dives in town. Both, the report says, were alike vile, and so near alike that only an expert could distinguish one from the other.

bells whose noisy tongues were set to wagging to remind men that they should be gentle, patient and slow to anger, etc., etc. What a contrary effect! At last the clangor ceases, when like a benediction of peace, the sweet and harmonious peals of the Arlington Street church chime falls on the aching ear. Rage abates and a deep calm prevails instead.

Soothed by the music of distant bells you ask yourself where you shall spend the morning and evening. Taking up a Herald or a Globe, (Saturday's edition of course) you will find a complete chart of the location of the leading churches, societies, abominations, etc. If a Methodist you will soon find your way into the People's church, the pet scheme of Rev. J. W. Hamiltan, where, since the departure of the Georgia evangelists, no difficulty is found in securing a good seat. The auditorium is constructed on the identical plan of the modern playhouse thus making nearly every seat desirable. The acoustic properties are perfect. Rev. C. E. Davis never fails to interest as well as to instruct.

If you are a Baptist fifteen minutes walk will take you into Bumstead Hall, under Boston Music Hall, where you will listen with mingled curiosity and interest to Rev. William W. Downs. Revs. O. P. Gifford, A. J. Gordon, J. H. Gunning, E. J. Haynes or Phillip Moxom, pastors respectively of the Warren Avenue, Clarendon Street, Harvard Street, Tremont Temple and the First Baptist churches, will have some attraction. Dr. Gordon is noted for his pre-millennial and second advent ideas; Mr. Moxom for reported belief in probation after death.

As a Congregationalist of course you will not slight Park Street church whose pulpit has been filled by such men as Lyman Beecher, W. H. H. Murray and later Dr. Withrow.

It may be, however, that you are one of the admirers of the popular commentator of the International Sunday School lessons, Rev. R. R. Meridith, pastor of the wealthy Union Congregational church.

If you are of Scotch descent, you will wind your way to the new Columbus Ave. Presbyterian church, or a short distance down Berkeley street to a plain little brick church, whose interior is as unostentatious. Twenty minutes walk will take you down to the First Reformed Presbyterian church where Rev. David McFall is located. If you should have any difficulty in finding it, just inquire the way of any man that has a secret society emblem dangling from his waist-coat. He will be able to direct you, without doubt.

Second Advent views will lead you to the Wells Memorial Building, where in a capacious hall the Advent Christian church services are now held. The new church which the society is building on Emerald street will soon be ready for occupancy.

If you believe in apostolic succession and gowns you will gravitate to the Church of the Advent, an Episcopalian society, which, by taking one more step in ritualism, will be engulfed in the quicksands of Romanism. If this is too high for you, St. Paul's on Tremont street will have the pleasure of your attendance, unless, by mistake, you get into King's Chapel.

Universalism will convey you into the presence of the great rum antagonist, Rev. Dr. Miner, in his beautiful stone church on Columbus Avenue, within a stone's throw of the People's church.

Advanced Unitarianism will not permit you to pass the doors of the Church of the Unity, where Rev. M. J. Savage in no gentle terms criticizes evangelical doctrines. If you are less rabid, Rev. James Freeman Clarke will have one more added to his "thinking" congregation. Should you belong to the old school of Unitarian thinkers you will be straining your neck in looking heavenward toward the lofty pulpit of the Old West church which, Sunday after Sunday, for many years has contained the thin form of Rev. Dr. Bartol, a man accredited with vast learning.

As a Romanist you will attend high mass at the colossal Cathedral of the Holy Cross, where fifteen cents admission is charged and a collection taken afterwards. Possibly you may visit the Church of the Immaculate Conception, where the cost of attendance is scarcely less.

Ingersollism will guide you to the harangues at Paine Memorial Hall where free thought is as free as the air you will breathe. Spiritualism will spirit you away to the new and really costly and artistically designed First Spiritual Temple on the Back Bay, where you will be entertained by such inspirational "ministers of the religion of Spiritualism" as William J. Colville. If you believe in the doctrines of the Latter Day Saints you will find a society in one of our small halls.

Should you not be religiously inclined, but a little patriotic, you will, peradventure, stray down to Copp's Hill and view the belfry of the historic Old North church in which the old sexton hung the lanterns warning Paul Revere on the Charleston shore of the approach of the British.

"If the British march
By land or sea from the town to-night,
Hang a lantern aloft in the belfry arch
Of the North Church tower, as a signal light,—
One, if by land, and two, if by sea;
And I on the opposite shore will be,
Ready to ride and spread the alarm
Through every Middlesex village and farm
For the country-folk to be up and to arm."

Turning your face southward, in fifteen minutes you may stand before the Old South church which has been miraculously preserved from the ruthlessness of improvement. The notice at the entrance may induce you to visit the interior the next day to examine the "articles of historic interest."

As a progressive Jew, the following Friday evening you will be found sitting with your hat off, in the Temple Adath Israel, listening to a discourse by Rabbi Solomon Schindler, whose "Messianic lectures" have brought him very conspicuously before the religious world as a Jewish free-thinker.

We have hurriedly visited a few of the best known pulpits and space forbids us to mention other churches and societies with which the "Hub" is blessed and cursed. D. P. MATHEWS.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Mr. Moody returned from the East last Thursday and began meetings without delay in Dr. Cheney's Reformed Episcopal church on the South side. Friday evening the mission church at the Stock Yards was opened to the evangelist and was thronged. He will continue to speak to the Stock Yards people this week. The religious interest is increasing in every part of the city. Mr. Sankey is holding meetings in the Grace Methodist church on the North Side, and Francis Murphy speaks twice daily to large audiences in Farwell Hall.

—The United Brethren church at Panola, Ill., has received thirty-five members as the result of a gracious revival in which there were nearly sixty conversions.

—Rev. W. O. Dinius of Morenci, Mich., is assisting at a revival meeting at Munson, Mich. A number of conversions have given the seal of God to the work.

—Rev. Dr. Gunsaulus, of Baltimore, has been called to the pulpit of the Plymouth Congregational church, to succeed the Rev. Henry Scudder, resigned. Dr. Gunsaulus is said to be an eloquent young man, but he has a record of making few converts to anybody but himself.

—Alexander E. Duncan, a graduate of McGill University of Canada, who is taking a year's course of study at the Yale Theological Seminary, has made a formal complaint against Professor John E. Russell Winkley, Professor of Bible theology, alleging that his teachings are heretical in that he denies the divinity of Christ. The Yale professors intimate that Duncan seeks notoriety.

—The new Congregational Year-book shows the following facts: Whole number of churches, 4,277; ministers, 4,090; installed pastors, 973; members, 436,341; added on profession, 27,159; net gain, 17,777; Sunday-school members, 521,488; net gain, 11,149; benevolent contributions, $1,677,096; home expenditure, $3,909,225.

—Numbers of men and women of wealth, in England and Scotland, have given both themselves and their fortunes to Christian work in foreign lands, and a correspondent of the Missionary Review asks why this is not seen among American Christians. The editor thinks one reason is the excessive control which missionary officials in this country claim to have a right to exercise over the work abroad.

—The Baptist church of Berlin, Germany, resolved, in 1849, not to use any public conveyance on the Lord's day. It is true that the chief difficulty in preserving a day of rest is in professed Christian example.

—At the beginning of this century Protestantism in France could not count 150 pastors; it had no Christian works of instruction or evangelization. It simply existed. To-day it has a list of 155 workers and 800 pastors to carry on the work of evangelization among the scattered churches. The annual gifts of French Protestants, for the support of churches and Christian work, are estimated at $950,000.

—There are some 200,000,000 of women in India, of whom 20,000,000 are in enforced widowhood. The English Baptist Zenana Mission has been doing a good work among them. It commenced in 1867 with a revenue of $1500. Now it has eighteen stations, forty-two lady visitors, twenty-five assistants, one hundred and four native teachers and Bible women, forty-one girl schools containing about 1500 pupils.

—Rev. W. T. Howland and wife, returned missionaries from India, died last week at Auburndale, Mass., within a few days of each other.

MR. MOODY'S BIRTHDAY TESTIMONIAL.

At Dwight L. Moody's two schools in Northfield, over five hundred young men and women are now being educated to become missionaries or teachers, and workers in every branch of Christian effort. They are housed and taught in most excellent and well appointed buildings, all of which have been paid for by and outlay of over $500,000.

Several weeks ago we referred to the admirable plan now on foot to endow these schools by means of a Birthday Memorial Fund raised during this semi-centennial year of Mr. Moody's life, as a fitting celebration of his fiftieth birthday, February 5th, 1887.

The committee having this matter in charge has already received many responses aggregating nearly $40,000. It was thought that at least $100,000 might be secured. One friend offers five per cent. of the total, if the fund reaches $200,000. When it is considered that other educational institutions have endowments amounting to millions, this seems a very modest beginning. There are many of our readers who are interested in Mr. Moody and his work, who have not yet contributed to this fund and it is not yet too late to increase this well deserved birthday endowment testimonial. If all who have received personal benefit from Mr. Moody, either by personal contact or through his words spoken and written, who are able to give sums ranging from one dollar to one hundred dollars were to respond at once to this request, more than $200,000 could easily be secured.

Contributions or pledges, payable at any time during 1887, may be sent to Mr. D. L. Moody, at Northfield, Mass., or to Mr. James Talcott, the treasurer of this fund, 108 Franklin St., New York City.

LITERATURE.

The English Magazine for March is well filled with bright and breezy sketches of sea and land written in very entertaining style and handsomely illustrated. The first part of "Our Fishermen" by James Runsman is as entertaining as instructive. No less so is an account of a visit to the Giants Causeway by the author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." "The Country of George Sand" by Bertha Thomas portrays by pen and pencil the quaint habitations, the primitive manners and customs of the part of France most closely associated with the celebrated authoress.

The Phrenological Journal and Science of Health for March contains a lengthy and interesting review of the life and character of John Roach, which is prefaced by an excellent portrait. An illustrated article on Trinidad will interest tourists. "Language" is a dissertation which comes in very appropriately now while there are so many changes taking place. A wolf-man is presented, with portrait and authentic account of his capture and habits. "A Divided Republic," which enlisted so much attention from readers of the February number, is concluded in this. "Smoking and Heart Disease" appeals to the common sense of a class of people so vast in numbers that it appeals the hygienist to think of it. Fowler & Wells Co., New York.

The March number of Babyhood contains an exhaustive article on "The Feeding of Older Infants and Young Children," by Dr. L. E. Holt, Physician to the New York Infant Asylum, which is designed to answer many of the perplexing questions concerning the subject so often asked of by mothers. Several valuable diet lists for children in health and disease are given, the peculiarities of the various articles of food being pointed out. Among the other important articles in this number are one on "The Adulteration of Bread," by Dr. Cyrus Edison, chief inspector of the New York Health Department, and one on "The Child's Bath in Health and Illness," by Dr. L. M. Yale, the medical editor.

Through the kindness of Mr. E. W. Blatchford of the Chicago Lead and Oil Works, we are favored with a copy of Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost's paper on "Evangelization" read before the National Council of Congregational churches in this city last October, and voted to be printed in separate pamphlet form for wide circulation.

The current Missionary Review contains "The Theology of Missions," a thoughtful article by a Princeton Student; and a full and commendatory notice of the American Medical Missionary Society, organized in Chicago for the encouragement of this part of the great foreign work. Other articles are "The Growing Interest in Foreign Missions," "Pastors and Missions," "Permanent or Invested Mission Funds." A remarkable list of aged missionaries is given in evidence of the longevity of foreign missionaries.

LODGE NOTES.

The plasterers of Pittsburg and Allegheny have become dissatisfied with the Knights of Labor and have severed their connection with that organization and joined the Plasterers' National Union. Their action has caused quite a commotion in labor circles.

The breach between the Amalgamated Association and the Knights of Labor is widening, as a result of the trouble at Mingo, Pa. The knights' executive threaten to organize all iron and steel workers into one national district, and will also attempt to organize those members of the craft who do not belong to either society.

"Grand Sire" John H. White and Grand Master Carr have issued proclamations setting apart April 28 as a day of thanksgiving for the Odd-fellow order. Who do they thank, and for what?

Several fraternity organs are waging active warfare against the removal of the Odd-fellow Grand Lodge headquarters from Baltimore to Columbus.

The National League of Musicians of the United States in the second day's session at the Briggs House in this city passed a resolution asking Congress to prohibit government bands from competing with citizen musicians. This is the secret union which has given Thomas, Mapleson and the Washington ladies so much trouble.

A committee of the Woman's Relief Corps of Ohio are at Akron investigating charges against Sarah M. E. Battels, president of the Ohio Department. It is alleged that Mrs. Battels is endeavoring to make the Woman's Relief Corps independent of the G. A. R. Such an arrangement would never do.

Mr. Abbott, secretary of the Supreme Council of the Royal Templars of Temperance, is a defaulter to the extent of $5,000, and is reported to be in Canada.

Sing the Reform

into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform.

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons
It treats of
The Tiger and His Den.
Cups of Flame.
The Scarlet Sin.
Embezzlement.
The Devil's Printing Press.
Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like molten lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings where sin and crime are shorn of their mask, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded, and set in the plain literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

A Few Books of Special Worth
IN BIBLE STUDY.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST, By Rev. James Stalker, M.A. Arranged for study. 16mo, cloth, 60 cts.
"This work is in truth 'Maltum in Parvo,' containing within its small compass a vast amount of most helpful teaching, so admirably arranged that the reader gathers with remarkable definiteness the whole revealed record of the life-work of our Lord in a nutshell of space and with a minimum of study."
THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES, as Seen in the Tabernacle and Its Services, By Rev. George Rogers. New Edition, enlarged. Cloth, 320 pages, paper, 40 cts.
The writer of this delightfully interesting work has opened up a rich store of material, a remarkably suggestive style has presented the typical teachings of the Tabernacle of Israel. The book is really fascinating.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

—The Nebraska House Friday defeated the bill for submitting a prohibitory amendment to the people—yeas, 49; nays, 43—lacking the necessary two-thirds majority.

—In the Illinois House, the resolution for submitting to the people a prohibitory amendment was made the special order for Wednesday next, its proposed reference to the License Committee being rejected by a vote of 63 to 51.

—The Wisconsin Senate Friday rejected the bill exempting honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines from payment of poll-taxes. The Wisconsin House passed an act providing that persons involved in boycotting schemes shall be imprisoned for not more than one year or fined not exceeding $500.

—The hearing of the real argument in the anarchist appeal case before the Illinois Supreme Court, at Ottawa, has been set for next Thursday.

—Rev. Henry Ward Beecher died Tuesday morning at 9:30 o'clock. The flags on all public buildings at Brooklyn were placed at half mast, and the City Hall bell was tolled. The funeral services took place on Thursday at the residence of the family. The remains were then taken to Plymouth Church, where public services were held. After lying in state in the church until Saturday, the remains were transferred to Greenwood Cemetery.

—Meda Neebe, wife of Oscar Neebe, the convicted anarchist, died suddenly of apoplexy at midnight last Monday in this city. After the imprisonment of her husband in May last Mrs. Neebe conducted a saloon on West Twelfth Street, near Union, where she was believed to be flourishing from the trade of sympathizing fellow-believers of her husband. For some weeks past she has been feeling unwell, and has been residing with the brother of Oscar Neebe.

—Lucy B. Parsons, the lecturing anarchist, and wife of one of the condemned men, was refused a hall by a Columbus (Ohio) Military Company, where she proposed to speak on Wednesday night. She called on the Mayor to protest against such action and became so abusive and demonstrative that she was locked up. On Thursday she was arraigned before the Mayor on a charge of disorderly conduct and was placed under $300 bonds to keep the peace. Mrs. Parsons could not give bond and was sent to the county jail.

—A swiftly revolving fly-wheel, weighing forty-five tons, in the rail mill of the North Chicago Rolling Mill Company, flew to pieces Tuesday, wounding two employes. The jaw of one was broken and the flesh was torn from his chest and abdomen, and he died next day. The actual damage to machinery and buildings is estimated at from $10,000 to $15,000. Six weeks of work, night and day, will be required to make repairs.

—D. A. West was arrested Friday at Detroit, Mich., on a charge of smuggling opium from Canada, the drug coming from China to British Columbia, and thence to St. Thomas, Ontario. The arrest is believed to be an important one, and is the first blow struck at a gigantic scheme to defraud the government.

—The new Cotton-seed Oil Company was chartered March 5 at Camden, N. J., the capital being $5,000,000. Henry C. Butcher, of Washington Butcher's Sons, Philadelphia, is president. The company is authorized to build mills in twenty one Southern towns, and will erect refineries at Chicago, Kansas City, Philadelphia, Camden, Jersey City, and Hoboken.

—The steamer Yazoo Valley was burned to the water's edge Tuesday afternoon near Grand Ecore, on the Red River. Three colored deck hands were drowned.

—A boiler explosion wrecked W. F. Thompson's tub factory at Ithaca, Mich., Tuesday afternoon. Two persons were killed, and one fatally injured.

—The boiler in Carr's shingle mill, twelve miles north of Alpena, Mich., exploded Tuesday morning. One man was killed, and two others fatally scalded.

—Fire at Walla Walla, W. T., on Tuesday destroyed three blocks in the business portion of the town, causing a loss of $125,000, with an insurance of $40,000.

—Gibbs' shingle mill near Edmore, Mich., was shattered by the explosion of the boiler Wednesday morning. Two persons were killed, one fatally injured, and six dangerously wounded.

—Flames in the store of "Nicoll, the tailor," in the Bowery, New York, Tuesday morning, caused a loss of $100,000. The fire blocked trains on the elevated railroad, and a number of people who were anxious to get to their work left the cars and took the narrow platform to walk to the next station. A movement of a train created a panic, and several persons fell or were thrown to the street below. Four men were killed and many others injured.

—Near Scipio, Ind., Sunday morning, Robert Blacker, a wealthy farmer, and his child were drowned, the wagon in which they were crossing a stream being overturned. Mrs. Blacker was saved, but is likely to lose her reason.

—Near Hightstown, N. J., the mail car and passenger car of a train were thrown from the track, and the former was burned and all the mail destroyed. One man was killed, and the conductor of the train fatally hurt. One or two passengers are reported injured.

—State Senator E. Southworth, of Springfield, Ill., was dangerously and perhaps fatally wounded Friday evening in a railway accident near Girard, Ill. Other passengers also sustained injuries.

—The latest news about the new cotton seed oil enterprise is that the old syndicate which had a monopoly of the business has made such arrangements with the new movement as to render its investment needless at present.

—The funeral of Mrs. Neebe passed off quietly, and was not attended by one-fourth the number which the anarchist sympathizers boasted would be out. Their talk and threats had been so loud that the police were well ready for any demonstration. Neebe himself preferred not to attend though he had a permit from the sheriff.

FOREIGN.

—The septenate bill was read a third time in the German Reichstag Friday, and was passed without debate by a vote of 227 yeas to 31 nays, with 84 members abstaining from voting. The minority was composed of new German liberals, socialists, and Alsations.

—Dispatches from London and Paris Friday say that a slight shock of earthquake was felt at Cannes at 3 o'clock that afternoon. Violent shocks were experienced at Ventimiglia and Dianomarin. At Douai, in the department of the Nord, the walls of a church were cracked by the shock. The shock at Monte Carlo caused a panic in the gambling rooms. The tables shook violently and the players fled in dismay.

—M. de Lesseps was the guest of Emperor William at supper Thursday evening and sat at the table reserved for the Emperor and Empress, both of whom conversed freely with him during the repast, and bestowed upon him marked attentions. M. de Lesseps, in an interview to-day, said that the French nation was distinctly in favor of peace, and that no intelligent Frenchman believes there will be war.

—A dispatch from Bulgaria says it is expected that the Regents will immediately summon the Sobranje and submit the reports of the mission to European capitals and of the recent events in Bulgaria. They will ask the Sobranje to decide either to form supreme power for the government of the country or modify or confirm the present regime.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Paper covers, 30c. Cloth, 45c. The aim of this book is to show the great difference between true and false religion. It is heart searching. God is healing this book to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

Self Deception, Its Nature, Evils and Remedy. By Rev. Jacob Heffelfinger. Paper covers, 10c. This book goes to the very bottom of the subject, and searches out the real foundation of the deceived professor. The refugees of lies behind which many are hiding, and the false hopes of thousands are here set forth in plain and powerful words. It will meet a felt want among Christian workers, and is eminently suitable for circulation among all church members.

How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 10c. This little book points out that there are certain practical means within the reach of every child of God, in the use of which he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Stirring and encouraging.

An inspection of the broken bridge just out of Boston, where the last awful railway disaster occurred, indicates such defects in the structure that if an official investigation corroborates the report of experts the Boston and Providence road will be nearly bankrupt by heavy damages. We do not wish to believe that our railway managers are so reckless that such horrors as Ashtabula or this Bussey Park bridge are needed to teach them precaution. If so, let the damages be heavy as possible, so as to make one safe road hereafter.

Last week was one of the most memorable in the history of the Illinois Supreme Court. At a special hearing in Ottawa, the evidence in the Anachist cases of this city was presented, and on Thursday and Friday the lawyers, three on each side, presented their arguments. Grinnell and Ingham who conducted the prosecution last fall were assisted by the Attorney General of the State, Mr. Hunt. Black on the defense had Ziesler and Leonard Swett, of Chicago, a former law partner of Abraham Lincoln, and esteemed an able criminal lawyer. From the press reports the defense were hardly so able as in the memorable trial before Judge Gary. The decision of the court, if favorable to a new trial, can be given at any time; if the judgment of condemnation is affirmed the final sentence will be delayed till the regular session in September.

Mr. Powderly and his co-managers of the Knights of Labor have so tender a regard for the poor laborer that they have taken $45,000 of his money to buy an office building with very sumptuous fittings. Powderly excuses himself to suspicious and complaining laborers, with saying that the property was worth $80,000, without venturing to say why a labor organization needs a property worth so much, or one-half so much, or one-quarter so much. If the order follows its leader and leading influences into the shelter of the papacy, it will be all the more gladly received if it can bring along some valuable pieces of real estate. The latest report, however, from Rome intimates that Cardinal Taschereau has the ear of the Pope, and will secure an order condemning the Knights in Canada and forbidding the extension of their lodge in this country.

The Northwestern railway managers were last week settling a difficulty on one of their Wisconsin lines, which seems to have sprung from an order issued three years ago by the division superintendent, forbidding employees of the company from either drinking or entering saloons. A serious disagreement has arisen, either from the character of the rule or some supposed injustice in its enforcement. It is an evidence of the progress of public opinion on the liquor question, that no railway management can with safety to its business let it be published that it is remiss in enforcing so just and necessary a rule.

In Michigan this safeguard to travel is not left to the voluntary action of the railroads, but is enforced by a State law which reads: "No person shall be employed as an engineer, train dispatcher, fireman, baggage master, conductor, brakeman, or other servant, upon any railroad in any of its operating departments, who uses intoxicating drinks as a beverage; and any company into whose service any such person shall knowingly be employed, shall be liable to a penalty of five hundred dollars for every such offence, to be sued for in the name of the people of the State of Michigan."

The old Bay State is rallying again for temperance as in former days, before politics and the secret temperance orders had taken the life out of prohibition. March 7th was town-meeting day in a large part of Massachusetts, and 103 towns are reported against the saloon to 18 in favor of license. The trial of the Haddock murderers is this week begun in Sioux City, Iowa. The last saloon has been closed in that rum-cursed town, and the prospects of a fair trial are good, though it is now seven months since the assassination, and the saloon conspirators have in a hundred ways hampered the law officers. The battle center is now in Michigan, where the people are being aroused to the importance of their April election. The National Liquor Association has sent, it is believed, $75,000 to fight the prohibitory amendment in Tennessee, and a much larger sum to Michigan, and the saloonists of Detroit have ordered the boycott on temperance merchants and papers throughout the State. A prominent worker in Howell, a hardware merchant, was threatened with fire, and the threat was actually carried out the other day. An incendiary fire cleaned out his business, and destroyed beside much other property. Such desperation only preceeds failure.

The recent death of Father Beckx, the Black Pope, is the occasion of many comments upon the work of the Jesuit order of which he was the chief. For nearly seventy years he has been an active and often a potent influence in European politics, seducing princes and dukes to accept of Romanism, concluding treaties, procuring concordats, establishing official journals for the Pope, and carrying the decree of infallibility. The attitude of the Vatican in all the revolutionary movements of Europe for thirty years was decided by him. The Jesuit policy has kept to its tradition. The revolutionary and free-thinking opponents of Rome were not openly antagonized, but adroitly maneuvered. The priests of other orders refused the sacraments, the Jesuits never. Especially in France and Ireland, where political antagonisms have often interfered with the supremacy of the priests, the Jesuits have always yielded a point to hold their members to Rome, playing with them like a skillful angler. It is an interesting question for Americans, how many of the Romish priesthood in this country are of the Jesuit order; how much interest have they in the McGlynn and the Knight of Labor discussions; and if Rome "stoops to conquer" whether the influence of free institutions is powerful enough to keep her in a stooping condition.

THE KANSAS STRUGGLE ENDS IN VICTORY.

REMINISCENCES BY HON. S. C. POMEROY.

The destruction of the Lawrence "Free State Hotel;" the striking down of Charles Sumner on the floor of the Senate Chamber the same day; the destruction of houses, printing presses, and even the lives and liberties of our leading men,—these events aroused the country; and men sent for those who had been connected with them to come and tell the story.

On my way East I remember to have received a telegram from Peter Page of Chicago, asking if I would speak at a meeting that night. I replied, "Yes." The train reached Chicago at the edge of the evening; and the grounds about the old City Hall were crowded. I told of the outrages in Kansas, as best I could; told them I was on my way to Hartford for Sharpe's rifles, and should return again to Kansas for another effort to plant a Free State.

To my joy, as well as surprise, Mr. Page called upon me late that evening; said he had taken a contribution and solicited from his friends money to help me buy my hundred Sharpe's rifles; and then handed me his check for two thousand dollars! Years after when I was in the United States Senate, from free Kansas, I learned that Peter Page of Chicago would accept the office of Revenue Collector (or assessor, I do not now remember which). I at once called on Mr. Lincoln, assured him Peter Page was a good financier, and a good man. Then I told him the story of the Sharpe's rifles for Kansas, and had the pleasure of knowing he was appointed. I do not know as I have ever seen Mr. Page since he gave me that $2,000 for Sharpe's rifles; but I do know that I left Chicago full of hope for our cause.

I lectured the next night at Cleveland, and the people of that city added $800 more. When I reached Hartford, Conn., I found that one hundred Sharpe's rifles would cost me, boxed, packed, and with some ammunition, $3,000. Though I had no money of my own, I lectured that night in Hartford and told the story of Kansas again; and they added money enough to pay the whole bill, and the railroad freight to Mount Pleasant, Iowa (that was at that day the end of the completed railroad track in that direction).

The summer of 1856 was an active one all over the Eastern States, and I was called everywhere to give the history of events in Kansas. General Lane had gone on before me in some parts. A. T. Andrews, in his history of Kansas, page 136, says: "Monster meetings were held in all large cities. Colonel Lane, Wood, Reeder, Pomeroy, Halliday,—most of them under indictment for treason, canvassed the States, arousing the most intense sympathy. The first great meeting was held at Chicago. Norman Judd presided, who introduced General Lane. He was at his best. No man of his time possessed such a magnetic power over his vast audience. It was the ablest oratorical effort of his life." Illinois and Chicago then, as always, did nobly by Kansas.

I remember being soon after in New Haven, Conn., and there a colony was equipped for Kansas. At that meeting Sharpe's rifles were donated. Henry Ward Beecher's church had paid for a quantity, which were already in Kansas in the hands of a company under the lead of Mr. C. B. Lines, who never looked backward, and never faltered in the Free State cause. The renewal of our struggle was determined upon as soon as we saw such an uprising for our support. New England was not backward, and old Massachusetts led the way.

In August it was decided that I should go back and follow up the Sharpe's rifles I had sent forward from Hartford. The Missouri river was closed to us, and no known Free-State man could get to Kansas by that route. Therefore I decided to go by the land route, leaving the cars at the end of the road in Iowa, with such forces as I could rally, and in company with men late from Kansas who were induced to return. I soon reached Mt. Pleasant. Here was the nucleus of a party already formed, and waiting for an escort and a leader. Our first public meeting was held in the town hall there, and Senator Harlan, whom till then I had never known, addressed us. Others also spoke for our cause. The executive committee at Chicago, with one J. D. Webster as chairman, rendered us most efficient aid. There was nothing left undone that they could do; and our Iowa party at Mount Pleasant was at length fully equipped and started.

But the pro-slavery party learned of all our efforts and prepared to resist us by land as well as by river. General Lane's party had started August 1st, and were two or three weeks in advance of us. Gov. Geary, too, had started, but he went by the usual route of the Missouri river. At noon on the 7th day of September his boat was stopped at Glasgow, Mo., "to take on board a company of Kansas militia." I copy from the report made and published by Dr. John H. Gihen, Geary's secretary: "They had a piece of artillery, and were bound to the seat of war in Kansas. They numbered sixty men. While the embarkation was going on a downward steamer came long side of us, with Gov. Shannon on board! He sought an interview with Gov. Geary. Shannon had fled in haste and terror from the Territory; and seemed still apprehensive of his personal safety. His description of Kansas was frightful; it was horrible. The whole Territory, he said, was in insurrection, and civil war was desolating the country; and the roads were everywhere strewn with slaughtered men." This was Geary's introduction to his new field of labor; and the "Kansas militia" he had on board soon learned who he was, and plied him with all sorts of questions. They, however, told him "they were under pay, and going to Kansas to kill the Abolitionists."

They reached Port Leavenworth September 9th, and after spending one day, Gov. Geary drove to Leocompton. He issued an address and a proclamation, declaring "the services of volunteer militia are no longer required, and I hereby order that they be immediately discharged." That was the first ray of light from any Washington appointee up to that date. As soon as General Lane saw it, he said, "Let Geary try his hand; I won't molest him." So Lane at once left Kansas again, by the way of Nebraska. But the "Kansas militia," who came up with others from Missouri, got to within eight miles of Lawrence, and it took Geary's personal presence to prevent a fight, as Lawrence was fortified, and old John Brown inside the fortification.

While all this was transpiring at Lawrence, our Mount Pleasant company was marching day by day through the State of Iowa. This company was, for the most part, commanded by Colonel S. W. Eldridge of Lawrence, who also was returning home. Colonel Perry and Daniels were also aiding. I had purchased a pacing mule to ride, and for over twenty days and nights we pushed forward. At Tabor we rested and found friends. There we met General Lane going out of the Territory. He advised us to see Gov. Geary, and give him a fair trial before we fought him.

Soon after crossing the Missouri river into Nebraska, we found papers, showing they had dispatches announcing our arrival in Iowa. I quote Gov. Geary's dispatch to Mr. Marcy, Secretary of War: "I learn of a party, regularly formed, in military order, under the command of General Pomeroy, Colonel Eldridge, Perry, and others. They have over twenty wagons, in which is a supply of new arms, muskets, sabers, a lot of saddles, sufficient to equip a battalion, one-fourth cavalry and the remainder infantry. Some of the company pretend to be immigrants. They have shot guns, knives, rifles and pistols. But I learn they have no oxen, agricultural implements, or household furniture. I propose to ask Colonel P. St. George Cook to meet them on the frontier of Kansas and arrest them; taking 400 U. S. dragoons. The Secretary of War then had the U. S. military forces at Fort Leavenworth, by an order of the President, put under the orders of Gov. Geary. The President, for once, fulfilled his pledge made to Gov. Geary.

But we knew nothing of this until we reached the Kansas line from Nebraska. Being in advance of the company, which then, all told, numbered about 250, some of them women and children, I soon came upon this company of soldiers, with their officers. They formed a line across our road. Colonel Cook saluted us, and we rode up to him. He soon told me he was there by orders from Gov. Geary, to whom the Secretary of War had ordered him to report by a telegram from Washington, and said he must "arrest us all, officers and men, women and children." I told him we had no disposition to resist the United States; and as for Gov. Geary, we as yet did not know much of him. I then arranged that he should escort this company, just as they were, to Topeka, the place of our destination, and then await such orders as Gov. Geary might give. I then rode back through our whole line and informed all the party that we were all arrested, and should be conducted to Topeka. We were nearly out of rations, and I told them Colonel Cook would supply rations for the balance of the trip.

This was acquiesced in, and we all went into camp for that day. Soon as all these preliminaries could be arranged, I saw Colonel Cook alone, and told him I desired to ride through to Topeka and Leocompton that night, and the next day would be with Gov. Geary, and would meet him at Topeka by the time he could march all this company there. To this Colonel Cook assented, and I conferred with our company. Soon as it was night I started on my pacing mule alone for Topeka, and then to Leocompton. Before reaching the Governor's office the next day, I fell in with several Lawrence boys called the "Stubbs," a most efficient company of young men, who did gallant acts when duty called. From this company I selected two or three to go with me to see the Governor. They stopped just outside of the town, while I went on to the Governor's office, which was a hewn log cabin about twelve or fourteen feet square, and of one story. A small squad of soldiers were outside, but they let me pass, and soon I was alone with Gov. Geary, and the door was locked.

What transpired at that interview has never been written. Gov. Geary is dead, and in his life time I do not know as he ever spoke of it. I can quote nothing to prove any statement I might now make; and hence will not lift the curtain. For a day and a part of two nights I had been riding, and pondering what I would say, as well as what I would do.

The crisis had now been reached. Since 1854 we had had a constant turmoil and some fighting. We had seen no peace. The Territory had had no prosperity. On the way from Nebraska I had met John Brown, who had a wagon load of colored men, whom he was taking to liberty in Canada—under a monarchical form of government—ours in Kansas had become a despotism, because the people could not make the laws. The time to end this had fully come. I determined it should come, then, and there.

Omitting all that was said by Gov. Geary or myself, I will only write what we did. Acts are better than words without them. Gov. Geary consented to ride with me on his horse to Topeka and dismiss his army, and let us settle in the Territory; and I most assuredly determined this should be a settlement. All the way, for those fifteen miles, we discussed the situation of Kansas, and of the country—all the features of the national campaign, and of the probable election of Mr. Buchanan. The chief thing desired by Geary was to make peace in Kansas; so the Democrats would not lose the election. He had been selected for that purpose. All his friends in Pennsylvania demanded of him the peace of Kansas. I soon found that he would do as we wanted, and allow the Free-State party to triumph, if only we would keep the peace, so he could say, "All is now quiet in Kansas." He was assured by me that peace, with us, meant triumph, and there would never be any peace short of it. "To that complexion it must come at last." And why not let it come now?

I described fully to him all we had—some soldiers, some were merely settlers with families. We had arms, a cannon and Sharpe's rifles; and finally with assurances of his safety and protection, he said he would dismiss the U. S. dragoons; order Colonel Cook back to Fort Leavenworth; disband all his militia; and trust to our Free-State forces for his protection, and for the peace of the Territory. This was solemnly agreed to: and I did not leave Gov. Geary that night, for we occupied the same room at the old "Garvey House." The next morning, learning that Colonel Cook, with his soldiers and all our company, were in camp upon the opposite side of the Kansas river, we all rode over there, and I sat on my mule beside the Governor when he made his closing speech to Colonel Cook, to his officers and soldiers. The substance was precisely as he had promised to do, on our way up from Leocompton to Topeka. He thanked them all for obedience to his orders, and for the peace and good order then prevailing, which they had helped bring about.

Our party then had increased to over 300 men. So the Governor turned his face full upon them, and welcomed them to the new Territory, and urged them all to make themselves homes, etc. Then he dismissed Colonel Cook and the United States soldiers, and they gladly went to their post quarters at the fort. Maj. H. H. Sibley always assured me (for I have often met him since) that he saw his first happy hour in connection with that expedition, when he took up the line of march back to the fort.

This closed the military operations in which I had been engaged, and it was on the 15th day of October, 1856. This opened the Missouri river. This ended the interference of the military with our civil affairs. Some of our men were prisoners; some convicted; some went free. Gov. Geary pardoned them all on the 2d day of March following. During this time affairs in the Territory began to improve. Confidence, a child of slow growth, began to walk about.

After these events, it became known that Mr. Buchanan was elected, and then the pro-slavery party again rallied, and held their first convention at Leocompton, Jan. 12, 1857. Up to this time they had called themselves the "Law and Order party." Now by a solemn vote of this convention, they resolved to become the "National Democratic party." By any name the odor stuck—it was the same old party. Geary had all his trouble thereafter with that party, and he had enough of it. The leaders turned against him. That ride to Topeka, they said, "demoralized him." They were enraged at him; threatened his life; and like Reeder and Shannon he left in the night and went down the Missouri river, fearing assassination! Two days after he had pardoned all our Free State prisoners, March 4th, the very day of the inauguration of Mr. Buchanan, he sent his letter of resignation.

This ended the struggle practically. The Free State triumph was foreshadowed. That victory was seen in its effects all over the land. Kansas had stood as the representative not of the organized Territories only, but of the whole public domain. If they could not subdue Kansas to slavery, they could do it nowhere upon this continent. No effort would ever be made elsewhere.

It was the first triumph of a struggle of two hundred years. That power had always triumphed. In the halls of legislature, the supreme court, everywhere, in church, or state. They had one purpose—to rule and to triumph.

After three governors had been sacrificed Mr. Buchanan induced Robert J. Walker and Frederick P. Stanton to try it. Kansas had been the great slaughter house of Democratic governors. Hon. Henry Wilson came to Kansas in company with Gov. Walker. They were about one week on the Missouri river together. Mr. Stanton as secretary had preceded him.

Henry Wilson was the most sagacious politician of his day; and this period produced none superior to him. He became convinced that the executive officers would give us a fair election, and urged that we all vote at the October election, 1857, under the Territorial laws and thus secure the legislature; and give up the Topeka Free State government. This they were opposed to. They hated the bogus code inflicted upon them by frauds at the ballot-boxes. But Wilson was earnest and quoted Daniel Webster in his 7th of March speech: "You must conquer your prejudices and do a disagreeable duty with alacrity." Finally he called a conference at the house of Dr. Robinson.

There were present: M. F. Conway, Mr. Foster of Ossawatimie, Rev. Mr. Nute, S. C. Smith, Philips of the New York Tribune, J. H. Kagi, who died at Harpers Ferry, with several others.

By the way, yesterday I saw an autograph letter written by Kagi from Cumberland, Maryland, only two days before John Brown's attack. In it he said: "I feel anxious. I have premonitions of disaster and defeat. But I can't desert the old man. I shall stand by his side, whether to 'fall or to rise.' Heroic soul! He did fall: so did his captain. But they rose again. That heroic, unselfish devotion snatched from the arsenal and the scaffold two names not born to die: and their souls are 'marching on.'"

But, as I was saying, a majority at length yielded to the views of Senator Wilson, and he returned to the East. He then reported our decision to E. D. Morgan of New York, chairman of the committee, and throughout all New England. Though defeated in 1856, all our friends again rallied for 1857.

They furnished Thomas J. Marsh with funds for expenses and he came out to Kansas to superintend the campaign in person. A discouraged and impoverished people took heart. Though all the machinery of the election was against them, still they voted, and stood by with rifles in hand to see the votes counted, and the triumph was completed. The Free State men had the legislature. Acting-Governor Stanton called a special session of the Territorial legislature, and Mr. M. I. Parrot was seated, as our delegate, in Congress.

This legislature soon repealed and modified the hateful code. Kansas was free. All the rest came in due time. The pro-slavery party left the State or acquiesced in the inevitable.

Congress, too, saw what must follow. They passed an enabling law. Under it we formed what is known as the "Wyandotte Constitution", and upon that were admitted to the Union.

And there she sits, Queen of the Prairie States, with over one and a half millions of free people; with more churches, schools, newspapers and prohibition votes, in proportion to population, than in any one of the American States, whether old or new. Her State seal was adopted to perpetuate this story: "Ad astra per aspera." I will add, Alis volat propriis, et luce effulgit sua.

A CHAPTER FROM THE LIFE OF A HOME MISSIONARY.

BY REV. B. CUNZ.

When I began my labors in this region as a missionary pastor in September, 1885, I found an utterly neglected field. Breaking the bread of life to the hungering is a precious privilege, but it requires hard labor to make rocky soil take shape under the Bible hammer. Practically the field is one of the lost outposts, the old original founders dropping off one after another with no one to take their places; the rising generation growing up, as a sort of a cross between the German and the uncultured American, without Christian training of any kind, unconcerned as to an intelligent piety or our church practices. All this was on a remuneration of $250 a year, that had to maintain a family of six persons, and would have been inadequate had it not been for those noble ladies, providing clothing with their consecrated hands and prayers who came to the relief of the missionary's scanty purse that cannot be stretched to cover the limits of his wants. But a life of poverty is a badge of honor to the home missionary, and though the duties were arduous, necessitating a horseback ride of twelve miles each Sabbath, and occasionally a missionary tour over a radius of forty miles, though it was not pleasant to face the fierce winds and endanger one's life on the fearful North Missouri roads, the duties were assumed joyfully, for a voice whispered into the missionary's ear the sweet consolation, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

Noticing there were only two male and three or four female members in church connection (the Methodist) among a population of about 600 souls, and scarcely more than two households in town where the voice of prayer was heard or the Bible read, I began to arrange for services, and tried to interest a people so destitute of church privileges in religious matters. Doubtless my earnest efforts would have been crowned with success if one factor, and in fact the most powerful factor in counterbalancing these efforts, had been taken into full consideration; namely, Masonic self-righteousness, the Masonic pride of the leading spirits in the town. It is natural with me to delight in religious conversation, but, ah! how I have sincerely regretted casting the pearl before a man of the place who parades his sovereign contempt for all religious aspirations save the Masonic. A blatant blasphemer, a son of tumult, ever hostile to Israel, ridiculing every effort looking to honor the consecrated cause of Christ, violent and bitter in his defiance of churches or Bible-defence. Having followed a sailor's life for a number of years, acquiring the habits of dissipation and wickedness, sojourning on a far-away coast among the Malays, and different other circumstances led him to re-echo the atheist's arguments: "If God is almighty he can prevent sin. Then why does he not?" and to doubt the existence of any authoritative guidance on God's part. The only theosophic system worthy of attention he claimed for Masonry, of which he unquestionably is one of the master-spirits, judging from the homage he receives from the faction. I certainly stung as in a hornet's nest in trying to devote my efforts to bring this man to an insight into subjects of supreme importance to the thinking mind. Perceiving I was in dead earnest and meant what I said he became abusive, malicious and vengeful. Since then I found he circulated the report broadcast over town and country that I had expressed the opinion: "Masons and secret society men were all infidels and no good men among them!" But never did I utter any such sweeping statement. Although I do despise, condemn and denounce false systems robbing God of his glory and shearing the church of her strength, I respect and appreciate Masons as individuals for private virtue or excellence of character. But the zeal for the Lord's house, the snares and ditches awaiting the deceived, the eternal welfare of immortal souls compel me to lift up my voice in warning and I cannot be a "dumb dog" as an ambassador of Christ. "Woe unto them that call bitter sweet!" Where is the true charity and brotherly love?

Since then I have had unknown forces to face, and this required a fiery trial of strength and purpose. A whole series of petty persecutions followed each other in rapid succession, wonderfully calculated to impress me deeply with the uncommon solidarity of the "powers" governing or intending to shape and govern the outside unfortunate ones "who have not received the mark of the beast."

Although I had been promised the use of a room in the Normal School for forming classes in German by the president of that institution, who until then had given me a place of friendship in his heart, yet this privilege was given to another; but the accomplished and genial president, of course, is a Mason in high standing, and the patronized competitor is also enjoying the lodge privileges. That made all the difference.

So likewise when I presented an application to be permitted the use of the school-house for the purpose of teaching a select school on Christian principles in our own village, the postmaster, who is a violent and bitter "offensive partisan" on the lodge-question, flatly refused me on no other ground (they could not call in question my competence) but that "they did not wish a Christian school, with prayers and the Bible in it; they had only use for a deist."

Unfortunately the two controlling men of my little charge were members of the same lodge; and picture my discouragement, when one day a well-meaning brother sought to give me a very uncharitable and severe lecture on the impropriety of daring to say one word in discouragement of secret societies. Of course, they were of no account, of more harm than good to the church; but then!—oh, too bad, it would break up the congregation, because a man who belonged to the craft also, had promised a few dollars to the pastor's support, but now would certainly withhold it, etc., etc.

Added to this, the most important men of the town, all members of the fraternity, as, par ordre du monfite, simultaneously changed their former high estimation of me into a correspondingly low one. They tried to make me feel that I had committed an unpardonable crime. Their previous kindness was turned into bitter antipathy. They never really sympathized with churches, but now their selfish pride found a sweet occasion for violent declamations against these bigoted ministers who cannot make up their minds to discard the earnest truths of the Bible for the "large-hearted Tom, Dick, and Harry's big church." It did not astonish me, therefore, when I was coolly informed, after a year's labor, that the majority of the hearers were unwilling to keep up the services, and the minority were unable to provide a pastor themselves, so, of course, I was obliged to resign.

"Had you been a Mason, you could have spared all this trouble," triumphantly suggested a prominent Masonic worker, after this iron hail of battle. "If you were one of us, you could not be left this way."

But the spirit of all the promises of the Bible is in the strong word of the Lord: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." And I repeat with the sainted Luther:

"Nehmen sie uns den Leib,
Gut, Ehr, Kind und Weib;
Lass fahren dahin!
Sie haben's kein Gewinn.
Das Reich muss uns doch bleiben."

THE MORGAN FAMILY.

BY MRS. GEORGE A. SPENCER.

After Mrs. Morgan with her two children, Lucinda and Thomas, left Batavia, she married a widower, an intimate friend of Mr. Morgan, George William Harris, by name, and lived in Terre Haute, Ind. They afterward moved to Nauvoo, Ill. Mrs. Morgan separated from her husband sometime later on account of polygamy being introduced as a part of the religion of the household. Mr. Harris was a Mormon by faith. While there Lucinda married David B. Smith of Nauvoo, an engineer by trade (no relation to Joseph Smith). Lucinda was the mother of ten children, all of them now dead except Don A. Smith, born in Nauvoo in 1840, now living in Oregon.

Thomas J. Morgan, and the only son of Captain and Mrs. Morgan, was married in Palmyra, Mo., to Sarah J. Day, daughter of Reuben Day of East Tennessee. Of this union were born five children, all dead except one, a daughter, Mrs. George Spencer, born in Shannon county, Missouri, in 1857, now living in Oregon.

After Mrs. Morgan left Mr. Harris, she together with her daughter Lucinda and family, and her son Thomas and his wife, and her one child by Harris, born in Nauvoo, a daughter named Margaret, after making short stops at intermediate points, moved to Memphis, Tenn. Sometime later they moved to Shannon county, Missouri, excepting Mrs. Morgan and her daughter Margaret who remained in Memphis. Mrs. Morgan held a position as assistant in the Orphan Asylum in that city, and died there. After her death her son Thomas took his half-sister Margaret to live in his family in Shannon county, Missouri. She afterwards became the wife of Mr. Logan Graves of Shannon county. While living here Don A. Smith, son of Lucinda, was married to Martha Allen of the same county.

While our civil war was raging, they all moved to Illinois; and while there Thomas J. Morgan died, in 1865, on his farm three miles from Venice, opposite St. Louis, leaving a wife and three children to mourn the loss of a loving husband and kind father. The children were two girls and one boy, Laura, Mary, and William: the latter died three years later in St. Louis, Mo. Mrs. Thomas Morgan after living two years a widow married Mr. Louis Crome of St. Louis, from whom she afterward separated, and after traveling considerably and residing a short time in several places, she with her daughters located in Quincy, Ill., where she died in 1884. Laura, the oldest daughter of Thomas J. Morgan, married Mr. Frank Kunkle of Quincy, a carriage painter by trade. She died in 1872. Mary E., second daughter of Thomas J. Morgan, married Mr. George A. Spencer of Quincy, a machinist by trade.

Some years after the death of Thomas J. Morgan, David P. Smith and his wife Lucinda, with their daughter Sarah and her husband, and son, Don A. Smith, and family, moved to Oregon; but two years previous to this Martha, the wife of Don A. Smith, died, leaving one child, a boy. He afterward married a Miss Susan Turner, and brought her and his son to Oregon.

Sarah, the daughter of Lucinda, died in Oregon leaving two children, a boy and girl. Lucinda Smith, daughter of Capt. Wm. Morgan, died in Marion county, Oregon, in 1882, leaving a husband and son to mourn the loss of an amiable wife and loving mother. Her husband, Capt. David Smith, followed her one year later. Don A. Smith, only child living of Lucinda Morgan, and grand-son of Capt. Wm. Morgan, is now living with his family in Marion county, Oregon. Mrs. George Spencer, only child now living of Thomas J. Morgan, and grand-daughter of Capt. Wm. Morgan, is now residing in the same county and State.

THE BOYCOTT MUST GO.

Two recent judicial decisions ought to have, and doubtless will have, large influence on a certain class of workmen. Judge Brown of the United States Circuit Court of New York, in one case, that of an action of the Old Dominion Steamship Company against the leaders of Ocean Association of the 'Longshoremen's Union, has handed down a decision in which he made use of the following emphatic language:

All associations designed to interfere with the perfect freedom of employers in the proper management and control of their lawful business, or to indicate in any particular the terms upon which their business shall be conducted by means of threats of injury or loss, by interference with their property or traffic, or with their lawful employment of other persons, or designed to abridge any of these rights, are illegal combinations of associations, and all acts done in furtherance of such intentions by such means and accompanied by damage are actionable.

This is a statement which ought to be considered by every honest workman in the country. Unless he really intends to become a law-breaker he should take to heart the principle, undeniably sound, that every other workman, whether unionist or non-unionist, has a right to labor in perfect freedom, and that any attempt to deprive him of that freedom is in the nature of robbery, punishable under the laws. The history of the case decided by the Supreme Court of Connecticut is in brief this: In the spring of 1886 a strike was started in the composing room of the New Haven Journal and Courier, and the Typographical Union No. 47 of that city attempted to ruin its business as a means of bringing its proprietor to terms. The four chief offenders were arrested and prosecuted for conspiracy. The case was first tried in the city court, and the four prisoners pronounced guilty. An appeal was taken to the Superior Court, where the case was retried, the jury sustaining the verdict of the lower court in the case of three of the accused and acquitting the fourth. An appeal from the verdict of the jury was made to the Supreme Court of Errors, which has now confirmed the verdict of the jury, and declared the boycott to be an offence against the common law; that is, it declares that it is not by virtue of any express statutory prohibition, liable to be at any time repealed, that a boycott is illegal, but because it is a wrongful attempt to deprive other workmen of their freedom, business men of their business, and the community of its fundamentally lawful right to trade with whom it sees fit. Both these decisions must be accepted as sound in principle, and the denunciation of the courts by irresponsible self-constituted labor leaders, who make the ignorance of honest workmen their stock in trade, and that upon which they depend for support, will not avail.—Boston Traveller.

The good word comes from the beautiful city of Oakland, California, that one of its daily papers has discontinued its Sunday edition at the solicitation of the pastors, and across the bay a San Francisco paper has also ceased to desecrate the Lord's day with an issue. This a hopeful token from the great Pacific State, where the influences tending to entire secularization have strongly operated from the first, and are yet so strong that the Prohibition party in their State convention a year ago voted a plank on the Sabbath out of their platform.

—Rev. Dr. J. D. Fulton of the Centennial Baptist church, Brooklyn, has resigned his charge to enter the work of evangelizing Roman Catholics. His eccentricities have reduced the church attendance to a comparatively small number, where once was a very hopeful field.

REFORM NEWS.

OUR LECTURER IN NORTHERN GEORGIA.

Augusta and Vicinity—One Woman's Work—Clark University—Atlanta revisited—A school erected by freedmen—Marietta and its historical surrounding—A Prohibition town—The Kenesaw Mountain Battle Ground—Rome and Liquor.

ATLANTA, Ga. Mar. 10, '87.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I stayed eight days in Augusta, Ga., during which I gave seven discourses, of which the first was before the students of Payne Institute, the second in the Baptist church at Summerville, the third in the Central Baptist church, the fourth before the students of Miss Laney's school, the fifth to the Baptist Ministers' Union, the sixth in the Central Baptist church and the seventh in the Baptist church at Summerville. All of these were meetings of much interest and the attendance large, except the second meeting at the Central Baptist church, which, owing to the rain, was slimly attended. Although it rained equally hard the next night, there was a full attendance and much interest at the meeting in Summerville.

During my stay I was most kindly entertained by Miss Lucy Laney, a lady who by her own unaided efforts has started and sustains a boarding school which compares favorably with some of the well-endowed seminaries of the South. Her school numbers about 260, and includes normal, classical and musical departments. Its one great need is better buildings. I hope Northern benevolence will aid Miss Laney in putting up a commodious school building. I know of no institution more deserving of aid.

I left Augusta at 8:40 A. M. on the 9th and reached this city at 1 P. M. I went out to Clark University (three miles) and called on Pres. E. O. Thayer, with whom I arranged to address the students this morning at 9 A. M. This institution is under the patronage of the Freedmen's Aid Society of the M. E. church. A newly constructed street-car line leads to within a few rods of the three large and elegant college buildings. Besides these fine brick structures there are houses for the professors and a number of cottages for students with families. There are normal, preparatory, classical and theological departments; besides, there is a farm of 400 acres, and nearly all kinds of mechanical trades are conducted by the members of the institution. The finest of carriages and harness are made here. There is no primary department; all the students are young men and women and represent every State in the South. The number in attendance exclusive of day students is over 250, of which 50 are in the theological department. There are four hundred professors and teachers.

The professors and students were all present at my lecture and listened most respectfully. Pres. Thayer said that he had never joined any secret society and did not believe any Christian minister had time to attend to them even though they were harmless. He earnestly hoped that they would keep out of them and was very glad to have the subject called to their attention. One student came to me to thank me and say that if he had heard my discourse some months before it would have saved him $125.

On my return I called at the Baptist Theological and Normal School. Pres. Graves says that in this and in the Baptist Female Seminary there is at present a deep religious interest. He will give me an opportunity to address the students if I can wait till Monday, the 14th. Meanwhile I hope to collect some facts on the prohibition question and other topics.

ROME, GA., March 15th.—Before I left Atlanta I visited the Morris Brown College recently started, and under the patronage of the A. M. E. church. They have a fine building, costing nearly $12,000, which has been erected by the contributions of colored people, mostly in small sums. No one gave more than $50. It has now 126 students, but many of them are in the primary department. Rev. W. J. Ganes, who is acting president, was a leader in the prohibition movement in Atlanta. He told me that he was a Mason, but had not been in a lodge for six years. He admitted that what I said about the lodge system was true, but thought the colored people were not ready to give up their societies. He was glad to have the Cynosure sent to their students.

From Atlanta I came twenty miles north to Marietta, the county seat of Cobb county. It is a pleasant town of 3,000 inhabitants, and was one of the objective points in Sherman's march on Atlanta. Big Kenesaw mountain is two miles to the northwest and Little Kenesaw is farther to the west, separated by a deep gap. There is here a very beautiful National cemetery, and there are also extensive marble works. It is a decided prohibition town, and the law seems well enforced. Unlike Atlanta, there are no "wine rooms" here, and far less opportunity to evade the law. The American Missionary Association is represented here by a school and church, conducted by Rev. E. J. Penny, a graduate of Atlanta and Andover. He and his excellent wife received me to their pleasant home and bestowed every attention. They are in marked sympathy with our reform, and do not hesitate to speak against the lodge iniquity. Rev. I. S. Hamilton of the African M. E. church has the largest church and congregation. He told me he had been a Mason and an Odd-fellow, but had repented of such folly. Most of his members belonged to some secret society, but he would be glad to have me address them on this subject.

On Sabbath at 11 A. M. I lectured to Bro. Penny's people on Africa; at 3 P. M. I preached to them from Isaiah 52: 1, and at 7:30 I spoke to a full house in the African M. E. church on secret societies. The pastor thanked me for my faithfulness and said he had never before heard anything said publicly against the system. I thought it a most satisfactory meeting. Bro. Penny and his people were present to hear.

On Monday, after breakfast, I started with a guide and a lunch to explore the Kenesaw mountains. The air was clear and cool, but pleasant for walking, and the fruit trees were in full bloom. A walk of two miles brought us to the foot of Big Kenesaw, and a carriage road has been constructed to the top; but we followed the rebel entrenchments which begin near the foot of the mountain on its east end, and extend along the north side to the west end of Little Kenesaw. It was a work of great labor, and is in excellent preservation. Much of it is made of walls of stone covered with earth in front. We found it a convenient pathway. All along there are numerous rifle pits, and the situation and means seem admirably adapted to defence. Kenesaw mountain is a sharp ridge running nearly east and west, the north and south sides being quite abrupt. On a part of the north side it is less so, and a fine fruit farm is now growing there. From the top there is a very fine view. There are a number of towns that can be clearly seen. Marietta looks beautiful; Atlanta, more than twenty miles away, can be distinctly seen when the air is clear, but now it was too hazy. Stone Mountain, thirty miles distant, lifts its round, bald head from out of the southeastern horizon. A number of smaller mountains are seen, while the main range lies some twenty-five miles to the northwest. Abundance of cactus and beautiful violets covered the top and sides, and there is a multitude of names on the rocks. We clambered down into the deep gap on the west, and ascended Little Kenesaw, which is not so high by 100 or 200 feet, but is interesting, for on the top is a broad plateau of bare rock, nearly level. There are the same earth works and rifle pits here as on the other side. It was here, on the 22d of June, 1864 (I think), that General Sherman had his sharp battle, and the last strong barrier in the way to Atlanta was captured. I cannot see how it could have been done except by largely superior numbers, nor how the defence could have failed, except by extending too greatly their lines. But then I am not a judge of military matters. We came back by another route, thoroughly tired, but greatly interested.

After a brief rest and a good dinner, I took the cars for Rome, fifty-eight miles northwest, which I reached at 7:30 P. M. This city, beautiful for location with its broad and handsome streets, is not a prohibition town. It would seem as though all the devils that had been expelled from the other cities and villages of the State had concentrated here. It may be questionable whether prohibition does absolutely prohibit, but there can be no question that it greatly diminishes the number of dram shops and the amount of liquor consumed. Just now Rome is having a boom—mostly on paper—which reminds me of the speculative era of 1836, when men supposed themselves to be getting rapidly rich, but found themselves helplessly poor. I hope to do some work here for the Master. H. H. HINMAN.

BRETHREN CLARK AND WOODSMALL.

AN APPEAL FOR LITERATURE.

HOWELL, Ark., Mar. 11, '87.

George W. Clark, the veteran reformer, has been doing valiant service in this State during the past month. He joined me first on the Arkansas river, where the colored people outnumber the whites more than twenty to one. The weather was very disagreeable and our accommodations most of the time were wretched. He endured it all though like a good soldier. After spending a week at Pine Bluff, where Satan is strongly entrenched, holding meetings that Rev. Lewis Johnson had wisely planned, he joined me again at Little Rock and had excellent meetings in four of the leading churches and the Methodist and Baptist schools.

He then went with me to Malvern and assisted me in a three days' meeting for the pastors' other leaders in the churches in Hot Springs, Clark and other counties in that section. He waked up the brethren on the subject of whisky, tobacco, secret societies and other evils the first evening and kept them awake all the way through. In fact he opened the eyes of some so wide that they are not likely to be found asleep soon again in regard to those evils. Two of the leading pastors who have been active members of societies declared publicly the next day that from that time on they would have nothing more to do with them but would give their whole strength to building up their churches. The last night of the meeting the pastor of the church where we held the meeting and another prominent pastor and two deacons threw their tobacco in the stove and publicly pledged themselves never to use it in any form again. The wife of one of the deacons also threw her snuff-box and "dipping-stick" into the stove. This was only the first-fruits; such fruits have been seen in every meeting.

Brother Clark is peculiarly adapted to this work. The fact that he was an original Abolitionist opens the way to the hearts of the colored people and then with short pointed talks and songs he interests and moves them. There is no telling how much good even this short campaign of his in the South will do. The seed he is sowing will bear fruit for years. He made a short visit to Hot Springs and starts to-day for Fort Smith and Fayetteville in the western part of the State. I hoped that he could have been with me at a meeting I have at this place, eighty miles northeast of Little Rock, beginning to-day.

Will not some friend of our work send the Cynosure to some leading colored preachers whose names I can give who ought to have the paper for three or six months at least? And will not some other friend send to me at Memphis, Tenn., which is still my headquarters, a good supply of reform literature, including anti-tobacco tracts, for distribution?

H. WOODSMALL.

FROM A CHICAGO SUBURB.

Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, the State lecturer, exhibited some of his sun pictures, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, March 1-3, in our pleasant chapel in the village of Melrose, Ill. During the first evening we took a hasty, but very pleasant journey up the River Nile, where civilization first commenced, and where for thousands of years abundant harvests have been reaped from the same fields. We viewed with admiration the massive pyramids, and noted with reverential awe the fulfilment of the prophecies in God's word, concerning the proud and fertile land of the Pharaohs. Desolation and wide-spread ruin now shroud the cities of Rameses, Hieropolis and the once populous No. Where schools of philosophy, gorgeous palaces, magnificent temples, and marts of commerce stood, sullen silence now broods, the billows and sands of the sea roll over the broken columns, and the hand of time had left its tracery in the mould and ashes. We were convinced by this lecture on Egypt, that God's "word is truth."

The second and third lectures were on heathen mythology, and the identity of modern secret oath bound societies, especially Freemasonry, with the secret mysteries of sun worship, as it existed among the nations of antiquity.

The correspondences between sun worship and the false religions of our time, as represented by secret societies, was very strikingly presented. We were shown the interior of a Hindoo temple and the relative positions of their deities, Brahma, Siva and Vishnu in the east, south and west, representing the sun in these respective positions. Our attention was called to the fact that there was no altar in the north because it was the region of darkness. There followed this view a picture of the interior of a Masonic temple with the worshipful Master sitting in the east, the Junior Warden in the south, and the Senior Warden in the west, all these Masonic priests occupying the same relative positions as Brahma, Siva and Vishnu do in Hindoo temples. It is also a fact that in a Masonic temple there is no altar in the north, because it was represented in the heathen mysteries as the realm of night.

In all the mysteries of sun worship the foundational stone was the death and resurrection of the sun god. In these characteristics, as well as others, the likeness of Freemasonry to sun worship was made apparent to every candid mind.

The lectures throughout were very convincing, and some who had taken no decided stand against this abomination, because they were ignorant of its true character, expressed themselves as highly gratified with the exhibition, and were fully convinced by these lectures of the dreadful wrong of these secret societies.

Bro. Arnold has an excellent way of presenting this unpopular truth. He is just the man to do it. He does not antagonize men and denounce them because they belong to these secret orders, but presents the facts clearly and says, "Judge ye." "If the Lord be God follow him, but if Baal then follow him." He should have the prayers and sympathy of all Christian people in the world in the work of exposing what President J. Blanchard in his baccalaureate sermon points out to be the worship of the beast.

We have no secret lodge in our village. There are some who belong to some secret orders, or sympathize with them. I am earnestly praying for the "congress of churches" that its utterances may be blessed to the enlightenment of the thousands who are yet in darkness on this subject.

A. W. PARRY.

A GOOD WEEK IN OHIO.

MANSFIELD, Ohio, March 18th, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—As the friends in Ohio will wish to know what their agent has been doing during the past week, I will report briefly for my time is quite limited.

I have traveled nearly one hundred miles, stopping all along the line at places where I have previously spoken, and secured readers for the Cynosure. I have been encouraged by some contributions to the State work and a number of renewals to the Cynosure; a majority of those who subscribed for the first time last year renewing, and those who could not on account of the stringency of the times, expressing their regrets. As I have been away from Columbus for over two months, it seemed best that I make this trip more hurriedly than I should otherwise.

Sabbath was spent with friends at Creston. The M. E. pastor of this place had taken a short vacation, it was supposed to get married. I was invited to fill his pulpit in the evening, which I did to the best of my ability. Rev. Henderson of West Salem, a local preacher and a seceded Mason, spoke in the morning. Notwithstanding the storm the house was filled in the evening, as in the morning.

The meeting at Sterling on Monday evening was attended with as much interest as any this season. Nearly half of my audience, I think, were secretists. They had evidently come prepared to answer me; so I gave them an opportunity to do their best. After a brief description of the initiation of an Entered Apprentice and comments on the same, I gave an opportunity for questions or remarks. A saloon-keeper by the name of Francis Somer was the first to speak for the brotherhood(?) He was near the back of the house and did not talk plain, but as near as I could understand he thought I had given the thing about as it was. The next man to speak was Mr. John Lee, an old gray-headed infidel. I was told that he was a sort of a father to Masonry in that place. He brought up the usual argument that George Washington was a Mason and that all the great and good men had belonged to the lodge; denounced things in general, and myself in particular. The next man to take the floor was Mr. J. B. Armstutz. He came forward, denounced me as a perjured villain, and used language that no decent person would wish to repeat. Mr. Armstutz owns a share in a large flouring mill and had been considered respectable by his fellow citizens until this occurrence. Here is another signal illustration of what Masonry can do for a man. I am glad that the people of Sterling have had this chance to see the spirit of the lodge, before others should be led blindly into it.

A number expressed their sympathy with me in my work. Some thought I would be afraid to raise such a spirit, and wondered how I could keep cool amid all the excitement. I have learned by my little experience in this work, "If you will give the devil rope enough he will hang himself." God makes "even the wrath of men to praise him." A number in Sterling will read the Cynosure after this. Our meeting was held in the U. B. church. Bro. S. H. Johnson, who has been a Mason, but has been converted this winter, testified to the truth of our exposition and kindly entertained me at his home.

Friends at Oberlin expect to send one or more delegates to the Congress. Father Clark, Wm. Burr and other reformers were in usual health. At Mallet Creek I was made welcome as usual. Mrs. Bingham, Mr. Gardner and others showed their interest unabated in our work. Wadsworth shows by keeping up her Cynosure list which way the wind is blowing. I stopped over night here with our friend Overholt. Stopping a few moments at West Salem, I found Bro. A. C. Reed had gone to reap the reward of his labors. His widow, Mrs. Mary Reed, is in delicate health. She reads the Cynosure with interest each week. I should like to speak of others and of their interest in our work, but the world moves on, and the train is likely to be on time. I shall stop, D. V., at Leonardsburg and Delaware en route for Columbus. W. B. STODDARD.

WELCOMED IN METHODIST CHURCHES.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On Sabbath, the 6th of March, I attended divine services at the Haven Chapel, M. E. church, and was urged by the pastor to preach in his place but declined, and listened to a discourse from him on the observance of the Sabbath. I preached in the evening, and the pastor was present as a hearer. He kindly announced that I would lecture on the "Religion of Freemasonry" in his church, the following Wednesday evening.

Rev. Mr. Thompson, the pastor of Hickory Grove Covenant church, came with me to the lecture from Avery, where he resides, and conducted the opening religious exercises. The class leader of the Haven Chapel church was deeply interested, and anxious that I should lecture in other Methodist churches.

The M. E. pastor at Avery had commenced a series of meetings in the hall used by them as their place of worship, and in which I had lectured on Freemasonry, and I attended in company with Rev. Mr. Thompson on Friday night, after the lecture at Haven Chapel. He was taking his text just as we reached the door. When he concluded his sermon he invited me to speak, which I did; and it was arranged at the conclusion of the meeting that I should preach there the next Sabbath night.

It had been arranged when I lectured at the Haven Chapel M. E. church, that I should return and preach there the following Sabbath at 2 p. m. The funeral of a young man who had died in Kansas City, and had been brought there for burial, was in progress when I arrived to fill my appointment. The funeral services detained the people for an hour after the time appointed for me to preach; so I thought not best to hold them longer. They then requested me to remain and preach at night, but my arrangement to preach to the M. E. congregation at Avery prevented me from complying with their request.

The Tuesday night following, accompanied by Rev. Mr. Acheson, pastor of the Seceder church of Hickory, I went to a school house three miles from Avery. Mr. Acheson offered prayer, and I gave a lecture, and distributed literature in the congregation. I had arranged with the minister of a Dunker church to give a lecture in his neighborhood, but a minister of the Christian church was holding revival services there, and so the lecture was deferred until some future time.

To-night, March 17th, I will attend prayer meeting with the Methodists at Haven Chapel, and then, perhaps, leave Monroe county for a season.

I hope the friends of reform in Iowa, as many as can, will go up to Chicago to attend the Congress of Churches and Christians, to meet there the 30th of this month. C. F. HAWLEY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DR. CROSBY'S BILL A LAW.

NEW YORK, March 17.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The Crosby High License bill passed the Assembly at Albany, N. Y., yesterday. It is wonderful how many temperance men are deceived by this policy. To license a moral evil is criminal. Last Monday the Presbyterian ministers discussed the question of Sabbath observance. There was a clean cut distinction made between the civil and religious Sabbath. The latter has been committed as a trust to the church, and believers should honor it by "spending the whole time in the public and private exercises of God's worship, except so much as is to be taken up in the works of necessity and mercy." As a civil institution the state is its keeper. The government should prohibit public Sabbath desecration. It should say to the managers of our variety theatres, beer gardens, saloons, base ball parks, etc., that their doors and gates shall all be closed on the Sabbath; that printing presses shall not run, and news-boys shall not range our streets on Sabbath; that freight and passenger trains shall not run, and Congress shall not continue its sessions through the Sabbath. In short, it should prohibit Sabbath desecration on the part of individuals, corporations, municipalities, commonwealth or general government. Dr. Hall told us that the Blue Laws of Connecticut were a fiction. They were never enacted. A renegade Episcopalian who hated the Puritans forged them and had them published in England. The forgery had been exposed time and again.

The collapse of the Father McGlynn prosecution is another illustration of the fact that the days of Roman absolutism are numbered. The "old Latin spirit" always discovered a "capacity and disposition to exercise authority." Leo I., at the crisis when the empire was falling in ruins about him, wielding the scepter of spiritual supremacy over distant provinces; interposing to protect society from anarchy; going forth to the camp of Attila to save Rome from his destroying host, and endeavoring, even though with but partial success, to shield the Romans from Genseric and his Vandal army: Gregory I., exercising his pontifical rule in the midst of political tumult and disorder, and sending forth missionaries for the conquest of new nations to the faith: Hildebrand insisting on the right of the church to govern itself independently of lay authority; demanding of king as well as priest absolute submission; sitting for days in the castle of Canossa, while an emperor stood without in the court yard praying for admission: Innocent III., giving away crowns and dispatching his legates to lay kingdoms under the Interdict,—these were possibilities of former ages, but not to be tolerated now. By and by the pontiff will be shorn of the locks wherein lie his great strength. J. M. FOSTER.

BRO. M. A. GAULT AT PAXTON.

Brother Gault is the agent of the National Reform Association. His field is the West. There are six agents employed by this association. They are selected from the leading denominations. Their field of action is the whole United States. Brother Gault has the western portion. Paxton is in the eastern part of his field, and this was his first visit, and nearly as far east as he has ever been. He preached twice and lectured once, and most ably did he acquire himself. He preached Sabbath morning to a good congregation in the U. P. church, in the evening to a union meeting of all the American churches in the city. The best attention was given, and a good impression was made. He very ably presented the truths committed to his mission.

In his lecture his subject led him to speak of secret societies, and most clearly did he show that they were antagonistic to constitutional republican government, and prohibited by the Word of God. It is well for the friends of the National Christian Association opposed to secret societies to notice that Bro. Gault and fellow agents are not employed to do the work of the agents appointed by their own society. The work of each society is enough for the agents of each. Each class of agents must act with a single purpose, or their work will suffer. It is true the work of each is helpful to the other, there is a harmony and unity of sentiment and feeling between them, but, every man to his own calling, is a principal as effective and necessary here as in everything else where success is expected, and the agents of this society must not be charged with cowardice, unfaithfulness, and self-seeking, because they do not leave their distinctive work and make opposition to secret societies the chief business of their mission. They are called to do a mighty and precious work,—a work that will wonderfully help anti-secrecy agents. Let us then bid them God-speed, and let them do their own work in their own way, and we say of them as Jesus said of some whom his disciples forbid to cast out devils, "Forbid them not, for he that doeth a good work in my name cannot speak lightly of me." W. W. B.

A GOOD LETTER FROM EAST TENNESSEE.

GOSHEN'S MILLS, Tenn.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Through the kind courtesy of Bro. H. H. Hinman, whom I had the pleasure of meeting while traveling on the train, some two months since on my return from a "missionary tour" to Clifton, S. C., and he also returning from a series of lectures in the same field, I have been a weekly recipient of the Cynosure; for which kindness I now wish to express my thanks. I am much pleased with the tone and sentiments of the paper, and only regret that I am unable to give it a more substantial impetus than my mere hearty endorsement. I gave Bro. Hinman a cordial invitation to come to my church to lecture against secret societies, and also at the "Cherokee Seminary" near my home, with the fond hope that after he was through with the convention at Knoxville, he would make it convenient to give us a call. I see, however, by his correspondence that he has returned to the South another way. I should have been exceedingly pleased to have had him come and lecture in my vicinity, and I will here again renew the invitation to Bro. Hinman, or any other of the lecturers against secret societies, who may feel willing to give us a call.

Our church (the Brethren, or German Baptist) is in strong sympathy with your work. In fact, we are so much opposed to secret societies, that we make it a test of membership, always putting the question whether the applicant belongs to any secret organization, and having a negative answer before we receive them into fellowship.

I was startled and very much pained at the admission of the minister in W. B. Stoddard's report of the 12th of February, to think that any worldly consideration should have such a hold upon a minister of Jesus Christ as to cause him to feel that he would rather have his own "right arm cut off" than to bear the yoke of Satan, which he is compelled to endure lest he should offend some of his majesty's subjects. Truly we are living in times of which the prophet spake when he said, "your priests preach for hire, and your prophets divine for money." If it was a money consideration which deterred him from doing his duty, I pity him; or if it was fear of the popular sentiment, he is equally to be pitied. Because in either case, he surely is not the servant of Christ, for Paul says, "If I yet please men I am not the servant of Christ."

It may be thought by some that I take rather a radical view of the subject, and indeed the language does seem a little strong, but the fact is I have long since learned the great lesson taught by the Divine Master; that "no man can serve two masters." That it is utterly impossible for one to serve the master Jesus Christ, and the master Mason; and besides, I have nothing to lose either from the church or the world by thus boldly expressing my sentiments.

We as a church have no salaried ministry, and consequently no hirelings, and hence we have no other yoke to bear save the yoke of our Lord Jesus Christ, which he declares to be both "easy and light," and as there is no money consideration at stake with our ministers, we can feel the more free to rebuke sin of whatever phase.

I know that the popular sentiment has a very strong hold upon a great many ministers of the Gospel, and more especially those whom the prophet denominates as "greedy dogs, who preach for money and divine for hire;" and yet it always makes me feel sad when I hear such expressions from them as that related by Bro. Stoddard. I am always reminded of the language of the apostle Jude, 11th verse, when I hear of such cases: and how forcibly comes the language of another apostle, that "the love of money is the root of all evil, which some having coveted after have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." Surely such examples are enough to make us feel sad at the weaknesses of our race.

I have had some very sad experiences in the discharge of my ministerial duties in dealing with individuals who were members of secret lodges, and who although their hearts were broken up, and truly penitent, and who were to all human appearances earnestly desiring to attain to that liberty which only the people of God can enjoy, and yet the yoke of Satan was so firmly fastened upon them, that like the "rich young man" who came to Jesus, they would "go away sorrowful." They were "joined to their idol," the lodge.

I want again to say to all those who are traveling in the interest of the good cause, and are "wrestling not with flesh and blood but against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the darkness (or secrecy) of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places," that should they ever have occasion to come into East Tennessee, and stop off at our county town, Jonesboro, that we have a very comfortable church-house three miles south, known as Pleasant View, and that you will not find us afraid to invite you to lecture there against secret societies, lest we should incur the popular displeasure. JESSE CROSSWHITE.

PITH AND POINT.

PREPARES FOR A TESTIFYING CHURCH.

I think the Cynosure has helped make it possible to organize a Free Methodist society in this place. We are few numerically, but God's spirit is with us and we hope to accomplish much good. Bro. Tebeau was recently converted from Romanism and joined the F. M. church. Bro. T. S. Ladue held protracted meeting and organized us as a church. Bro. Ira Ward, who used to be a pupil of Pres. J. Blanchard at Wheaton College, is our pastor. So don't, without good cause, deprive us of the Cynosure, for it is an eye-opener and productive of best results spiritually to very many people.—E. F. WARING, Walla Walla, W. T.

CAN YE NOT DISCERN THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES?

The short extracts from the many distinguished men against Freemasonry and kindred orders in your late numbers ought to be issued in pamphlet form and scattered in tens of thousands. When on earth our Lord talked with men he reproved them for not knowing the signs of the times when they could tell the probability of rain by the clouds. Our bright, self-deluded people were just as stupid when they let slavery deluge our country in blood; and we in our generation seem about equally blind to lodgery when it is so busy hatching its anarchistic alligators and other monsters to murder our citizens and destroy our civil and religious liberties.—T. H.

A GOOD DAY TO LOOK FOR.

After many thanks to you, would say that your paper has been for the last month a welcome visitor. I could not have a better Christian paper. I hope to see the day dawn when every Christian church—yes, every individual Christian will have taken a stand with the National Christian Association.—C. S. MOORE, Williamette, Ark.

THE CHURCH MUST TAKE A STAND.

After seeing the tendency of secret societies by coming in contact with them I sent to you for some literature on the subject. The more I investigate the more I am convinced that ministers of the Gospel must sooner or later take a firm stand against them.—REV. S. A. ALT, Jola, Kan.

WORTH A GOOD WALK.

I sent the money for the Cynosure last November and I am going to send it again, and if you do not get it this time, although I am seventy-one years old, and it is only seven hundred miles, before I will do without the Cynosure and let the Freemasons beat me out of it, I will walk every step of that seven hundred miles with the money myself.—JOHN LANTZ, Abilene, Kansas.

THE CHRISTIAN CONGRESS.

I see in the Christian Conservator that this will be held in Chicago and Rev. Bro. Floyd will be one of our delegates appointed by the United Brethren. He is one of our loyal United Brethren. I hope and pray that the ministers of all denominations may come there filled with the Holy Spirit; that our Father in heaven may guide them to put down the sin of secret combinations.—JOHN SWICKARD, New Albany, Ohio.

SATAN OVERSHOTS.

An exhorter of the United Brethren church several years ago backed into the Odd-fellows lodge, but he became very sick of it at a funeral of one of the craft. A drunken brother and fit subject to do lodge praying according to its fundamental principles, repeated part of a prescribed prayer at the grave; when, his memory failing, he turned to one of the brethren and in a low voice said, "I'll be damned if I hain't forgot that prayer." The exhorter has been reclaimed and is now a preacher in the church and is opposed to the commission because its work is the fruit of the lodge causing strife and division in this anti-secrecy church.—CYRUS SMITH.

OUR PORTRAITS.

As you have within two or three years published the likeness of so many reformers, would it not be a good idea to group these on fine, thick paper, suitable for placing on the walls of our sitting rooms or parlors? And I hope you will yet include Elders Post and Callender among them, and also your editorial staff, and the lecturers. Why not collect these in a book with brief biographies? Will it not do good?—J. W. RAYNOR, Upsoneille, Pa.

It is a good idea which we have urged for a year or two. But it takes time and money.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON I.—April 3, 1887.—Joseph Sold into Egypt.—Gen. 37: 23-36.

GOLDEN TEXT.—But the Lord was with Joseph, and shewed him mercy.—Gen. 39: 21.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Joseph sold by his brethren vs. 23-28. Many lessons are to be drawn from this terrible crime of Joseph's brethren. (1) The seed from which it grew was Jacob's unwise favoritism. To show partiality to one individual or class is sure to bring forth bitter fruit whether practiced in the family or the state. There would be no labor troubles if one class did not believe that the rich possessed unfair advantages over the poor, and that law and society combine to perpetuate the difference and make it wider. And the prime cause why so many working men are to day recruiting the ranks of infidelity is because they believe, and too often with good reason, that the church of Christ herself shares this un-Christlike partiality for the aristocracy of wealth. Secret societies should be condemned as a great source of national danger on this account alone if no other objection could be urged against them,—that they are throughout a system of favoritism, they array against each other in bitterest antagonism those who should live as brothers of one great family, and the wholesale crimes of the anarchists against life and property are only the natural fruit.

(2) The far-reaching consequences. In selling Joseph they in reality sold their posterity into four centuries of bitter bondage among the brick kilns of Egypt. National judgments seldom discriminate between the innocent and the guilty and no government can ignore the rights of the weakest with safety to future generations. Says Dr. Strong in "Our Country," in 1880 over a million of children who ought to have been in school were employed in mills, mines and factories. In 1881 they comprised 44 per cent of the work-people of Massachusetts. In one county of Pennsylvania alone three thousand children from six years old and upwards labor in the mines from dawn till dark. Our government in not legislating in behalf of these helpless little ones is as truly selling them to Mammon as Joseph was sold to the Ishmaelites. The classes which may finally destroy our Republic will not be the less but the more dangerous for being reared within her own bosom.

2. Joseph a type of Christ vs. 29-36. Joseph was sold and Christ betrayed for the same paltry sum, twenty pieces of silver. Christ is sold in the persons of his weak and helpless ones every time they are allowed to be wronged without redress for filthy lucre's sake. Mammon is the inspiration of the drink traffic, and our legislators with their high license ideas act much on the same principle as did Judah,—they do not shrink from the crime but they prefer to make the crime profitable. And so they strike hands with the rumrunner, the Ishmaelite of modern civilization, and sell the young and helpless Joseph into poverty, misery, starvation and vice. Every nation has its Josephs, its weak and unprotected classes, and according to its treatment of these classes will be its future as a people. May our own take warning before it is too late.

From Peloubet's Notes.

There are great differences of character among the children of the same family.

The atmosphere of the family, the unconscious pervading spirit, has a great influence upon the characters and destiny of the children. Every improvement in the character of the parents bears fruit in the children.

Partiality in the family is wrong, and is liable to bring evil upon those to whom special favor is shown.

Train carefully the child of to-day, for to-morrow he may be a ruler.

Joseph's home training was in love, in piety, in useful work.

Those whose example and whose words reprove men's evil deeds, and interfere with their evil courses, are almost sure to be hated.

A tale-bearer who repeats the evil deeds of others for vain or useless or wicked motives is a mean person; but to report evil in order to cure it and save the evil doer and society is noble.

Envy is (1) a diabolical sin; (2) it is a soul sin; (3) it is an essential evil, pure and simple; for (4) other sins yield some present pleasure, but envy has nothing but torment.—Hom. Com. (5) It is fruitful in other sins. It is the soil in which crimes flourish.

Oh, that Reuben had been open and courageous in opposing wrong! How much sorrow it would have saved!

The crime that resulted from envy brought with it a long train of sorrows to many persons. The brothers did not escape from the consequence of their sin, though God overruled it for good.

Jacob deceived his father and now his children deceive him. Curse, like chickens, always come home to roost.

Sins are social. Envy, hatred, murder, lying, unkindness to parents, were all united together in this transaction.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. E. P. MATHER died in the 93d year of her age at Ellington, New York, Feb. 15, 1887.

One who was present writes, "She passed peacefully and quietly to the beautiful beyond. She held firmly to her Anti-masonic principles referring to them but a few moments before her departure. Nearly the last work she did was to distribute tracts. Each of her New Year's callers was presented with one. Faithful unto death and in reliance upon her Saviour she departed in full assurance of "a crown of life."

Those who attended the convention at Batavia will readily recall the appearance and earnest words of this most remarkable witness to the barbarous treatment of Captain William Morgan, when taken from the jail in Canandaigua in 1826. She was an eye-witness to the scene and heard his cries of "murder" as he was forcibly thrust into the carriage that conveyed him to Fort Niagara and to his fate in the Niagara river. She told the story in the Opera House and at the monument with such earnestness as to rivet the attention of all present and carry conviction to every heart. She was spared for a long time to bear testimony against the dark and damning deeds of the lodge and faithfully improved her opportunity. She has been gathered as a shock of corn fully ripe in its season and those who were near and dear to her may have the assurance of the sympathy and prayers of the many who are still struggling against the terrible power she so bravely withstood.

DEMND

BY EMINENT EDUCATORS.

PRES. L. H. HAMMOND, Lebanon Valley College.—My conviction is firm that the influence of Freemasonry is baneful in whole and in part; that, religiously, it is a stumbling-block; and that, socially and politically, the beneficence it offers to one is a robbery of others.

PRESIDENT J. H. FAIRCHILD, Oberlin.—The tendency to organize in secret bodies, political, social, religious and literary, seems to indicate distrust of the ordinary institutions of society, and will surely generate the distrust from which it seems to spring. The very idea of a secret combination implies a barbarous age, or a state of social anarchy in which such arrangements are necessary for safety. There is no place for it in a Christian civilization.

REV. JOSIAH BRADLEY, Principal of Rock Spring Seminary, Illinois, 1829.—Masonry is a human, and cunningly formed system of deception. Is it not rightly named "Speculative Freemasonry"? Millions have been drawn within its veil, and led away captive by its false pretensions and exhibitions of morality, charity and brotherly love. And many may still rejoice for a season in their delusions, despise reproof, and perish without remedy.

PRES. L. N. STRATTON, D. D.,—One other fact worth naming is, that the oaths and secret workings of Freemasonry are out and well-known to the world. They are published in the reports of several State legislatures, and in Wendell's Supreme Court Reports of the State of New York, Vol. XIII, pp. 9-26. Their oaths are no less murderous than those taken by the Mollie Maguires, or for obedience to which latter twenty-one have been tried and hung in the State of Pennsylvania.

LEONARD WOOD, D. D., Professor in Andover, 1829.—Now I have never seen or heard of any evidence, of any kind or degree, in support of the pretended antiquity of Freemasonry; and I suppose the same is true of all others. What then can we do, consistently with reason and common sense, but to withhold our belief. As to probable evidence; it would be very proper to inquire, whether it can be reconciled to the acknowledged character of Solomon, and of the twelve apostles to suppose, that they belonged to a society, established on the principles and practicing the rites of Freemasonry. If these principles and rites are what the community at large understand them to be, and what Freemasons themselves understand them to be, an answer to this inquiry would be no very difficult thing.

PRES. E. F. REID, Ohio Central College.—We believe secret societies to be anti-republican as well as anti-Christian.

REV. A. L. CHAPIN, D. D., Beloit.—It has been the uniform policy of Beloit College to exclude secret societies.

PRES. THOMAS HOLMES, Union Christian College.—I am the uncompromising foe of secret societies in any form whatever.

REV. JAMES W. STRONG, D. D., Pres. Northfield College.—We do not favor secret societies; hope there will never be one in this institution.

REV. P. M. BARTLETT, D. D., Maryville College.—I believe that secret societies, generally speaking, are fraught with mischief and should be discouraged, especially in our institutions of learning.

PRES. JOSEPH MOORE, Earlham College.—The fact that Freemasonry often thwarts every effort to enforce the law against an offender who is of the fraternity, shows it to be an obstacle to moral and civil progress.

REV. ALEX. BURNS, Pres. Simpson Centenary College.—Although a Mason myself, I have not a very exalted notion of the importance or influence of Masonry. In fact I don't see much necessity of secret societies of any kind.

REV. S. B. ALLEN, D. D., Westfield College.—Deeming them (especially those best known) injurious to all the best interests of mankind and destitute of all moral right to an existence, we cannot but pray and labor for their overthrow.

PRES. A. M. WESTON, Eureka College.—No human institution has the right to exact oaths. Even the church has, formally, none, and civil governments, if they require them, can only do so because they themselves are ordained of God. Freemasonry has no such right, having no divine origin.

PROF. BASCOM, Williams College.—Bind not the corrupt to your very bosom with bonds of secrecy, and hope to escape their influence. That breath of pollution, the breath constantly on you, which you draw into the seats of life as if it were air, is malaria, ready to creep stealthily through soul and body.

PROFESSORS EDWARDS A. PARK, ABNER PHELPS, E. P. BARROWS and EGBERT SYNTHÉ, Andover Theological Seminary, to the American Tract Society, Boston, 1865.—Asking for "a judicious and carefully prepared tract, tending to dissuade the members of the churches of Christ from joining secret societies."

REV. E. H. FAIRCHILD, D. D., Berea.—Secret societies are of two kinds, those which aim to secure special and unequal advantages for their members, in social, civil, political and business relations; and those which seek to promote some moral, social, or political reform. The first among which Freemasonry is the most prominent, we regard as selfish in their nature and essential aim, and hence antagonistic to the Christian religion.

HORACE MANN, The American apostle of Education.—Why do all languages ascribe an open countenance to a brave and high-souled man, but a close, shy, disguised, secretive one to villains? To what class do the secretive animals belong—should brutes imitate men as in Esop's time, would not those form the secret societies?... Where do gamblers live? Where do counterfeiters ply their trade? Where does licentiousness breed its pollutions? Do these seek daylight, the open street, the market place, the common resorts of virtuous men? No, they all belong as by the tie of natural affinity, to the order of secret societies.

REV. RANDALL ROSS, Pres. Lincoln College, Mo., 1873.—Take the report of the Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows for the year from which it appears their revenue amounts to $4,291,071.12. Of this sum only $1,503,471.40 has been spent in "relief and charity." Only about one third of their revenue is thus expended annually. This leaves an immense sum of money unexpended by the order every year, which must in a few years become a dangerous power in the hands of the order. And this is but an illustration of all the secret orders of the land; and hence we look upon the power of such an immense amount of money in the hands of a power whose workings are in the dark, in secret, as far more dangerous to the financial affairs of the country than all our much talked about railroad monopolies.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.
The following local churches have, as a pledge to dis fellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 24, 1887.

The man who steals my horse by night is a sneak. But the man who steals the Bible from the multitude by professing reverence for it, yet declaring its history to be "myth," who deprives them of a Saviour while professing to be a Christian, by declaring his voluntary death and atonement for us a piece of cruelty on the part of God; and all this for a little brief popularity with the crowd,—he would be a detestable villain, only a villain is supposed to have, and frequently has some courage and sense of honor. Christ, the meek and gentle Son of God, denounced such as "hypocrites," and John called them "snakes and the seed of snakes."

A QUESTION FOR MASSACHUSETTS CONGREGATIONALISTS.

The acme of impudence has been exhibited in Worcester, Massachusetts, March 9th. One "Thrice Potent" and fifteen "Illustrious" Masons got together in a hall laden with regalia bought by money swindled from the race of fools not yet dead in Massachusetts, banqueted, toasted and Grand-honored each other, and then proceeded to install a "Thrice Potent Grand Master of Worcester Lodge of perfection" and other officers in what they call the "Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite."

The "Thrice Potent" Grand Master installed was Geo. F. Hewett, a liquor and beer seller and opposer of temperance in the city of Worcester; full of orthodox churches led by salaried ministers, bound by every sentiment of honor, and every principle of the Gospel to warn their flocks of the approach of wolves. Yet they see from their pulpits their young men being whirled in this maelstrom of pagan worship and give them no word of warning. A (Rev.) Oliver A. Roberts, Grand Primate of Massachusetts, officiated as the Nadab or Abihu to furnish the strange fire of false worship.

Do not the Worcester clergy know that God will visit plagues on them and their people for these things? that the Scottish Rite not only practices false prayers but false baptisms? that Deputy District Grand Master St. John, a bitter and taunting Universalist late of Worcester, spent one entire winter installing lodges and Masons in Massachusetts, and among them many orthodox Congregational pastors, who exclude Universalists outside the lodge, but bow on their knees to them, and "brother" them inside. Will Dr. George F. Pentecost inform us whether these inconsistencies, blasphemies, and wolf-fellowships have anything to do with running down Congregational churches in Massachusetts? Will he not issue a sequel to his powerful faithful pamphlet on evangelization?

MR. BEECHER, THE PULPIT AND PRESS.

"Some, therefore, cried one thing and some another * * * and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together. All with one voice, about the space of two hours, cried out: Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" Acts 19: 32 and 34.

Yet, though men were ignorant, devils knew the cause of this Ephesian hubbub. The question was touching the worship of the one living and true God, accessible to men by one Mediator, Christ, and the motley and pie-bald worship of the god of this world, "invented by men, administered by priests, and inhabited by devils." Paul attacked these side-worships in Mars Hill and at Rome wherever he met them. A little before the Ephesian uproar, in the same chapter, we see seven men whipped by one "evil spirit;" but the case went against the devils, and their worshippers renounced their "curious arts" and burnt their books costing "fifty thousand pieces of silver; so mightily grew the word of God." If Paul had been adroit to reconcile opposites by putting Christ's worship on a level with Jupiter's, who, they said, sent them the image of Diana, the entire crowd would have shouted for Paul.

This is precisely what Mr. Beecher achieved. His loudest paragrysts are H. W. Thomas and David Swing. Dr. Thomas says, "He believed in the method of creation, that the higher forms were evolved from the lower;" that is, men from monkeys, etc. "Mr. Beecher did not believe in the old doctrine of the fall of man; that the first pair were created perfect; that they fell," etc. * * * and hence he rejected the whole system of salvation, based on that * * * dogma." He believed in the continuity of the life of the good in the world to come;" but "I do not agree with brother Beecher in denying endless punishment." (See Thomas's sermon, Inter-Ocean, March 14.)

Now Dr. Thomas is in some respects an exceedingly ignorant man; but he is a competent reporter of his friend's sentiments and gives them correctly. David Swing, another loud encomiast, in the same paper, same page, might be quoted in extenso to the same effect.

Now without here discussing the truth or error of these gentlemen's opinions, it may simply be remarked in passing of those who read these Inter-Ocean sermons on Mr. Beecher, and cannot see that they deny the whole Bible account of man's redemption by Christ, in the words of Robert J. Breckenridge, "Have simply no moral sense." According to these heretics there were no such persons as Adam and Eve, Cain and Abel. They were "myths"—Eden, a myth—"thorns and thistles" "myths." This same Dr. Thomas, before his just ejection by the Episcopal Methodist church, preached in his pulpit in Aurora, Ill., that Moses got the pattern of the Ark of the Covenant among the Masonic relics of Egyptian priests,—thus flatly contradicting the Word of God, which he yet says his "brother" Beecher held was "inspired."

Mr. David Swing is worse than Thomas. He says, "Mr. Beecher's greatest years were twenty, lying between 1845 and 1865." Now Mr. Beecher's first "great year," 1845, was just two years before he went to Brooklyn. He had not yet made an Abolition speech, but had steadily shunned Abolitionists; though the writer had three years before, 1842, preached by appointment before his synod of Cincinnati, a sermon, which was printed, containing these words:

"The worst conceivable robbery is forcibly taking from a man his wife or his child. But the injury is a thousand times greater when you place or hold a man in a condition in which he cannot marry. * * * You put him in the condition of a brute." And slavery was constantly under discussion in our presbytery and synod, and in the synod of Indiana, to which he removed. Rev. Samuel K. Sneed of New Albany had come from Kentucky and freed his slaves. In synod he naturally moved a resolution against slavery. Mr. Beecher opposed its adoption. He had an elder, Judge Wickes (or Weeks), who owned slaves.

Mr. Swing says of Mr. Beecher, "He found drinking of whiskies and brandies a habit even of the clergy. The moment he saw this serpent's head he struck at it." And he goes on quoting from Mr. Beecher's father's speeches, but gives none from the son. Now the owner of the Lawrenceburg distillery paid Bro. Henry $100 a year for preaching. There were no ministers, to my knowledge, in our presbyteries at that time who drank liquor. We moved and carried a resolution against our members taking corn to that distillery on the White-water canal, and on the Sabbath. Bro. Henry opposed it; and came out next Sabbath in a thundering sermon on temperance. Monday morning a friend said to the distiller, "Your minister gave you Jesse yesterday, didn't he?" The distiller replied: "I don't care a d—d what he says, so long as he goes for letting us have the corn." Dr. Beecher made powerful appeals for Lane Seminary on account of the spread of popery in the West. Brother Henry congratulated the first cardinal the Pope ever made in America on his beautiful scarlet cap.

Now while all that Swing and Thomas say is true about Mr. Beecher's denying the doctrines which Christ and his apostles preached, it is also true that he at times preached three very doctrines. And when censured by the religious press for some plain denial of God's word he used to publish the Plymouth church articles, which were orthodox, and said he believed them. And in his latest "formulated" doctrines written to a friend he says: "I am in hearty accord with revivals and revival preaching."

Dr. F. A. Noble, in his reported discourse, says of Mr. Beecher that, "his ideas did not agree with the light flashed from the Bible from the beginning of Genesis to the end," nor, "with a fair interpretation of the words of Him who gave the sermon on the Mount." Dr. Noble is plainly and painfully correct; and that explains why Messrs. Swing, Thomas, and every Universalist and Unitarian minister is loud in Mr. Beecher's praises as "The Great Divine." Mr. Beecher was not a heretic, for heresy infers malice against the truth. Dr. Thomas is a heretic. He shows his "malice against the truth," by comparing some of the best, ablest and most honest ministers, who hesitated to add their voices to the loud acclaim of saints and sinners, infidels and Christians, to Mr. Beecher, of whom a business man in Chicago said truly as forcibly, "His text for his last year has virtually been the words of Satan,

"Ye shall not surely die,"—Dr. Thomas compares those Congregational ministers who hesitated to add their loud amen to his praises, to "those orthodox priests who platted the crown of thorns, and put it on the head of Christ"! This is the malice of heresy against the truth.

Mr. Beecher is gone. Let us rejoice that he was not a dizzy Swing nor a doubting Thomas, without that apostle's escape from unbelief. One must think, if Mr. Beecher could speak from his present abode, he would say, "save my memory from my friends."

"O popular applause! what heart of man
Is proof against thy sweet seducing charms!
The wisest and the best feel urgent need
Of all thy caution in thy gentler gales;
But swelled into a gust—who then, alas
With all his canvas set, and inexperienced,
And therefore heedless, can withstand thy power!"

—Our readers may expect next week a John Brown number of the Cynosure which they will value.

—Hon. Frederick Douglas, who is spending a time with his wife in Paris, during a visit to the French House of Deputies, was struck by the fact that no member chewed tobacco or smoked.

—Dr. Benjamin Rush, the great pioneer of the temperance host of America, and father of the statesman and Anti-mason, Richard Rush, is to have a monument in the city of Washington, erected by the medical fraternity at a cost of $40,000.

—Elder S. C. Kimball, editor of the Christian Witness, and New Hampshire lecturer, started on the 12th inst. on a fourth canvassing trip. He was invited to aid in conducting a protracted meeting in South Effingham, where it is hoped many souls will be brought to Christ.

—Miss E. E. Flagg, whose gifted pen has for a time been laid aside to minister at the bed of sickness and death, again resumes her notes on the Sabbath-school lesson. We understand also that she is to be present at the Congress of March 30. No delegate will have a warmer welcome. We trust the committee of arrangements will find a place for a paper from her.

—The Masonic Chronicle of Columbus, Ohio, is pleased to notice that the "hiring" Anti-masons of the National Association are not managing the Christian Congress, but rather sincere but misguided men, whose creed renders them illiberal, but of whom there is some hope that they may be better informed respecting the lodge. Will the Chronicle send a representative to help these brethren into Masonic light?

—Miss S. A. Farley from New Iberia, Louisiana, has been in Chicago a few days on an agency from the educational society of that place which has been incorporated for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a school for colored children. Letters from Bro. Hinman and others during the past six months have informed the readers of the Cynosure of this enterprise, which seems to be a very worthy one, and in every way deserving of the success which we hope may attend it.

—We are in receipt of an earnest communication from Moline, Kansas, signed by S. E. Booth, president; J. Colvin, vice president, and Lyman Kirkpatrick, secretary, urging us to attend and share in a convention which they desire to hold in Springfield, Illinois, June 7th, to form a party, to comprise all friends of political reform in an organization under the title, American General Reform Party. It is, of course, impossible for us to share in the proposed convention, being preoccupied with our work. But we give their notice that any of our readers who desire to do so may communicate with the above-named citizens.

—Rev. C. E. Walker of the United Brethren church, Grey Eagle, Minn., lately opened the discussion of the secret lodge system. A committee from the United Brethren and the Methodist Episcopal churches were appointed to arrange for a meeting, but the lodge circulated false reports to prevent attendance and some angry Masons threatened to drag the speaker from the pulpit. The meeting, however, was a success; two delegates were appointed to the Christian Congress, Rev. James Callahan and Brother Walker. The meeting roused the people of the place into a lively discussion of the lodge, and will do much to prevent its further encroachment upon the homes of Grey Eagle.

—For his laudation of Beecher's antagonism to evangelical religion, and assault upon the Congregational pastors of this city, Dr. Thomas, of the so-called People's Church, is rewarded by the Chicago press with this note: "Chicago would hate to lose him, but Dr. Thomas would be a great man even in the pulpit made vacant by Beecher's death." The Grand Chaplain of Illinois Freemasons would have to take many lessons from the toad that tried to be an ox, if he ever attempted to vault into the Plymouth church pulpit. It is at least sincerely to be hoped that he will not again sneak onto the Farwell Hall platform as a representative Gospel worker.

—The Murphy meetings in Farwell Hall, in connection with Mr. Moody's work of evangelizing Chicago, are continued six days in the week and twice each day, without any abatement in the interest of the public or the zeal of Mr. Murphy. His physical endurance has, however, been taxed severely and last week he was assisted by several pastors of the city. As we go to press it is announced that President C. A. Blanchard speaks for him Tuesday afternoon. The ladies of the W. C. T. U. are engaging heartily in the work of saving the drinking men although they have taken occasion to say kindly but justly, that they by no means endorse Mr. Murphy's ideas of high license and prohibition, which it must be said with regret fall below what we believe to be the Bible standard.

AN IMPORTANT APPEAL FOR THE CONGRESS.

The hope of the committee of arrangements for the Congress of Churches and Christians has been that certain able and wealthy citizens of Chicago would furnish, principally, the money to pay the expenses of the Congress which meets at Hershey Music Hall, Inter-Ocean building, 85 Madison street, March 30th and 31st. In this hope the committee has been disappointed. Now, therefore, we earnestly and lovingly beseech the Christian pastors who are in favor of "the discussion of the secret lodge system, and its influence on the Christian religion and civil liberty," to take up collections in their respective congregations, to pay the expenses of the meeting.

The car fare of the ten, or possibly more, eminent divines who are to give addresses, should be paid from the distant States from which most of them come. This will require not less than $325. The advertising and printing matter essential to the arrangement of the Congress, with postage, will amount to not less than $125. Hall rent will amount to $100, a portion of which the committee has been required to pay in advance.

Shall not the denominations and the Christian people whose principles are represented in this meeting, pay the expenses of the same? Neither the committee, upon which the onerous duties, so various and extended, should pay these expenses, nor the brethren who sacrifice time, toil and treasure in coming. Men of Israel, help!

Delegations are coming from several of the New England States, and all the States this side. They write us that they will be here from Wisconsin, Minnesota, Dakota, Colorado, Kansas, Texas, Louisiana, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, District of Columbia, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, Nebraska, and far off Oregon. The committee is of the profound opinion that such a gathering of people on this important question has never been possible during any former stage of the American history as the one about to assemble.

Let Wesleyan Methodists, Free Methodists, Reformed Presbyterians, United Presbyterians, Free Baptists, Friend Quakers, United Brethren, German and Swedish Lutherans and all others take collections at once to defray the current expenses of this great meeting, else it will fall with crushing weight upon the committee. The time is short. Do duty promptly. The King's business requires haste. If a collection can not be gathered before the Congress assembles, please do not withhold because of that fact, but forward then as now, by money order or by draft, to Calvin W. Pritchard, chairman, 56 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill. He is editor of the Christian Worker (Friend Quaker) and will be at his post after the Congress has adjourned.

For the committee, L. N. STRATTON, Sec'y.

THE CYNOSURE FOR SOUTHERN MINISTERS.

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 7, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Up to within a recent period nearly every minister in this city was a Mason, and even now, the leading churches, both white and colored, have Masonic pastors. Within a year past there has begun to be a reaction. Several colored Baptists, and one Methodist minister have taken a stand against the orders, and the discussion is sure to go on. Three pastors have welcomed me to their pulpits, and desired the presentation of this reform to their people. To-day I attended the regular meeting of the colored Baptist Ministerial Union. Sixteen ministers, nearly all pastors, were present. The presiding officer was the Deputy Grand Master of the A. F. & A. M. for the State. A motion was made that I address them on the subject of the secret orders and on its adoption I was invited to speak forty minutes. I was listened to with marked attention, and am sure a good impression was made.

This change of feeling is due to the introduction and circulation of the Christian Cynosure. Eld. Jackson, who has been most active in this reform says that while he has only a vague idea of the evils of these societies, he has been greatly helped and strengthened by the Cynosure. But few colored ministers of the South are able to subscribe for more than one paper. They generally have a denominational organ; and if they ever see the Cynosure it because it has been sent to them at the suggestion of some Northern friend, and is almost always highly valued both for its general character as a religious newspaper, but especially for the information that they get on the secrecy question, and which they could get no where else. In many cases ministers tell me that it greatly helps them in preparing their sermons, and only in a very few instances it is unappreciated.

I believe there is no wiser, better or more economical way of promoting our reform in the South, than by sending the Cynosure to colored ministers.

It preaches more and better sermons than I can, and goes to multitudes of places when I cannot go. I certainly hope that the fund for this purpose will be enlarged, and that ere long we may be able to sow these Southern churches with our reform literature.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

It is now the belief of many leading men of the Democratic party, some of whom are occasionally called to the White House for counsel and advice, that the President will ask the Fiftieth Congress to convene in extra session early in October. If he does, there are several reasons that will prompt the unpopular step.

It is a well known fact that Congress scarcely ever does anything like real work until after the holiday recess. It goes without saying also that the two great parties in Congress will be surcharged with politics next year and that their time will be largely devoted to President-making. So, unless some of the important legislation to come before it can be matured at an earlier day than the course of the regular session would make possible, there would be but little hope for its success.

The experience of the past two winters in Congress has shown very clearly that the interests of the country have become altogether too vast and complicated to be thoroughly looked after, and kept up within the time afforded by the regular sessions. Much of the first, or the long session as it is usually called, is devoted to the formulation of business for the second or short session, and the business thus deferred from one year to another—in many cases business of the most urgent importance—is hurled into the whirl of the last ten days or two weeks of Congress, to be but half done or badly done or not done at all.

Some idea of the manner in which the Forty-ninth Congress wound up its work may be found in the declaration of a member of long experience, that the record revealed the fact that one-quarter of the legislation of the session had been enacted in the last six legislative days. An enrolling clerk of twelve years of service said that never in that length of time had he witnessed the haste exhibited in the last twenty-four hours of the Congress which has just expired.

The prominent business men of this city who are anxious to have a carnival here after the National drill, which is to take place in May, have been discussing details in regard to the scheme. At the recent Mardi Gras in New Orleans, the Knights of Momus and the Knights of Proteus were the organizations which made the finest display, and both are proposing to dispose of their outfits, which originally cost $20,000, cars and costumes, at $5,000 and $6,000. Washington is disposed to hire instead of buy these trappings, as expense could be saved in that way, and it is held that a sum of $25,000, which will have to be raised by private subscription, would be necessary to insure a creditable display. It was urged that if the carnival was not held this year it would not be possible to have it for four years. The Presidential campaign, and the inauguration would give all the displays needed for two years, and the Knights Templars conclave would fill up the third season.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

BOSTON SUNDAY ENTERTAINMENTS.

Austin's Popular Sacred Concerts in Boston Music Hall, every Sunday evening, attract large crowds. The sacredness of the affair, however, ends with the name, although the character of the programme would be unobjectionable, perhaps, on a week night. The sacred concert at the Windsor theater seems to be of an inferior tone, according to the assertions of even its patrons. The Orchestral Social Sing at the Harvard Street Baptist church at 4 o'clock p. m., draws such a concourse of people that the seating capacity of that edifice is often inadequate. In fact, at every church, theater, or hall in the city, where vocal or instrumental music is offered to the public, large audiences are always found.

Many Christians consider special musical attractions the only way to reach, or bring in the unregenerate masses. It certainly does bring them into the precincts of the sanctuary, but whether it leaves them within the fold is an open question.

Whether it is for entertainment, instruction, or worship that the people seek these places so eagerly, it may be difficult to discriminate. Nevertheless, it is a fact that those places are more largely attended where the best, or rather the most music is furnished. Many advocate the introduction of musical entertainment into the regular church service, others, of more orthodox mind, restrict it to a special occasion. Years of observation have demonstrated to the writer that fewer converts are made by this means than by any other ever adopted. He has never yet seen one converted under such influences. It certainly is not an apostolic method. With the entertainment the interest of the audience ends, ninety-nine times out of a hundred.

There is danger of the church becoming simply a resort of entertainment, whether the fact is recognized or not. We want, we need the unvarnished, ungarlished Gospel. God gives no chromos, nor gilds any of his truths. The only harmony needful to attract the masses is that of Christian fellowship among the brethren, and the music of concerted prayer. The best instruments on which to play the tune of salvation are ourselves, which as instruments of God, if kept in tune, will attract more souls into the church than any brazen or stringed instrument man can possibly devise.

"Awake, and sing the song
Of Moses and the Lamb;
Wake, every heart and every tongue,
To praise the Saviour's name.

"Sing of his dying love;
Sing of his rising power;
Sing how he intercedes above,
For those whose sins he bore."

The confession of the church that musicals, etc., are now indispensable as a means of saving souls is an incontrovertible, as well as lamentable evidence of its spiritual weakness. What can take the place of a praying, working, self-sacrificing, consistent church, with the power of the Holy Ghost, in bringing souls into the kingdom? Alas! Shall He find faith when He comes?

EVANGELISTIC WORK, LECTURES, ETC.

The evangelist, Dr. L. W. Munhall, is conducting revival meetings, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Townar, at the Clarendon Street Baptist church. The daily papers are giving much attention to the discourses of the former, who will give Bible readings every afternoon.—The noon-day meetings at the Tremont Row branch of the Young Men's Christian Association continue to be held, and are well attended, mostly, however, by men out of employment, who at close of the service have an opportunity to register their names at the Association Employment Bureau, the office of which is at one end of the room.—Rev. Sam Small has been holding meetings in Chelsea.—Leyden, an ex-Catholic, preaches evangelical sermons in Irving Hall every Sunday morning.—C. W. Sawyer of New York, the temperance lecturer, is conducting a series of temperance meetings and concerts every Sunday night at Horticultural Hall.—James Russell Lowell is delivering a course of six lectures before the Lowell Institute. Tickets, which were gratuitously given, were sold by some of their fortunate possessors for two and three dollars apiece. Mr. Lowell's second lecture was an analysis of Christopher Marlowe, poet and dramatist.—The petition to place female attendants in our station houses, is warmly indorsed by almost everybody.—Gov. Ames recently honored Rev. Mr. Bartol, pastor of the West church, and one of the oldest Unitarian divines in this city, with a dinner, at which several ministers of evangelical denominations were guests.

THE HOME.

THEY NEITHER TOIL NOR SPIN.

"Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."—Matt. 6: 29, 30.

They neither toil nor spin; they wear
Their loveliness without a care;

As pure as when the Master's feet
Were set amid their perfume sweet.

The summer hills rejoice to see
Their carven censers swinging free.

They wait within the gates of dawn
Till all the watching stars are gone;

Then open cups of honey dew,
To greet the morn's returning hue.

O fair, white virgins, clothed in white;
O lilies, fresh from looms of light,

I dearly love you, for the word
That stars you, noted of the Lord.

I love you when, in gold and red,
The sunset colors o'er you spread;

Or when, like fairy sails of snow,
The river currents to and fro.

You are the Master's flowers to me;
His smile upon your grace I see.

My transient discontents I hush
If but my garment's hem ye brush.

And everywhere your fragrance brings
This message from the King of kings:

"We neither toil nor spin. And ye,
Who spin so long and wearily,

"Who toil amid earth's grime and dust,
Behold—a hallowed arc of trust.

"Oh, pause and hear the Father say,
His angels are your guides to-day!

"While worlds in matchless order move,
Ye shall not slip from sovereign love;

"For he who bids the planets sweep,
Cares for the tiniest babe asleep."

MADAME GUYON'S THEOLOGY.

BY REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER.

The theology of Madame Guyon, of her head and her heart, without being formulated in precise theological dogmas, was in the main, clear, simple, biblical, spiritual. It was stripped of scholastic forms and not hampered by technical or conventional phraseology. As revealed in the conferences with Bossuet, her letters to Fenelon and others, and in some other published works, it was no new departure from sound Christian traditions. It was in no proper sense a new theology, neither was it any form of self-conscious progressive orthodoxy or advanced thinking; vainly puffed up by the fleshly minds, and not holding the head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God.

Nor did her theology undertake, with an affectation of originality and acumen like the liberalism of our day, to distinguish between the historical, the theological, and the metaphysical Christ. Nor did it attempt to reconcile divided Christendom with aggressive Christianity by an imposed uniform ritual and pomp of worship. Her Christ was the whole Christ of Christianity, the personal Christ of the Gospels, the "wonderful" Christ of the Divine Incarnation, the sympathizing Christ of the vicarious, sacrificial Atonement; the adorable Christ of the Holy Trinity: "God manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, believed on in the world, received up into glory;" his Parousia at Pentecost, his glorious Epiphany at the coming judgment and resurrection.

Hers was the Pauline theology, a personal experience of the eighth of Romans: "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law may be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit."

Her eschatology was that of the second Thessalonians, and she made no unauthorized venture beyond into an imagined realm of second probation: "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, when he shall come and be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe."

The concord of Christendom from her standpoint was to be accomplished, not by the attempted gathering of "all who profess and call themselves Christians," under a misleading misnomer of unity and representation, but by a revival of true primitive Christianity, by a new spiritual baptism of the Holy Ghost, and by a common enthusiastic union of all the Christian sects in the great interest of peace among the nations, philanthropic, moral reforms, and the great Christo-centric Missionary Enterprise.

These are some of the inferences as to ethics and theology to be naturally derived from what we have learned concerning the views and experience of Madame Guyon and her corresponding life of faith. It is through her in France, taught by the Spirit, that we in America, two centuries later on in the course of time, have what the poet Wordsworth calls "authentic tidings of invisible things." For in her was fulfilled that fine saying of Augustine: "Faith is to believe what we do not yet see, and the reward of this faith is to see what we believe."

The things unknown to feeble sense,
Unseen by reason's glimmering ray,
With strong commanding evidence,
Their heavenly origin display.

Faith lends its realizing light:
The clouds disperse; the shadows fly:
The invisible appears in sight,
And God is seen by mortal eye.

A WONDERFUL WELL.

The Samaritan woman found the Saviour by Jacob's well, but the Presbyterian Record gives the following account of a whole tribe of heathen who were turned from idolatry by the digging of a well. The water supply of Aniva was the means of converting the people of Christianity, and this was brought about in a curious manner. The want of water was a terrible scourge when Mr. Paton arrived, and it at last occurred to him to sink a well in his own back garden, hoping at the level of the sea to get water. The people, never having seen a well in their lives, came to the conclusion that he must be quite mad, and imagining the world upside down, indeed, to think of digging for water into the dry earth. Every day they gathered round and watched him dig, though they were much too scared to help. At last the old chief spoke.

"You must be mad, Missi," he said; "rain comes from the clouds here; it does not rise from the earth."

Day after day went by, but at last, at thirty feet deep, there were signs of a spring. Then the missionary told the savages that next day they should see water. On the morrow, in fear and wonder, they came, and at thirty-two feet deep, lo! there was a spring of fresh water, which has ever since supplied the entire island.

It was this which finally conquered the people. The chief gathered his people about him, and said: "We thought the Missi mad when he said he would go down to the earth and find rain; but he has wrought and prayed till Jehovah has given it him. Now, as there was water in the earth beneath, so do I believe there is a God in the skies above. And as the Missi has removed the earth and we have seen the water, so do I feel that death will remove the mist which is before our eyes and we shall see God. Bring out the idols, and let us destroy them."

ANOTHER JOSEPH IN PRISON.

In the New York Observer of April 25, 1884, there was an article in regard to a young man in Tokio, Japan, who was imprisoned for the utterance of political views which were not approved by the government, and who during his confinement was engaged in active Christian work among the convicts. After his release he sent a letter to the Home Department giving an account of the wretchedness and sufferings that prevailed in the prison, and his earnest convictions that there was great need of reform.

He further stated that the best of all remedies for the wickedness of men was the grace of God in their hearts. It had been shown that the religion of Jesus Christ was sufficient to make the most hardened criminals good men; and it would be for the advantage of the country to have these doctrines taught. Without some such influence as Christianity exerts, it was of little use to attempt to make men better by the most severe punishment.

Experience had shown that many only become the more hardened and desperate by being thus thrown together and treated like dogs. He believed that the prison government should be in accordance with Christian principles; and if possible, Christian men only should be placed in charge. After some time had elapsed he was invited to the office of the Home Department, and consulted in regard to the views expressed in the letter. Then he was asked to give up his business and take a position under the government where he could carry out in person the views he had so ably advocated.

He called at the Bible House and said: "I am now on my way to Hiogo to superintend the establishment of a new prison. I am to have the charge of the same with express permission to teach Christianity, and it is hoped that all might be converted. I once thought that my imprisonment was a punishment from the Lord, and it filled me with great shame and sorrow. Now I see the goodness of God in it all, and I bless him that I have so large a field and so good an opportunity for Christian effort. I am very weak of myself, but with the help of God I hope to do much good."

He requested a grant of Scriptures to use among the prisoners. This was readily made, and he now goes forth with new zeal and power to shed more of the blessed light of the Gospel into the haunts of deepest darkness and degradation. This is none other than the hand of God.

A GIRL'S VOICE.

Miss Mulock says in her King Arthur that "a pleasant voice is even better to live with than a pretty face." In this she echoes Shakespeare's sentiment where he says of Cordelia, "Her voice was ever soft, gentle, and low—an excellent thing in woman." The need of cultivating an agreeable voice is thus emphasized in a new book, called "Hold Up Your Heads, Girls," by Annie H. Ryder.

Good conversation is the mark of highest culture. This is why, in spite of shabby dresses, unbanged hair, tremendous mouths and large noses, some persons are purely delightful. We have seen that this is so, yet have not added that something lies in the voice as well as in the manners and words, of such people. From nervousness, and other causes which I have not been able to trace, girls are apt to pitch their voices too high, as though they thought to be better able to speak distinctly. A gruff, manish voice is worse than a piping, shrill tone in a woman; but fullness of tone prevents no melody, and this comes from a medium pitch. In the very modulations of the voice are detected excellence and refinement. The human voice, in its sounds and accents, is a record of character; trust it as the key board of the human being.

May I remind you here, girls, of the harm arising from loud talk in public places? How many times do we suffer annoyance from the noisy voices in the car, the stations or on the street! How bold and immodest such tones are! Some persons seem to think the public is not to be regarded, and that it has no right to criticism. They appear to believe that a train is no different than an open field, where the voice needs no restraint, and where manners are not the most refined. They treat the passengers with as little care as they do the cars; for, while they make a waste-basket of the latter, they regard the former as so many brazen images to be stared at ad libitum. Passengers have ears, though they themselves be removed from the talkers by the distance of a seat or two.

Now about the words you use, girls. I fully realize the expressiveness of slang and the convenience of exaggeration. But if a peach pie is almost "divine," and the Hudson River "awfully lovely," what can be said of the New Testament and Niagara Falls? What is to become of the poor innocent words in the English language which mean only delicious and beautiful? When a young woman, who makes much pretension to fine manners and an elegant education, takes the steam-car for a rostrum, and exclaims about her French teacher as "awfully funny, but awfully horrid, don't you know; awfully lovely sometimes; but awfully awful at others!" we wonder why she gives so much attention to French when her English vocabulary seems to have reduced itself to the scanty proportions of one word.

A TIMELY AND NEEDED WARNING.

Now look me straight in the eye, young gossamer head, while I tell you what I know. The girl who will indulge in flirtation with strange men in public places, however harmless and innocent it may appear, places herself in that man's estimation upon a level with the most abandoned of her sex, and courts the same vile regard. Strong language for a mild mannered Amber to make use of, but, I tell you, I become a furious old grandmother the moment I see a blessed young girl tip toeing her thoughtless way upon this road that leads direct to death and destruction!

The boat that dances like a feather on the tide a few miles above the commencement of the Niagara rapids is just as much lost as when it enters the swirling, swinging wrath of waters, unless a strong hand keep it up stream and out of danger. A flirtation-to-day is a ripple merely, but to-morrow it will be a breaker, and then a whirlpool, and after that comes hopeless loss of character. Girls, I have seen you gather up your roses from the vases at night and fold them away in damp paper to preserve their freshness for another day. I have seen you pluck the jewels, like sun sparkles, from your ears and lay them in velvet caskets, which you locked with a silver key for safe keeping. You do all this for flowers, which a thousand suns shall duplicate in fairness and perfume; and for jewels for which a handful of golden dollars can reimburse your loss; but you are infinitely careless with the rose of sweet maidenliness, which once faded no summer shining can ever again woo back to freshness, and with the unsullied pearl of reputation which all the wealth of kings can never buy back again, once lost.

O, see to it that you preserve the bloom of that modesty and simplicity of girlhood, without which a maiden is like an artificial bit of scentless lawn in a milliner's window, rather than the "white rose of all the world," round which honey bees gather, and to which the knights errant of breezeland flock like gallant chevaliers of old to the crusade of the most pure and holy cross. See to it that you lock up the unsullied splendor of your jewel of reputation as carefully as you do your diamonds, and carry the key within your heart of hearts!—"Amber" in Chicago Journal.

NEATNESS IN GIRLS.

Neatness is a good thing for a girl, and if she does not learn it when she is young, she never will. It takes a great deal more neatness to make a girl look well than it does to make a boy look passable. Not because a boy to start with, is better looking than a girl, but his clothes are of a different sort, not so many colors in them; and people don't expect a boy to look so pretty as a girl. A girl that is not neatly dressed is called a sloven, and no one likes to look at her. Her face may be pretty, and her eyes bright, but if there is a spot of dirt on her cheek, and her fingers' ends are black with ink, and her shoes are not laced or buttoned up, and her apron is dirty, and her collar is not buttoned, and her skirt is torn, she cannot be liked. I went into a little girl's room once, and all her clothes were on the floor, and her playthings, too. Learn to be neat, and when you have learned it, it will almost take care of itself.

HEAVEN A REAL PLACE.

During a severe thunder storm, a little girl attracted the attention of several gentlemen by her freedom from fear when all around her were in terror. One of them said to her, "What makes you so calm? you are not a bit frightened." "Why should I be frightened?" was the answer. "It is nothing to hurt people. It is only the Lord Jesus moving the sofas and chairs about, as he is getting heaven ready for us all. You know he said: 'I go to prepare a place for you,' and how can he get it ready without making a little noise over our heads?" Heaven was a real place to this little child. It may be as real to you as it was to her. The fiercest thunder storm need have no terror for you, for Jesus rules and controls all.

SEVEN ARROWS FROM THE "WORD OF GOD."

1. "Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me." (Psalm 1: 15.)
2. "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation." 2 Peter 2: 9.)
3. "I will call upon the Lord, who is worthy to be praised: so shall I be saved from mine enemies." (Psalm 18: 3.)
4. "Above all, taking the shield of faith, whereby ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked." (Eph. 6: 16.)
5. "They overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony." (Rev. 12: 11.)
6. "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation." (Rev. 3: 10.)
7. "He shall deliver thee in six troubles; yea, in seven there shall no evil touch thee." (Job. 5: 19.)

TEMPERANCE.

KANSAS TO MICHIGAN; GREETING.

BY S. CALVIN HART.

O Michigan! Queen of the lakes,
Gird on thine armor well;
Long have thy leaders been in league,
Through the liquor power, with hell.

Thousands have met a dismal fate,
Who otherwise might have been
The pride of home and native State,
But for this giant sin.

In this thine hour of anxiousness
We sympathize with thee;
For we have trod the same rough way
In search of Liberty.

A sad, sad thought, dear friends, is this,
That in thy trying hour,
Many of Christ's professing ones
Will add the liquor power.

But Heaven's spotless livery
Will not condone their crime;
"Rarticeps eriminis" will surely be,
Inscribed till the end of time.

"Who is on the Lord's side?" Show it!
Work for the glad transition;
Who has manhood? Let us know it—
Vote for Prohibition!

Lecompton, Kans.

TWO PICTURES.

One beautiful afternoon in August, there came to me the heart-broken wife of a State-prison convict. We tried to plan for his pardon and restoration to home and the world. It was a very sad case. He was the only surviving son of a very noble man; one who lived only to serve the poor, the tempted, and the criminal. All he had, all he was, he gave unreservedly to help thieves and drunkards. His house was their home, his name their bail to save them from prison; his reward, their reformation.

Bred under such a roof, the son started in life with a generous heart, noble dreams and high purpose. Ten years of prosperity, fairly earned by energy, industry, and character, ended in bankruptcy, as is so often the case in our risky and changing trade; then came a struggle for business, for bread—temptation, despair, intemperance. He could not safely pass the open doors that tempted him to indulgence, forgetfulness and crime. How hard his wife wrought and struggled to save him from indulgence, and then to shield him from exposure! How long wife, sister, and friends labored to avert conviction and the State prison! "I would spare him gladly," wrote the prosecuting attorney, "if he would stop drinking. He shall never go to prison if he will be a sober man. But all this wretchedness and crime comes from rum."

Manfully did the young man struggle to resist the appetite. Again and again did he promise, and keep his promise a month, then fall. He could not walk the streets and earn his bread soberly while so many open doors—opened by men who sought to coin gold out of their neighbors' vices—lured him to indulgence. So, rightfully, the State pressed on, and he went to prison. An honored name disgraced, a loving home broken up, a wide circle of kindred sorely pained, a worthy, well-meaning man wrecked. Sorrow and crime—"all comes of rum," says the keen-sighted lawyer.

As I parted from the sad wife on my doorstep, I looked beyond, and close by the laughing sea stood a handsome cottage. The grounds were laid out expensively and with great taste. Over the broad piazza hung lazily an Eastern hammock, while all around were richly-painted chairs and lounges of every easy and tempting form. Overhead were quaint vases of beautiful flowers, and the delicious lawn was bordered with them. On the lawn itself gayly-dressed women laughed merrily over croquet, and noisy children played near. A span of superb horses pawed the earth impatiently at the gate, while gay salutations passed between the croquet players and the fashionable equipages that rolled by. It was a comfortable home as well as a luxurious one. Nature, taste, and wealth had done their best. It was a scene of beauty, comfort, taste, luxury, and wealth. All came from rum. The owner was one who, in a great city, coined his gold out of the vices of his fellow-men.

To me it was a dissolving view. I lost sight of the gay women, the frolicsome children, the impatient horses, and the ocean rolling up to the lawn. I saw instead, the pale convict in his cell, twelve feet by nine; the sad wife going from judge to attorney, from court to governor's council, begging mercy for her over-tempted husband. I heard above the children's noise, the croquet, the laugh, and the surf waves, that lawyer's stern reason for exacting the full penalty of the law: "All this comes from rum."

—Wendell Phillips.

PROHIBITION, TEMPERANCE AND SECRETISM.

It has dawned upon the earth in these days of the nineteenth century, that the "ax must be laid at the root" of this upas tree of intemperance. So temperance walks forth to-day clad in the right royal robes of the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicants. This, and this alone, will cause the tree to wither and die.

Many have been the strategic points of opposition by the enemy, but none so formidable as secretism. Wesley said of slavery that it was the "sum of all villainies;" so we may say of secretism, that is the sum of all allied opposition to righteousness of every feature. Especially so as it is arrayed against temperance. Men were dismayed when it came forth and put its hand to the temperance work; and it was said that the success of the temperance cause was delayed for fifty years by the movement. It is a subtle enemy, often defeating the efforts of honest men, and still they knew not from whence defeat came. I remember with what earnestness I espoused the temperance work in my boyhood days. Eager to accomplish the most, I joined a secret order, and with others we attempted to push the battle, only to suffer defeat and disappointment. Finally I commenced investigating, when I found that on every committee looking to the enforcement of law, there would be an Odd-fellow or Mason, and the committee would be powerless to effect anything.

Temperance is marching on, and victory is sure to come. While secretism is holding the church and many honest temperance men in bondage, the tread of advance is plainly heard. The apathy of the church delayed the abolition of slavery; it had to come, though it cost the life-blood of thousands, and millions of money. So with prohibition; the advance line of temperance work, it is sure to possess the land. The battle may be long and hard, but victory is nigh." If the nominal church would but come to the rescue with her hundreds of thousands, how quickly would this "wilderness be glad for them," and this "desert rejoice and blossom as the rose." But, alas! the hoodwinked ones cannot see, neither can the cable-towed ones act. Our fathers did not slacken their efforts in the anti-slavery conflict because of similar obstacles; neither should we, but press on to victory. God is marshaling his army, and though the wicked, as in our late war, may have to be drafted in to fill the place the church failed to fill, yet the decree has gone forth—intemperance must die. Happy shall we be if found on the field in the grand charge for final victory.—Free Methodist.

Howell, Mich., bids fair to be the scene of similar outrages to those perpetrated at Sioux City. Saturday night unknown parties set fire to the store of the chairman of the county Prohibition party, and placed inside an explosive that blew the building to pieces. Previous to the conflagration a note had been sent to the obnoxious party telling him that he must cease his labors in behalf of temperance or be burned out of town. The missive was signed "Many Saloon Keepers." It would seem that it was about time to take hold of the matter before it goes too far. Some saloon keepers in other places have proved that they will not stop short of murder, in order to accomplish their purpose of silencing the sentiments of decent citizens. It may work once, but the public will eventually tire of allowing the rum sellers to exercise absolute control of the people's lives as well as of their bodies and minds, and unless the white-aproned gentlemen of Howell become much more conservative "Many Saloon Keepers" may, soon after some outrage like that of Saturday night, decorate as many lamp posts.—Chicago Daily News.

Fault is found by the members of the National Christian Association with the prominence of Finch and Stearns in the Prohibition party, on the ground of their lodge associations. We do not understand that Mr. Stearns is at all a member of the party. And there can be no fault found with Mr. Finch for being a member of it and of the I. O. G. T. as well, were it not for his proclamations claiming the prohibition successes as the work of the I. O. G. T., and his presenting to his subjects the Prohibition party and its work as a means of building up their secret order, which has so many opponents among Prohibitionists, and which, as an order, has taken no part in the Prohibition party movement.—Los Angeles Censor.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS OF CHURCHES AND CHRISTIANS.

OFFICIAL CALL.

Pursuant to instructions, and in humble reliance upon Almighty God for wisdom, and upon the Christian patriotism of our fellow citizens for co-operation and support, we have secured Hershey Music Hall, Chicago, Ill., and hereby announce that a Congress of Churches and Christians will assemble at 9:30 A. M., on the 30th day of March, 1887, and continue its sessions two days and evenings, to consider the nature and principles of the secret lodge system and its influence on the Christian religion and civil liberty, and to take what steps may seem proper, after prayer and due consideration.

The committee have learned with satisfaction of the action of several sympathizing bodies in appointing representatives, and are in receipt of the names of over fifty delegates already chosen.

Every Conference, Presbytery, Association, Council, Church, Educational Institution, or other body favoring this Congress, is respectfully urged to at once provide for a representation in its meeting. Let the names of delegates appointed, or who shall be chosen, and the names of all persons intending to be present be forwarded at once to Rev. L. N. Stratton, West Division post-office, Chicago, Ill., so that entertainment may be provided for those who desire, and a roll of members begun.

CONGRESS OF CHURCHES AND CHRISTIANS.

The Congress of Churches and Christians to be held March 30 and 31, in Hershey Music Hall, Inter-Ocean building, 85 Madison street, Chicago, is assuming proportions which are most encouraging to its friends.

The Congress will be made up of many different evangelical Christian bodies, represented by delegates, and volunteer attendance. Three College Presidents have been secured to speak: Pres. H. H. George of Geneva College, Pa., Pres. Fairchild of Berea College, Ky., and Pres. J. Blanchard of Wheaton College, Ill. Two denominational editors who have charge of their respective official church publications, Rev. Nathan Wardner of the Wesleyan Methodists of Syracuse, N. Y., and Rev. B. T. Roberts, Free Methodist, of Rochester, N. Y., and Chicago, will speak. Rev. Calvin F. Hawley, lecturer and evangelist of the State Association of Iowa, Rev. L. A. Johnson, D. D., representative of the Swedish Lutherans of the Northwest, Rev. John Grunert, D. D., of the German Lutherans from Urbana, Ind., Hon. Halleck Floyd of Dayton, Ohio, Rev. W. H. French, D. D., of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Bishop Milton Wright, D. D., of the Pacific slope, will speak. Prepared addresses are limited to thirty minutes, volunteer speeches to ten minutes. The discussion will cover the relation of the secret lodge system to the Christian church and civil liberty.

Prof. Nickle, chorister of the Chicago Avenue church, assisted by the church choir, and by others, will direct the music. Prof. George W. Clark, the "old Liberty Singer," will also be present and sing. Programmes giving full details can be had, after March 23d, at F. H. Revell's book store, No. 150 Madison street, and at the hall on the days of the meeting.

—The National Monitor, Brooklyn, New York, representing the interests of the colored race, in a good notice of the March 30th Congress says: "If we could afford it, we would be there. 'Let your light shine,' said Jesus; but how can a man let his light shine when he is so terribly oath-bound that he dare not, under certain circumstances, testify to the truth? Jesus did nothing in secret, and to all his disciples he says, Follow me." That Monitor is well named. May its wise word be heeded.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. Henry Martyn Scudder, pastor of Plymouth Congregational church in this city, preached his farewell sermon March 13. He is held in great esteem, and much regret is felt at his departure by the congregation. For some time Mr. Scudder's health has not been sufficiently robust to meet the requirements of his office, and his resignation was no surprise. When he announced his intention to discontinue his pastorate he intended to remain in Chicago, that he might be near his congregation, but he has changed his plans and will locate in Japan, where his son and daughter are now, and have for years been doing a good and practical work in the missionary field. There is in Japan an institution the object of which is the pursuit of Biblical knowledge. This institution is conducted by the Japanese government, and Mr. Scudder will take charge of it. With his wife he sails for Japan, June 21st, intending to spend there the remainder of his life. Dr. Scudder will go as an independent missionary, to render only such services as his age and strength will permit. His zeal for missionary service has never abated. Nothing but the climate of India has ever kept him from the field to which the first twenty years of his ministry were with such signal success devoted.

—The Independent heartily commends Dr. Scudder's plan of missionary work in these words: "Is there not room in the mission field for not a few other men and women who can go at their own charges and who will be associated with the missionaries abroad, who will work without salary, for the honor of it, as rich men go to Parliament without salary? Possibly some vexing missionary problems might be solved in this way. Paul was an independent missionary with no society behind him. Why should we not have hundreds of independent missionaries 'all over the world' doing each with his might what his hands find to do? God bless Dr. Scudder!"

—Yung Wing has been elected president of the Connecticut Congregational Club at Hartford. He is a native of China, has been a resident of this country for nearly twenty years, coming as a Commissioner of Education with Chinese students. He became a naturalized citizen, joined the Congregational church, abandoned his queue, and married a Hartford lady, who died about a year ago.

—The evangelical services conducted in Chicago by Mr. Moody at Bishop Cheeny's Reformed Episcopal church, Madison avenue, and at the Stock Yards during last week were so largely attended and with such gratifying results, that ministers and people alike are anxious that he should continue his labors in that district. Sabbath morning and afternoon he preached at Immanuel Baptist church for the Rev. Dr. Lorimer, who conducted evangelical services elsewhere. Monday evening he preached at Grace church, and the Rev. Frank Bristol, assisted by Mr. Sankey and others, will continue the services in his church every evening during the week. Mr. Bristol believes the present revival far exceeds that of the old Tabernacle days, for every church and minister was interested, and the work was all over the city.

—The West African Negro can be Christianized. Sierra Leone has a population of 37,000 natives, 32,000 of whom are professing Christians; New Zealand has a Maori population of probably 44,000, more than one-half of whom (25,000) are also professing Christians. The London Church Missionary Society reports for Sierra Leone 19 clergy, 14,000 professed Christian people, and 4,000 children in 44 schools. In the Niger district the Gospel is preached by nine native pastors, 4,600 natives have forsaken their idols, and 900 are communicants.

—The revival at the Ohio Wesleyan University has reached large proportions. Over one hundred persons have been converted, and a still greater number have been revived; and there are seventy-five young men in the institution preparing for the ministry.

—The late Kaspar Auch, a successful Christian business man of New Orleans, after bequeathing $28,000 to relatives, left the remainder of his estate of $300,000 to the ten Presbyterian churches of that city to care for their poor.

—The Lutheran Observer says: The Economites or Harmonists, near Pittsburgh, celebrated the eighty-second anniversary of the formation of that society February 15. The day was devoted to feasting, praising God, rejoicing and making merry. For nearly a century the Economites have been daily expecting the second coming of Christ, which they believe will take place before the death of all the members of the society, which numbered nearly 1,000 members at one time, but now there are not more than fifty survivors. Their property is valued at from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000.

—The claims of the Methodist Episcopal Mission for damages resulting from the Chungking (West China) riot, have been settled at a discount of eighteen per cent. The claim was for 28,000 taels ($35,000). Payments are to be made as follows:—5,000 taels the first month, 6,000 taels every three months thereafter until the full amount is paid. It is said that the English and French claims were settled at a greater discount, the latter being as much as fifty per cent. The prospect for the immediate return of missionaries is not encouraging, but the authorities agree that they may return and build as soon as it is safe to do so.

—The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, which entered Madagascar many years ago against the protests of the societies already occupying the ground, now has thirteen missionaries in the kingdom, including three native clergymen. It has a theological school and high school, which are said to be doing excellent work for the mission.

—A revival has occurred at San Salvador, West Africa, in connection with the station of the English Baptist Missionary Society, and one hundred converts are reported.

—Professor C. J. Kephart of Toledo, Iowa, writes the Telescope of February 9th some apprehensions of the effect of the attempt to liberalize by means of the "commission": "There is something in this world rather strange. Is it not a little strange that some who grow up under the customs and usages of our church should, almost as soon as a slight change is made in the expression of the attitude of the church toward secret societies, immediately knock at the doors of those societies for admittance? How shall we interpret such things? Shall we conclude that they all the time felt it to be their duty to belong to those orders, and only stayed out through respect to the church? Or shall we say that their anxiety to have a change in the law only grew out of their anxiety to enter those organizations and yet maintain a standing in the church, no matter what the character of the orders? Certainly it does seem that the present time, when our church is in a feverish excitement over this question, and when so much evil may be done by a very small minority, is of all times the wrong time for our people, and especially our ministers, to demand the extreme limit of their liberty in this respect."

—The W. C. T. U., through their superintendent of the Sabbath observance department, has issued an appeal to all pastors of churches to aid in securing a better observance of the Lord's Day. The appeal says:

"To you our organization of Christian women appeals for help; and having (in common with the World's Sabbath Observance Prayer Union, whose branches are in every land,) set apart the first week of April for special Sabbath work and prayer, we ask that on the first Sabbath of April next, you will preach a sermon on Sabbath Observance, also that the prayer meetings of that week have for their subject, the sanctification of the Lord's Day among professed Christians, and the proper recognition of the day by Government. Granting our request, many thousands of sermons were last year preached on Sabbath Observance, on the day named, and our desire is, that the practice become universal.

"In order that the children may be taught on this subject, we ask also that on the same Sabbath or the one previous, the Sabbath-school repeat the fourth commandment and have a brief address upon this subject. A concert exercise on this theme has been prepared and can be obtained through the local W. C. T. U., or by addressing Mrs. J. C. Bateham, Painesville, Ohio. Price, 15 cents per hundred. Sample free."

LITERATURE.

The April number of Demorest's Monthly is excellent and interesting. Enterprise is shown on every page of this family magazine. Not only are the best authors secured but selections are made so as to make up a magazine giving information upon every point relative to the household. As a pronounced prohibition organ it is becoming an honorable authority, and its gleanings of valuable information on various topics are hardly surpassed in this country.

In the March Old Testament Student Prof. Hermann V. Hilprecht, of the Univ. of Pa., gives his readers an insight into the private life of Prof. Franz Delitzsch of Leipzig. Anything about this venerable Leipzig professor, under whom so many American students have studied, is of great interest to theological circles. Prof. Hilprecht in his translation of Delitzsch's autobiography from the Norwegian gives a short history of Delitzsch's youthful days, his rationalistic tendencies when a student, his conversion, his connection with the missionary Becker and his later efforts for the conversion of the Jews.

Vick's Magazine for March reminds us that winter is past and the work of the garden, lawn, and flower bed will soon need attention. The number is timely as these titles show: "Trees for Small Places," "Early Work in the Garden," "Arrangement of Flower Beds," "The Bedding System: Sweet Corn," "A Farmer's Perennial Garden," "Planting Asparagus."

The Converted Catholic again, as in February, devotes much space to the McGlynn controversy with the papal hierarchy and every feature of the case which bears upon the work of the Reformed Catholics. "Father" O'Connor, who leads this reformed work, finds many Catholics coming over to him as the scales of credulity and blinding devotion to the pope fall off because of Father McGlynn's unapostolic knocks.

The Lincoln History by Messrs. Nicolay and Hay reaches a famous period of Lincoln's career with the April number—the campaign against Trumbull, and the earlier Douglas debates. Border ruffianism in Kansas, and the Topeka and Leocompton Constitutions are also treated of.

LODGE NOTES.

During the year 1886 over 54,000 Odd-fellows were relieved to whom was paid over $1,400,000. The expenses for burial purposes exceeded $360,000 and there were over 5,800 widowed families cared for at a cost of $150,000.

The treasurer of the Odd-fellow Grand Lodge of Texas, a man 70 years old, is $23,000 short in his accounts.

Mrs. Mary E. Haggart, a prominent temperance worker, we believe, lately joined Enterprise Lodge No. 1 of the United Order of Honor, and made an initiation speech.

Father John Peter Beck, General of the secret society of the Jesuits, died in Rome Mar. 4, in the 93d year of his age. He was admitted into the society in 1819 and on the conversion of Duke Ferdinand of Anhalt to Catholicism was made his confessor. His marked abilities soon brought him into prominence in Austria and to him is chiefly due the reinstatement of the Jesuits in that country. He was elected as general of the order to succeed Father Roothan in 1853.

The strike of coopers in New York ended Mar. 14. The men went to work after signing an agreement which in effect is a serious blow to district assembly 49, and practically kills the Coopers' Union, which was affiliated with the Knights of Labor. The men agree: "To sever our connection with the Knights of Labor or any other labor organization with which we may be connected, and hereafter only work in the interest of our employers, our wives and families." A noble resolution.

A letter from E. H. Abbott, late supreme secretary of the Royal Templars, dated on a Grand Trunk train bound for Canada, says he is a defaulter, and that after debating Canada and suicide as remedies he chose the former. He left a wife and two children. The deficit will not exceed $10,000, for which the American Safety company, of New York, is responsible on a guaranty. Abbott had handled $25,000 a day, and the deficit is in unpaid death dues.

BUSINESS.

GENERAL J. W. PHELPS.

The Life and Public Services of an able general, a voluminous and learned writer on questions of public interest and reform, and an American and patriot who saw in the secret lodge system one of the greatest dangers to our Republic. This work is by a life long and intimate friend, a gentleman whose literary tastes and ability and admiration of the sterling character and noble principles of General Phelps are a most excellent recommendation for this work.

In New Orleans General Butler replied to those who remonstrated against the reckless exposure of his person to secret assassins, "Never fear; they will let me alone; for they know well enough who would succeed me." General Phelps was then second in command.

The N. C. A. will fill orders for this pamphlet by Mr. C. H. C. Howard of the Astor Library, New York. The number published will not be large. Advance orders will be filled at one half price, viz., 25 cents. The retail price of the book is 50 cents, therefore order early and secure the reduction. Advance price, postpaid, 25 cents.

A few fine photographs of Pres. J. Blanchard, editor of the Cynosure, the latest and best taken, are for sale at this office. Price 25 cents each.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform.

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

The Christian's Secret

OR

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devoted to its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful; that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have never before found a dry theme so full of life."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incidents. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

A book that is sensational, now excited rhetoric or sordid fables of speech, but from the facts that show like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown of their mark, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the parrot literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the profligate is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

HOME AND HEALTH.

A CHAPTER ON EGGS.

Poached Eggs as Done in Spain, Mexico and the East Generally.—Use a thick, earthen pan, never an iron one, and let it heat slowly. Mince a small onion very fine or use parsley and sweet herbs instead, or a mixture of all. Melt in the earthen pan a large spoonful of butter, and add a large teaspoonful of salt, a saltspoon of pepper and the onion, etc. Drop in the eggs one by one, do not stir but let them brown a little, then turn without breaking the yolk and brown on the other side. In Spain and elsewhere they are served on the same dish and as hot as possible, and then the flavor is most perfect. This may be varied by breaking the eggs and stirring, as in scrambled eggs, about three minutes, or just long enough to make them firm yet creamy. For a plainer form of scrambled eggs, melt the butter and salt, omitting herbs and onion, beat the eggs, five or six in number, add a teaspoonful of milk and stir steadily till the mixture thickens, serving on slices of soft toast. This also may be varied by adding a spoonful or two of finely chopped ham or tongue.

Omelet (Plain).—A very thick iron pan must be used, the smoothness being essential. Break five eggs in a bowl and give them twelve strokes with spoon or fork; add a spoon and a half of salt and one of pepper. Melt a piece of butter as large as an egg in the pan and as soon as it boils pour in the eggs. Hold the pan handle in the left hand and carefully and lightly draw up the eggs from the bottom as it sets a little, shaking the pan forward and backward to keep the egg from sticking. In about three minutes from the beginning fold one side over on another; let it stand a minute, then slip or lift with pancake turner to a hot dish and serve instantly. It will be light and creamy inside, firm and golden brown outside. From this foundation unending varieties may be made; herbs, or minced onion added; green peas; oysters, fish or ham, and—one of the most delicious forms—Gruyere cheese, grated and sprinkled over before folding.

Cheese Fond.—Brillat-Savarin was the first to formulate this dish, which makes a delicious and a savory course. Five eggs; butter the size of an egg; one cup of grated Gruyere cheese; a saltspoonful of salt, and a mere sprinkle of cayenne. Beat the eggs well, add cheese and seasoning; melt the butter and add the mixture, stirring steadily until it is quite thick and creamy. Serve on a very hot dish. The same preparation can be treated as an omelet and folded.

Baked Eggs, with Gravy.—Four or five eggs, a cupful of chicken or any good gravy, half a teaspoonful of salt and a sprinkle of pepper, five rounds of toast, dipped in salted hot water, and butter lightly. Arrange the toast in a deep plate or on a platter; break each egg into a cup and slip on the toast so that it does not break; pour the gravy over them and bake in a hot oven till the eggs are set, about five minutes. Cream may be used instead of gravy, or simple white sauce.

TO CURE A BAD BREATH.

A bad breath may be cured as follows, no matter what the cause: Three hours after breakfast a teaspoonful of the following mixture: Chlorate of potash, two drams; sweetened water, four ounces; wash the mouth occasionally with the mixture and the breath will be as sweet as an infant's.

A HEALTHY SKIN.

Very cold or warm baths when used to excess diminish the elasticity of the skin and its power of resistance to external irritants. Dr. Auspitz, of Vienna, says a healthy skin is not necessarily beautiful and water is serviceable to it in only moderate amounts and in moderate temperatures. The same authority says that a sponge soaked in oil should be applied to the scalp and roots of the hair at night.—Atlanta Constitution.

CURE FOR BILIOUSNESS.

For biliousness the editor of the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal says a plain diet of bread, milk, oatmeal, vegetables and fruit, with lean meat and fresh fish, is best. Exercise in the open air. The victim of an acute attack will be righted by (1) abstinence; (2) porridge and milk; (3) toast, a little meat and fish and ripe fruit, thus coming to solid food gradually.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,
AND
ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more percent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield, "E'en his fallings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named it differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEEB ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weeb, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Occults design jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his affidavit to it.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic excitement' by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of 'secret societies.'"

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago National Christian Association.) Single copy, 5 cents.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by

REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,

(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such amuse and pure fountains they can but afford a refreshing and helpful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

Labor Troubles,

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Hope—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

LABORER'S HOPE—MIND AND MUSCLE—CO-LABORERS.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it' 'Aye, there's the rub.' Our author contributes his share in the direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and heeded around by over much respectability and courted by the popular press."

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

FARM NOTES.

EARLY WORK IN THE GARDEN.

The extreme variability of the weather during the past three months apparently warrants the inference that there will be opportunity to do some early spring work, even if settled weather does not arrive sooner than usual. It is essential to get in some crops early, and the onion is one of the most important. No time should be lost at the first opportunity presented, to make full preparations and sow the seed. Once in, even if frost follows, it is safe. If the soil has been manured with well rotted stable manure and plowed in the fall, it can the more surely be prepared early in spring by several draggings. If guano, or other commercial fertilizer, is to be used it should be sowed broadcast and dragged in. In connection with a good manuring of stable manure plowed in it would also be advisable to give a dressing of nitrate of soda, about three or four hundred pounds to the acre. This dressing can be given as soon as the plants begin to appear above ground, and immediately before using the cultivator the first time, and it will then be worked into the soil exactly when the plants are ready to appropriate it, and thus there will be the least loss. The effect of this top dressing will be to push the plants along rapidly early in the season, thus enabling them to commence forming bulbs before the hottest weather comes on, which is a matter of great importance in order to secure a good crop. The great value of nitrate of soda, a material our cultivators are only beginning to learn the value of, is to hasten the growth of plants early in the season, and for this purpose it has no equal.

Market growers of peas cannot be too active in getting in the earliest varieties of this popular vegetable; a few days difference in time will often make considerable difference in the profits of this crop. In every family garden a good supply of the early peas should be put in at the first opportunity. There is nothing more welcome than green peas when they first come to the table, and at that time there is a general scarcity of culinary vegetables.—Vick's Magazine for March.

ROADSIDE FRUIT TREES.

The Germantown (Pa.) Telegraph, very high authority in agriculture and horticulture, ventures the opinion that dust on fruit trees, instead of being the disadvantage it is generally supposed, is of decided benefit. It reasons from facts. Fruit trees growing along dusty roads are observed to bear good crops of fruit, when others planted where they are free from this nuisance fail of a crop. "Not only is the fruit abundant," says the Telegraph, "but the leaves are generally remarkably healthy; and we do not remember of an instance of a blighted or seriously diseased tree when they have been covered with roadside dust." The fact, which has been observed before, is curious and perhaps instructive. It is difficult to account for it, except by assuming that the coating of dust protects the leaves and the tree from the ravages of the insects which prefer to regale themselves on clean foliage, and have a well-bred aversion to gritty food—and protects the tree also from disease. Many of the oldest physicians in St. Louis believe that the exceptional freedom of St. Louis from contagious and epidemic diseases, the product of bacteria, is due to the limestone dust which we so loudly complain of. If this dust is prophylactic against human disorders, may it not render fruit trees a similar service? At any rate, it is the part of wisdom to conform to facts, even when we do not understand them—and in this case the facts seem to indicate roadsides as the best location for fruit trees, particularly pears and cherries.—St. Louis Republican.

TO CURE DAMP CELLAR WALLS.

The following, it is said, will accomplish an admirable result: Boil two ounces of grease with two quarts of tar for nearly twenty minutes in an iron vessel, and having ready pounded glass, one pound, slaked lime two pounds, well dried in an iron pot, and sifted through a flour sieve. Add some of the lime to the tar and glass, to form a thin paste only sufficient to cover a square foot at a time, about an eighth of an inch thick.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monumental quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition is fully attested by J. O. Boeshart, Past Master Unity, No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full-page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge—chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of the United States, signed by the grand lodge, and Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 25 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished with engravings showing the lodge-room, drawn by the Grand Lodge of New York. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, civil and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard, at the Monrovia Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the high-ranking Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Odd-fellowship Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templarism Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grand Army of the Republic," and "The Order of the United Sons of the Grand Army of the Republic." All bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $9.00.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a second-class sermon. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their nature, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By Pres. J. O. Boeshart, of the University of Michigan. Contains the names of prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. Full and complete ritual, including the signs, grips, and the emblem of the organization. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret society known by the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on us Infringers? By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sufficiency of the oath and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship identical. Explains the true source and meaning of the carpet and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 430 pp. 75 cents.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be followings by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian Church in particular. Paper covers: price 30 cents each; per dozen, $3.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity. A tract, intended for general government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a second Master of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Mah-Hab-Bone; or, masonry the Iland Book. Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 569 pp. $1.00.

National Christian Association. 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that Freemasonry is binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from scriptures, make them convincing. The publisher or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid, 40 cents.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan, "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan," "Valancy's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan," "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees. 304 pages. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

In the Collis, or the Coming Confront. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United States minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and political life is being controlled by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the general public will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder J. B. Bernier. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft. The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and enlarged. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen, $7.50.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By E. P. Payne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Burlington, N. H. This is a complete and accurate ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidates, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies; The Life of Julian, the Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Filmore and the Freemasons; The Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 60 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies of the United States. By Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives, February 18, 1839, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington for his services in the Revolution. He—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Master, Sub-Master, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Character of Freemasonry. With Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 438 pages, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

It is expected that a call for $10,000,000 3 per cent bonds will be made in a few days to mature May 1. The amount of these bonds now subject to call is $29,889,850. According to present indications, the entire 3 per cent loan will be extinguished during the present fiscal year, ending June 30 next. The surplus as stated at the Treasury is now $21,000,000.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue states that the total quantity of artificial butter manufactured and removed from consumption or sale during the months of November, December and January was 10,029,961 pounds.

COUNTRY.

The Southern Cotton Seed Oil Company, recently organized in New Jersey, has concluded contracts for a quarter of a million dollars' worth of machinery, for use in eight cotton-seed oil mills of a capacity of 150 tons per day each.

Near Stillville, Ont., Friday morning a Canadian Pacific express train dashed into the rear of a freight train. Fire broke out, and ten freight cars with their contents were destroyed. The express engine and tender were wrecked, and the first car of the express train was partly burned. No lives were lost.

The establishment of Lawton Bros., New York, dealers in phosphates, has been seized under attachments issued on creditors' claims amounting to $245,000. It is alleged that W. E. Lawton, the surviving member of the firm, has disappeared and that his liabilities are $1,000,000.

The keepers of a Cincinnati eating-house were tried Friday for refusing to permit a colored attorney to dine in their place. The jury disagreed.

A dispatch from Summerville says that an earthquake shock at 6 o'clock Friday evening was the worst that has occurred in two months. It caused some excitement because it was thought to be severe enough to do the town some damage.

A third gas well was struck at Marion, Ind., Thursday, which eclipses all previous efforts in the United States. Its roaring can be heard two miles, and resembles distant thunder. In its immediate vicinity the roar is deafening, resembling a train of cars at full speed.

In the Wisconsin House of Representatives on Wednesday the bill prohibiting the leasing of convict labor was killed by a vote of 64 to 23. A Senate joint resolution for an amendment to the constitution on the same subject met a similar fate.

The resolution for the submission to the people of a prohibitory amendment, weighted down by an amendment that persons or property injured by prohibition, should it become a law, be compensated by the State, failed in the Illinois House Wednesday, the vote standing: for, 63; against 78.

In the Illinois Senate Senator Curtiss's measure making it lawful for any person without regard to sex or color who possesses the necessary legal qualifications to vote at district school elections was defeated by a vote of 25 to 17.

The directors of the Chicago Board of Trade have appointed a committee to visit Springfield for the purpose of preventing the passage of the Foreman bill, which prohibits all trading in futures without being in possession of the goods traded in.

In the prohibition county of Rock Castle, Ky., Wednesday night, a band of Ku Klux took from her house Elizabeth Fish, aged 70, and began whipping her. Suddenly shots were fired and three of the Ku Klux fell dead. The woman persisted in selling liquor, notwithstanding that she had been warned several times to stop the traffic, resulting in the fatal visit of the vigilantes.

It is believed that the deaths from the Forest Hills railway accident near Boston will reach thirty. The condition of a number of the wounded is critical, and the recovery of many of the victims is doubtful.

John E. Steites was found guilty at San Francisco Wednesday of placing a dynamite bomb on street railway tracks.

The engine and tender of a passenger train fell through a trestle near Marietta,

Ohio, Wednesday morning, the engineer and fireman being killed and two other employees badly scalded. Michael Early, a passenger, had his left leg crushed.

A passenger train was wrecked Wednesday afternoon near Parks Station, N. Y. The smoker turned upside down, and caught fire from the stove, the clothing of some of the passengers being burned. Fifteen persons were more or less injured, but none is reported fatally hurt.

The New Richmond Hotel, at Buffalo, and adjoining buildings were burned early Friday morning. It is believed that at least thirty persons lost their lives in the hotel. Eight bodies were soon found and five of the wounded are dying, while a number of others were burned or otherwise injured. The full extent of the catastrophe can not be ascertained until the ruins could sufficiently to permit a search of the debris to be made. The financial losses foot up $400,000.

The Governor and Council of Massachusetts have ordered that Charles F. Freeman, of Sandwich, who was sent to the Danvers Insane Asylum in 1883, for killing his little daughter, be discharged. On the morning of May 1, 1879, Freeman deliberately murdered his little daughter, in obedience of what he says was a command from heaven.

The Governor of Tennessee on Tuesday signed the bill submitting to the people a prohibition amendment to the constitution. The election will be held next September.

FOREIGN.

The conferring of the Order of the Black Eagle upon Count Robilant, the Italian statesman, on the Emperor William's birthday will be a national event. It is regarded on all sides as a most important occurrence. The renewal of the union of Austria, Italy, and Germany again makes a group that is willing and able to counteract all disturbances of the peace. It is regarded as a guarantee of a complete defensive alliance.

M. de Lesseps on his return to Paris visited President Grevy and Count von Munster, the German Ambassador. The Radical press make a bitter attack on M. de Lesseps for calling France the natural friend of Germany, and advises him to stay at home in the future and confine himself to canal matters.

Mgr. Galimberti, formerly editor of the Moniteur in Rome, and one of the real authors of the sensational Jacobini letters, represents the Pope at the fetes in honor of the Kaiser's birthday. He takes an autograph letter of congratulation from the Pope. At the Vatican the result of the late intervention in German affairs is regarded as fairly satisfactory, but many Cardinals still regard the Jacobini letters a fatal mistake. They fear the Vatican is trusting Bismarck far too much.

The plot to assassinate the Czar, which was to have been carried out Sunday, the 13th, was arranged by members of the Terrorist section of the Nihilists, and no connection with it has been traced to the faction which is conducting the constitutional agitation, although this faction has assumed the character of a secret society with wide spread ramifications. Several hundred persons affiliated with the constitutional agitation have however been recently arrested. The police have become alarmed at St. Petersburg. They have been informed that numerous widespread bands of Nihilists are ready for immediate action.

Five thousand persons paid large prices Wednesday at San Rafael, Mexico, to witness a bull fight. The bulls refused to fight, and the spectators burst into the ring and attacked the animals and the matadors. Troops, in suppressing the riot, used sabers and bayonets and a large number of people were more or less wounded.
